The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if the motion to adjourn is withdrawn the business before the House will be resumed.

Mr. THAYER. I understood the Chair to decide that the vote of the House dispensing with the order for a recess would adjourn the House at half past four.

The SPEAKER. The order of the House only dispensed with the recess for this evening, leaving it to the House to say when it shall adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask the Chair to state more distinctly what will be the condition of this business if the House now adjourn. Do I understand that it will come up as unfinished business on Monday?

The SPEAKER. It will not. Monday is assigned for the consideration of the miscellaneous appropriation bills as a special order. The whole of the morning session on Tuesday is assigned to the business of the Committee on Military Affairs; and the whole of the evening session to the Pacific railroad. It may come up on Wednesday, unless some report of a committee of conference or some other question of higher privilege should arise.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. But unless some question of that sort should arise it will come up naturally as the first business in order on Wednesday morning?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Then I suppose the House may as well adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at four o'clock and thirty minutes) the House adjourned till Monday next at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, June 20, 1864.

Prayer by Rev. B. H. NADAL, of Washington; District of Columbia.

On motion of Mr. GRIMES; and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of Saturday last was dispensed with.

DISTRICT BUSINESS.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that to-morrow at half past four o'clock the Senate take a recess till seven o'clock, and meet again at that hour in order to transact business relating to the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a further report of the Secretary of State in answer to the resolution of the Senate of May 25 relative to Mexican affairs; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a dispatch of June 10 to the Secretary of State from the acting consul of the United States at Havana, in further answer to the resolution of the Senate of May 23 relative to the delivery to the Spanish Government of a person charged with a crime against that Government; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the 10th of March, information in relation to the officers of the fourth and fifth Indian regiments; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

GEORGE F. NESBITT.

Mr. COLLAMER. I should like to get a little order to attend to some business of the Post Office Committee. I believe the District Committee have had two different days for their business. It is said "every dog should have his day," and so there will be a good many dog days. [Laughter.] I should like this morning to have attention to a couple of private bills from the Post Office Committee, which have been lying here for some time. I think they will not take long. I move first to postpone all the prior orders and take up the bill (S. No. 305) for the relief of George F. Nesbitt.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to empower George F. Nesbitt to put an end to his contract with the United States, entered into with the Postmaster General on the 27th of March, 1862, for furnishing the Post Office Department with stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers, on giving to the Postmaster General sixty days' notice in writing.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARMACK AND RAMSEY.

Mr. COLLAMER. I move now to take up the joint resolution (H. R. No. 11) in relation to the claim of Carmack & Ramsey.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution; the question being on the amendment reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the First Comptroller of the Treasury, in auditing and adjusting the claim of Carmack & Ramsey, submitted to him by and under the sixth section of the act of Congress, approved August 18, 1856, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1857," shall allow only for the expenditures actually made and incurred by said Carmack & Ramsey after the making of their contract with the Postmaster General, and for the purpose of executing the same, and before the close of the next session of Congress after the making said contract, and to the actual loss to said Carmack & Ramsey on said expenditures.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. As this is a very large claim, a very important one, and a very old one, that I examined some time ago as a member of Congress, I should like to understand exactly what is proposed here.

Mr. COLLAMER. The amendment is merely to enable a settlement to be made.

Mr. SHERMAN. The joint resolution, as I understand it, does not simply authorize the Comptroller to examine and adjust the claim according to the principles of equity, but it directs him to allow the amount that was expended by Carmack & Ramsey, and assumes the legality and validity of the contract which was disputed by officers of the Government.

Mr. COLLAMER. The act of 1856, by which this claim was referred to the First Comptroller, is not repealed. He is going on under it, and the only effect of this amendment is to limit him. We do not direct him anything about it; we only say that he shall not allow anything except as we prescribe.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be read again, that I may see whether I got the words correctly. It seems to me that it assumes the legality of the contract.

The Secretary read the joint resolution as amended.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is very clear, I think, that the criticism which I took is just: the words distinctly are that the Comptroller shall allow the amount paid on the contract. That assumes that the contract was legal, that the Postmaster General had a right to make it, that Carmack & Ramsey expended money under it, and it directs that that money shall be allowed. It seems to me it covers the whole ground.

Mr. COLLAMER. That was all in the act of 1856 submitted to the First Comptroller of the Treasury, and this provision is that the Comptroller in adjusting the claim submitted to him by that act "shall allow only for the expenditures actually made and incurred by said Carmack & Ramsey after the making of their contract with the Postmaster General." It does not direct him to allow it, but says he shall be confined to that anyway. It is to limit him so that there shall be no extravagant allowance.

Mr. SHERMAN. I prefer that the resolution should lie over that I may look into it, because the claim is a very large one, and I had occasion when a member of the House of Representatives to examine it. I have no objection to having the report of the Comptroller stating the account precisely as Mr. Whitlesey would have stated it under the old law; and I think that the action of the Postmaster General or whoever caused the suspension of that account was probably without cause. I think the Comptroller ought to proceed under the existing law to state the account subject to the action of Congress. But it does seem to me that this resolution assumes all the disputed propositions and directs the Comptroller to allow so and so. It leaves no discretion to the Comptroller. The question as to the validity of this contract will not be open to him, but he will be required to go on and assume the contract to be valid and then simply to assess the amount paid by Carmack & Ramsey. I should like to have it lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the honorable member from Ohio is about to defeat his very object. I do not mean to vote on this question, having been professionally concerned as counsel for these parties some years ago. The amount of the claim, however, is very much exaggerated. It was supposed at one time to be a million and a half or two million dollars, and perhaps the agent who was conducting it on the part of the claimants at that time satisfied his own mind that it would properly amount to something like that sum; but the resolution upon the table limits whatever the individuals may be found entitled to to expenses actually incurred; it gives them no claim for damages, and the only question is whether what they actually expended in attempting to carry out a contract which is admitted to have been made ought not, under the circumstances, to be refunded. If the honorable member proposes to leave it to the Comptroller, under the original law, he may have some eighty or ninety thousand dollars to pay instead of some twenty or thirty thousand dollars.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to postpone the joint resolution until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MORGAN presented a petition of citizens of New York, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to secure to persons in the military or naval service of the United States homesteads on confiscated or forfeited estates in insurrectionary districts; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a memorial of Eliot C. Cowden and other merchants of New York, praying for an increase of the salaries of the deputy collectors of customs at the port of New York; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FOOT presented ten petitions of citizens of Vermont, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to secure to persons in the military or naval service of the United States homesteads on confiscated or forfeited estates in insurrectionary districts; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SUMNER presented fourteen petitions of men and women of the United States, praying for the abolition of slavery, and such an amendment of the Constitution as will forever prohibit its existence in any portion of the Union; which were referred to the select committee on slavery and freedmen.

He also presented a petition of citizens of West Newbury, Massachusetts, praying for the repeal of all laws exempting United States stocks from taxation; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 308) repealing so much of an act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1864, and for other purposes, approved March 14, 1864, as appropriates $25,000 for erecting a naval hospital at Kittery, Maine, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 465) for the relief of Deborah Jones, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 380) for the relief of George W. Murray, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mary C. Hamilton, widow of Captain Fowler Hamilton, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Reuben Clough, praying to be allowed arrears of pension, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 316) for the relief of Reuben Clough. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. POMEROY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of J. W. Barnack, praying compensation for swearing in volunteers, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 431) for the relief of Solomon Wadsworth, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 442) to authorize the President of the United States to negotiate with certain Indians of Middle Oregon for a relinquishment of certain rights secured to them by treaty, reported it with an amendment; and he presented a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, relative to a proposed treaty with certain Indians of Middle Oregon; which was ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill of the Senate (No. 54) to incorporate the Metropolitan Railroad Company in the District of Columbia, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (No. 470) to authorize assimilated rank to be given to the warrant officers of the United States Navy, and for other purposes;

A bill (No. 533) to provide for ascertaining and adjusting claims against the Government for injury or destruction of property by the Army of the United States or by military authority during the present rebellion;

A joint resolution (No. 91) in relation to the treaty of 1817; and

A joint resolution (No. 95) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to amend the contract with John Ericsson for the construction of two impregnable floating batteries, the Dictator and the Puritan.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 247) granting lands to the State of Wisconsin to build a military road to Lake Superior; and

A bill (S. No. 145) to increase the pay of soldiers in the United States Army, and for other purposes.

DICTIONARY OF CONGRESS.

Mr. POWELL, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution, submitted on the 15th of March, to print the Dictionary of the United States Congress, prepared by the late Librarian of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution by unanimous consent, and it was agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate fifteen hundred and fifty copies of the Dictionary of the United States Congress prepared by the late Librarian of the House and already ordered by that body; and the Secretary is hereby directed to pay to the compiler the same copyright allowed by the House of Representatives.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 317) providing for bail in certain cases of military arrests; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 318) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell certain property of the United States when no longer required for the public service; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. HAY, his Secretary, announced that on the 18th instant he had approved the following act and joint resolutions:

An act (S. No. 291) to amend an act entitled "An act to enable the people of Colorado to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States;"

A joint resolution (S. No. 59) to provide for the revision of the laws of the District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (S. No. 64) explanatory of an act entitled "An act extending the time for the completion of the Marquette and Ontonagon railroad of the State of Michigan."

JUAN MIRANDA.

Mr. CARLILE. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up the motion submitted by the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. Foot] for a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill (S. No. 238) to settle certain private land claims in the State of California was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CONNESS. The only question I think is upon a notice given of a motion to reconsider. I do not understand the Senator as wishing to take up the bill, but to have the Senate vote whether or not they will reconsider the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CARLILE. I understand that a motion was made by the Senator from Vermont to reconsider that vote. If am in error he will correct me.

Mr. FOOT. The motion was made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is recorded as having been made.

Mr. CARLILE. I learn that by the rules of the Senate, unless the vote indefinitely postponing the bill be reconsidered at this session, the bill will fall at the end of the session. Now, it is not my purpose, if it is not desired by the Senator from California, to enter into any argument on the merits of the bill this morning. I merely wish to put it where it was before the question was taken on the indefinite postponement; and then, when it is convenient, at this session, or, if that does not suit the pleasure of the Senate, at the next session, I will bring it up and explain it. I will consult the convenience of the Senator from California and of the Senate on that point. All I want is to have the benefit of this motion to reconsider, which will fall, as I understand, with the adjournment of this session of Congress if it be not agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. The motive that I had in making the motion for the indefinite postponement of the bill I stated to the Senate at the time. To us it is a very important question. The very pendency of a bill of this kind here throws a cloud over the title to some very valuable property in which a great many citizens of my State are interested. My object in making the motion to indefinitely postpone the bill was to throw off that cloud, to defeat the bill in that way that we might have an end of it. I was not satisfied to have the vote taken on the passage of such a bill until the facts and circumstances connected with the case were more fully presented than they have been by myself to the Senate, but I have no desire to trespass on the attention of the Senate at this time nor again during the session upon this subject. I hope the motion to reconsider the indefinite postponement will not be carried, and I wish the deliberate vote of the Senate to remain so that the matter may be considered as finally disposed of. I need not add that the State which I in part represent here has instructed its Senators and Representatives how to act on this measure. Those solemn resolutions of the sovereign State have been read from the Senate desk. I ask Senators not to reconsider their vote and put this question upon us again.

Mr. CARLILE. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate, if I can have this vote reconsidered, by a discussion of the bill upon its merits, and I therefore made the proposition to the Senator from California to allow the vote to be reconsidered and I would consult his convenience as to the time when the bill should be taken up again; but if this is to be made a test vote, I shall feel it my duty to present to the Senate the merits of the proposition, as I understand them.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator will do it now so that we may dispose of the question.

Mr. CARLILE. I trust the Senate will take the matter up.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia to take up for consideration the motion to reconsider the vote on the bill referred to by him.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I should like to have this measure reconsidered, not for present consideration, but for full consideration at a convenient time. I did not to any considerable extent participate in the debate on this bill; I did not think it necessary for the advice of the Senate; but before this matter is finally disposed of, I desire as in part representing California and as entirely differing from my colleague, to discuss this matter with all the understanding I have on the subject. I think my acquaintance with the subject is more intimate than that of my colleague. I only wish the discussion to be full and complete on the merits of the bill. Whatever then may be the judgment of the Senate, I of course shall submit to. I trust the vote will be reconsidered, so that the bill may at some proper and convenient time be fully canvassed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to take up the motion to reconsider.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Carlile, Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Willey—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Conness, Dixon, Doolittle, Howard, Howe, Pomeroy, Sprague, Sumner, Wade, and Wilson—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Ramsey, Wilkinson, and Wright—10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate, and the question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which it was indefinitely postponed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion to postpone the bill indefinitely.

Mr. CARLILE. I now move, if I have the right to do so, that the further consideration of the subject be postponed until the second Tuesday in December next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Virginia that a motion to postpone indefinitely takes precedence of a motion to postpone to a day certain, so that the motion to postpone indefinitely must first be put.

Mr. CARLILE. Then I trust the Senate will give me an opportunity to make the motion I have indicated, by voting down the motion to postpone indefinitely.

Mr. CONNESS. I would make any concession personally to the honorable Senator from Virginia, but he will excuse me upon this question, which I regard as of so much consequence. I hope that the Senate will determine the matter now by a vote, so that we shall not have the question kept open, to the detriment of a large portion of the people of California. If the Senator desires to make the bill the special order for any day before the end of this session, I have no objection; but I do not wish to have it postponed until the next session, with all its annoyances, and with its injury to the people of my State.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I voted the other day for the indefinite postponement of this bill, and after the vote was given, in conversation with some gentlemen who had looked into the question, I thought perhaps I had made a mistake. My attention was called to it, and I began to look into the case. In fact a party who is interested, who claims title under Miranda, called upon me and stated orally the ground on which he stood. On looking at the papers and from his statement I found the facts to be substantially these: this man who claims under Miranda made a mistake himself; that is to say he mistook his own rights; the Ortega papers were brought out and exhibited in such form that he was led to believe that Ortega held the title and that his own title was good for nothing. At all events he abandoned his own title by reason of the mistake which he made himself. Then he claims that there was a mistake made by the Supreme Court of the United States, in consequence of which he suffered the time to expire within which he could get the benefit of the law so as to prove up his title. If it was simply a question between us and a man claiming so much of the unoccupied public domain, I could listen to this plea and to the force of it; but I understand that on this very grant there has now grown up a town of three thousand or four thousand inhabitants, persons who settled on this very land. To my mind when a man has, whether through his own mistake or through a mistake of the Supreme Court, or the act of God, or in any other way technically lost his right to dispossess three or four thousand people from the public domain, I am not willing to give him a right to come in and show a perfect title which is to eject the population of a whole city from the land on which they live, without at least imposing terms upon him. On the whole I shall vote with the Senator from Virginia, to postpone this matter until the next session, for we cannot at this session go into a discussion of it and ascertain what are the real rights of the case. If I could be prevailed upon to allow this man to intervene, I should impose in the law itself such terms as would secure the rights of the inhabitants.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish for the satisfaction of the Senator to call his attention at this point of time to a fact left out in the oral statement made to him. The withdrawal of this case from the land board by this party was not made on the exhibition of what appeared to be a superior title in the Ortega claimants, but it was made on a written compact, a copy of which I have here verified, between the Ortega men and the Miranda men. This party's name is signed to the document, in which he agreed that he would withdraw his papers and use his best endeavors to confirm the Ortega claim, and then divide the proceeds between them upon terms arranged and understood; and he did not withdraw it innocently; he is not out of court by anything but his own act in agreeing to confirm a title which has since been rejected, and therefore I say he has neither law nor equity. Still, if it is the pleasure of the Senate, (for I do not desire to impose on the Senate,) I will withdraw the motion to postpone indefinitely, as requested by the honorable Senator from Virginia, although I cannot withdraw it without believing that it is an injury to the people of my State. I withdraw my motion so that the Senator from Virginia may present his.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to postpone indefinitely can only be withdrawn by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection; the motion is withdrawn.

Mr. CARLILE. Now I feel bound in good faith to the Senate to make the motion which I suggested a short time ago, to postpone the further consideration of this bill until the second Tuesday in December next.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announcing that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (No. 446) to regulate prize proceedings and the distribution of prize money, and for other purposes;

A bill (No. 532) to establish certain post roads;

A bill (No. 534) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to provide for the education of naval constructors and steam engineers, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (No. 99) reserving mineral lands from the operation of all acts passed at the present session granting lands or extending the time of former grants.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (No. 533) to provide for ascertaining and adjusting claims against the Government for injury or destruction of property by the Army of the United States, or by military authority, during the present rebellion—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A joint resolution (No. 91) in relation to the treaty of 1817—to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A bill to authorize assimilated rank to be given to the warrant officers of the United States Navy, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A joint resolution (No. 95) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to amend the contract with John Ericsson for the construction of two impregnable floating batteries, the Dictator and the Puritan—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HALE. I desire to say in connection with the bills just referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs that by a vote of that committee I am instructed to ask the Senate to devote a day this week to the consideration of naval matters; and I give notice now that if nothing else interferes I shall move on Wednesday at one o'clock to proceed to the consideration of bills relating to the Navy.

PERFORMANCE OF MILITARY DUTY.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up Senate bill No. 286, to prohibit the discharge of persons from liability to military duty by reason of the payment of money, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed consideration of the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on an amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WILSON. I withdraw that amendment.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to offer an amendment as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That in any draft which may hereafter take place, all Indian tribes with whom treaties have been made by the United States and who are receiving annuities from the Government shall be required to furnish their respective quota of men; and that the duties of enrollment, or ascertaining the approximate numbers of said tribes, shall, whenever the same is necessary, be performed by the Indian agents as part of their appropriate duty, without further compensation, under instructions from the Provost Marshal General. And in the event that any tribe receiving annuities as aforesaid shall refuse or fail to furnish its required quota, then and in that event the whole or such part of their said annuities as the Secretary of the Interior shall deem adequate to provide substitutes shall be withheld from the annual payment and shall be placed in the Treasury along with the commutation fund heretofore paid for a like purpose: And provided further, That the force thus raised may be employed by the Government for the purpose of maintaining peace and protecting from hostile incursion the Indian and other Territories, and of relieving such troops as are now engaged in that duty.

I do not think the amendment I have offered needs any very special comment. It is known to the Senate that we are now paying out large annuities to many of the Indian tribes that are located on our border, and that they are just as capable of furnishing efficient soldiers as any of the counties of any of the States of the Union. I go further and say that for the purpose of the service in which it is designed to employ them, that is the special service in the Indian Territory and the mountain regions, a more efficient corps can be made from that class of persons than from any other in the country. We have now several thousand soldiers employed in these Territories; I believe I should not be overstating it if I were to say ten thousand. These can to a great extent be supplanted by the force which it is here proposed to raise; and from an acquaintance with the habits of many of these Indian tribes, from a knowledge which is acquired on the plains and in the Territories, I feel warranted in saying that they will make a more economical, a more efficient, and a more disposable force than any which we now have employed in these Territories. That will give us a substantial increase to our military force, and I think it will do another thing which is very important: it will lay the basis in our Indian system of disposing of the animosities of these tribes, so to speak, in a manner beneficial to the country. They now employ themselves, employ all their manhood in hostilities with each other. There seems to be some excitement of the sort necessary to them; but by diverting it in a proper channel, by maintaining an efficient soldiery among them, by elevating and educating them militarily, it will lay the basis of a further education which will extend throughout the tribes. I do not think that any reasonable objection can be made to the amendment. It does not propose to increase the expenditures of the Government, for it devolves this duty of enumeration on the agents who are perfectly able and competent to do it. It will give us that additional force without any additional expense; and that we have a right to make the demand I do not think can be questioned.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, however advisable it might be to adopt the amendment proposed by the honorable member from Missouri, if we had the power, or if it consisted at all with what has been the uniform policy of the Government, I shall be obliged to vote against it upon both of those grounds. The Indian nations as we found them when the country was colonized, were independent of the rest of the world and each independent of all the others. That individual independence has never been denied on the part of the United States except so far as to prohibit their disposing of their lands where they are situated within the territorial boundaries of the United States to anybody else but the United States. We consider them with that exception as independent nations. We deal with them as such by making treaties with them. We have never attempted to take their lands in any other way than by negotiation consummated by treaty. By the Constitution they are excepted from the taxing power. Now the honorable member proposes that we shall by our laws provide that they shall be compelled to render military service to the United States. Even conceding for argument's sake that strictly speaking such power might be found to exist, which I do not think, yet, as it is wholly inconsistent with the whole practice and policy of the Government, I submit to the honorable member and to the Senate whether it is proper on the part of the United States to abandon that practice altogether, as would be done by adopting the amendment suggested by the honorable member from Missouri.

We have dealt harshly enough, perhaps, with these remnants of former great nations, and perhaps it has been owing to that very harshness that they consist now of but remnants. But while they are with us our duty, it seems to me, is rather to come to their aid than to force them by compulsory legislation to come to our aid in a moment when we ourselves and our institutions are in danger.

Mr. HALE. There is another objection to this amendment that strikes me as a very fatal one; and that is that it is an attempt by an act of legislation to amend the treaties we have with these tribes. We are bound by treaty to pay them certain annuities; it is proposed by this act of legislation to impose additional duties on them, and in default of their performing the duties which you impose upon them by this act of legislation to nullify their treaties. In other words, you break faith with them, and you take the annuity which you are bound by treaty to pay them, and indemnify yourselves by putting into the Treasury that which we are bound by treaty to pay them. It seems to me that of itself is a sufficient answer to the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, notwithstanding I have learned somewhat in history of the cruelties practiced in civil war, it never occurred to my imagination that a proposition could be gravely made in the Senate of the United States to enroll the savages who roam the forests in the military service of the country to take part in this present conflict. There is not a Senator on this floor whose just indignation even in childhood was not aroused when he read of the action of the British Government in the days of our Revolution in bringing savages to fight against the colonists, and no one who has ever read them can forget the burning words of indignation which fell from the lips of Chatham against the employment of such soldiers against civilized men. But, sir, the proposition now is gravely submitted in the Senate of the United States to call into this war the savage tribes, to let them loose upon the people of the South. Sir, if those people had never been united to us; if we had never lived in political communion with them; if they were in the scale of civilization and refinement an inferior race, this proposition would be abhorrent and ought to meet with the just condemnation of not only every humane but of every just man. Sir, I cannot allow myself to speak in language suitable to express my thoughts in reference to this proposition; therefore I forbear further from characterizing it.

But, sir, what need have you of the Indians to fight these battles? Look at the men whom you have called into the field since the commencement of this war, and tell me now, sir, whether you have not had more men in the field since the commencement of this war than you can possibly, under any circumstances, continue in the field. You have men now in all the adhering States that are walking up and down the public roads and in every little country village, at every cross-roads, with the American uniform on, not employed in active service of the country; you have men scattered throughout the country who attend to the business of managing elections, and act as spies and informers against their neighbors, who drag off peaceable and quiet citizens from their homes. I cannot ride three miles from the country village in which I live that I do not find them walking up and down the highways with the United States uniform on; and this day, if you will call those men who have your uniform on and put them in the field, bend your energies against the foe in battle instead of attending to peaceable, quiet citizens at home in States that never raised the standard of revolt, you will find no necessity for the additional calls which this bill contemplates.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must interrupt the Senator to call up the special order, the hour having arrived for that purpose.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suppose the special order is the unfinished business of Saturday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

INTER-CONTINENTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not wish to antagonize that bill with this, and I move that it be postponed until to-morrow at one o'clock, and that it be made the special order for that hour.

Mr. HALE. I hope there will be no special orders made at this time of the session; you can take it up just as well without making it a special order.

Mr. WADE. A majority can take it up at any time.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well, I will simply move that the further consideration of Senate bill No. 302 be postponed until to-morrow.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I wish to offer an amendment to the telegraph bill for the purpose of having it printed. It is to come in as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the rate of charges for public or private messages shall not exceed on said line the average usual rates in Europe and America for the same service, or such rates as shall be ascertained and fixed by a convention between the United States, Russia, and Great Britain.

The amendment was received, and ordered to be printed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the Senator from Delaware proceeds, I ask him to allow me to make a report from a committee of conference.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 192) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from their ninth and ninety-fourth amendment.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the twenty-fifth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the thirty-fourth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the ninetieth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to the amendments recommended by the report of the previous conference committee to the ninety-fifth amendment of the Senate, agreed to by the House.

That the Senate agree to the amendments of the House to the ninety-sixth amendment of the Senate as modified by the recommendation of the previous committee of conference, and agreed to by the House.

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

TUESDAY, JUNE 21, 1864.

NEW SERIES... No. 194.

troverted amendments were disposed of by the first report of the committee of conference; but I will state the result of the second report, which will close the difference between the two Houses. The Senate recede from the amendment providing for an additional publication in newspapers in the border States of the laws of the United States. The Senate also recede from the amendment increasing the salary of the Treasurer of the United States. The Senate agree to the increase of temporary clerks in the Treasury Department, and also to a slight increase of the contingent expenses of the Fifth Auditor's office. The Senate also agree to the increase of twenty per cent. in the compensation of the smaller grades of employes in the Departments, and the increase of the pay of watchmen and messengers. The Senate also agree to certain amendments of the House of Representatives providing for additional clerks in various Departments of the Government. The House of Representatives have receded from nearly all their disagreements to our other amendments.

The report was concurred in.

PERFORMANCE OF MILITARY DUTY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 286) to prohibit the discharge of persons from liability to military duty by reason of the payment of money and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. Brown.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I did not know that this subject was coming up for consideration to-day. When I was interrupted I was remarking that if those intrusted with the management of our military affairs would only call the men from places where the soldiers they already have are of no earthly use, and put them in the field against the foe, there certainly could be no necessity whatever for calling for more men, and least of all would there be any necessity for calling upon the savage tribes to take part in this contest. But, sir, the statement may perhaps be questioned that there are a great many soldiers thus unemployed. Why, sir, on my way to this city on the same train of cars, in my own State, there were four hundred soldiers in the uniform of the United States, who had been down in the lower part of Delaware and in the lower counties of the Eastern Shore of Maryland on a great military raid—attending to the elections there! There was a foe in the field down South who had arms in their hands, where they could have been legitimately and properly employed. There were peaceful, quiet citizens in the State of Delaware and on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, with no arms in their hands, presuming to approach the polls to cast their votes for those who were to make the laws of their States under which they were to live, and these soldiers, under the direction of their superior officers, instead of being sent to the front to meet armed foes, were sent to the elections to keep peaceable citizens from voting. Now, sir, before any white men even are called into the field more than those we have, much more before the aid of savage tribes is to be invoked, I call upon this Administration to bring to the seat of war the men whom they send into peaceful, quiet States to molest peaceful, quiet citizens, and to put them in the fields of battle, and see when they get there whether they will not have enough men to meet General Lee and General Johnston. Sir, had this Administration placed in the field the men whom they keep in the adhering States for the purpose of influencing elections and harassing quiet, peaceable citizens simply because they differ from this Administration in party association, and had it united these men with those already in the field, do you believe, sir, does the country believe, does any sane man in the country believe, that there would have been any necessity for calling for another man? No, sir, there is no necessity for this double war upon an armed foe in the field and upon peaceful citizens at home.

But, sir, there is no earthly use for these savage tribes in another aspect of the case. How many men do you suppose you have called into the field, and how many men have worn your uniform since the commencement of this unfortunate war? At least two million five hundred thousand; at least one in ten of your entire population; and yet you are not only calling for more men, citizens, but you are calling upon the savage tribes. Am I mistaken, sir, in this estimate? My attention this morning was called to a well-digested and most admirably written editorial in the National Intelligencer where this subject is treated of; and I will here take occasion to say that it is refreshing in these times to see one public journal at least maintaining the character and dignity which becomes a public journal, not to reflect upon other journals, however. I am indebted to some extent to that paper for the figures which I now present to the Senate. According to the report of Mr. Cameron under the call for 75,000 men first made, there were 77,875 received. In July, 1861, at the extra session, 500,000 volunteers were called for. On the 1st of July, 1862, 300,000 volunteers were called out. In August, 1862, of nine months' militia there were 300,000 men called for. On the 15th of June, 1863, the time when Lee was about invading Pennsylvania, 100,000 militia were called out and the number was afterwards increased to 120,000. In July, 1863, there was a draft for 300,000 men. Since October 17, 1863, according to the speech of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, 700,000 men have been received. I have been informed that there are some 200,000 hundred days' men in addition to all these, and I have seen in the papers that there are about 150,000 negroes. In the whole, not including your home guards which were called out in several States, you have a total of 2,647,875 men. Now, sir, throw away, if you please, 300,000 of these, because I understand that one or two of these drafts were not completed, but I presume the deficiency would not be more than 300,000, and you would have over 2,300,000 men who have been called into the service since the commencement of this war. The highest estimate of your population in the adhering States would be not more than 23,000,000; and thus you would have one in every ten of the inhabitants of the adhering States who have been called into the public service either for a longer or shorter period during this war. I do not pretend to say that all these men are now in the public service, because the time of many of them has expired, the nine months' men, the militia which were called out for temporary emergencies; and I presume, although I am not familiar with the fact—this is simply assumption from the figures already stated—that we must have some 1,200,000 men now with the uniform of the United States on subject to military duty. If that be so, or even if we only have a million, is that not sufficient to put down any rebellion in this country which can be put down? If a million of armed men cannot suppress the existing revolt, then, sir, in my judgment, it is of such gigantic proportions and presents such a power of resistance that you cannot put it down at all. In Alison's History of Modern Europe, speaking of the French conscription, the following passage occurs:

"With respect to the military and naval resources of the empire, the report contained information that could more implicitly be relied on. The population of the French empire, augmented as it now was by Belgium, Holland, the Hanse Towns, and Roman States, amounted to forty-two million, of which twenty-eight million seven hundred thousand belonged to Old France. Nor were the military and naval resources of the empire on a scale inferior to the numerical amount of its inhabitants; on the contrary, they greatly exceeded them. The horses it contained were three million and a half, and consumed as much food as thirty million people. The army numbered, in all, eight hundred thousand infantry, a hundred thousand cavalry, and a hundred thousand artillerymen and engineers; in all, a million men in arms; a force, if the quality as well as number of the combatants, and their admirable state of equipment, are taken into consideration, unparalleled in any former age or country of the world. But it was altogether disproportioned to the resources, vast as they were, of the State."

And here, sir, we may gain a very profitable lesson. It certainly is not wise, as all history proves, for any Government to keep an army in the field disproportioned to the resources of the State, because when the resources of the State fail the support of the army fails.

"But it was altogether disproportioned to the resources, vast as they were, of the States; it was more than double of that which Rome, at its highest point of elevation, maintained out of three times the number of inhabitants; and larger than China supports out of a territory ten times, and a population, according to the lowest estimate, four times as large as those of the French empire. In a word, it implied the permanent absorption of one in forty of the whole population in the profession of arms; whereas it has never been found, by experience, that an empire, how powerful soever, can for any length of time flourish with more than one in a hundred engaged in such pursuits."

Sir, if such be the lesson of history, and if it be true, as this learned historian suggests, that the calling of one in forty of the population of France into the field under Napoleon was such a strain upon the resources of his Government as finally led to disaster and defeat, it is time for those who have the management of military affairs in this country, certainly time for the Congress of the United States, to learn the lesson which it teaches; and see whether they can call into the field one tenth of the inhabitants. I am not saying they have one tenth of the inhabitants in the field now; but I presume they have at least one twentieth, which is twice as many in proportion as Napoleon had during his campaigns. There is a very instructive note appended to the extract which I have quoted:

"Rome, in the time of Augustus, with a population of one hundred and twenty million, had an army of four hundred and fifty thousand; Russia at present, with sixty million, has seven hundred and ten thousand in arms; China, with one hundred and seventy million, has a nominal force of nine hundred and fourteen thousand; but more than half of this immense body are mere militia like the Prussian landwehr, who are only occasionally embodied, and are not permanently withdrawn from the labors of agriculture."

It was not my intention, however, Mr. President, when I rose, to be led into this statistical statement, as I intended when the bill should be on its final passage to submit some remarks. My object in rising was to protest against the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Missouri to call the Indians into the public service. Sir, we should not let our passions overcome our judgment; we should not forget, if we are engaged in war, and in a civil war, that we are bound by the great laws of humanity and civilization. We should not forget, however, just our indignation, however excited our feelings at the attempt to dissolve the Federal Union, that we cannot transgress the great laws of morality and the great principles of humanity with impunity. Call into the field these savage tribes, and what would be the judgment of the civilized world? That we who boast of our superior civilization, and rejoice that we were not only among the first, but perhaps in our vanity that we were the very first among the nations of the earth in the scale of civilized and Christian refinement—that we have fallen from our boasted high estate, and have placed ourselves upon a footing with the English nation in the last century who attempted to set loose upon our fathers the savages of the West. Sir, I protest for one against a policy which must bring down upon us the indignant judgment of the whole civilized world. I know, sir, and you know the burning indignation which fired our breasts in childhood when we read that such a thing was not only attempted but executed against our fathers. Sir, the feelings of childhood were honest; the feelings of childhood were sincere. Let us cling to their purity, not corrupt them by the barbarism which would prompt the invitation of savages to the field.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I do not propose to follow the Senator from Delaware in the line of remark which he has seen fit to indulge, for my object to-day is solely to expedite business, to carry forward and perfect, if possible, the bill under consideration, and not to indulge in general debate. Let me say, however, that I was not prepared to see the amendment which I have offered totally misrepresented in its language, its character, and its intent. I had supposed that the known charity and courtesy of that Senator would have precluded him from such a style of debate. However, sir, he has seen proper to show his sympathies as exclusively excited in behalf of our public enemies, and it is in their behalf that he protests against this use of an arm that may be rendered an efficient one for military purposes. There is perhaps no reason for any surprise in the premises. I have never heard anything fall from the honorable Senator denouncing the atrocities that have been perpetrated against us by those who are now waging war; I have never heard the first syllable fall from him on that subject; and yet when he puts a hypothetical case where our enemies are to suffer what he denominates a savage tribe may be employed to do, he gushes forth into sympathy that is beyond compare.

I desire to call the attention of Senators to the fact that we have already had an exhibition of the use of Indian troops in this war on both sides. There are now employed on the side of the United States Indian troops, and there are employed on the side of the confederate States Indian troops; and if it were necessary to carry this war into the savagery that the gentleman speaks of it certainly might be justified by the atrocities which have been perpetrated against us. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the latest instance of those in whose behalf his sympathy is expended; it is an extract taken from a paper published in my own State, which I have this morning received, and which bears directly on the point suggested:

"The following particulars of the butchery of thirteen soldiers of the first Missouri State militia has been furnished us by a Government employé, who arrived from Johnson county on Tuesday night.

"On Sunday, June 12, fourteen men of company M, first Missouri State militia, left Warrensburg on a scouting expedition to Holden. When near the latter place they were met by three of Quantrell's men, dressed in Federal uniform and wearing white ribbons in their hats in imitation of the militia. They ordered our men to advance, and in doing so the party was surrounded by eighty men and murdered in the most cruel manner, only one of them escaping. The eyes of our men were torn from their sockets and their throats cut from ear to ear. Quantrell's headquarters are on the Sul river, not far from the Missouri. Our informant says that in Johnson, Lafayette, Clay, Jackson, and Platte counties it is dangerous for a Union man to travel without a strong escort."

Mr. WILSON. I will ask the Senator who committed these atrocities; what class of men?

Mr. BROWN. Confederate troops; the public enemy whom some are so fearful Indian troops may be employed against and may commit some atrocity. I will leave that extract to answer all the Senator has said on the subject of the savagery that it is proposed to introduce into this war. It is perhaps needless to add that I do not approve of any savagery or contemplate that any such will result from the amendment offered.

But to come directly to the point, I said that the Senator has misrepresented the character of the amendment which has been proposed. As it stands it is a proposition to organize in the Indian Territory an Indian force for service there to maintain the peace and order of that Territory. Is it assumed that we shall not be permitted to organize an Indian force to repel atrocities like those of the Sioux Indians that desolated our whole frontier, and that we shall be accused of being a savage nation if we employ Indians to repel hostilities of that kind, and to maintain order along our settled frontiers as against depredations of that kind? Will the Senator insist that instead of availing ourselves of that which is the most effective arm of military service in the Indian country, organized Indian troops, we shall draft citizens from Delaware and other States and carry them there for that purpose, where they cannot compete with the troops proposed, and where regular forces have never been able to suppress these kinds of hostilities? That is the attitude in which the question presents itself, and that is the attitude in which the Senator would have discussed it if he had addressed his argument to the proposition which is presented and not carried himself off into a tirade against imaginary barbarities against rebels in arms.

Now, I desire to say that so far as my own experience goes the employment of Indians for service on the frontiers and in the Territories is far more efficacious than any other class of troops that can be found. Among the tribes that are drawing annuities from us, the Delawares, the Shawnees, the Pottawatomies, all the tribes that are located in Kansas and Nebraska and along the Missouri river, furnish the best hunters, furnish the best woodsmen, furnish the best riders and scouts on the continent, and they can be made certainly efficacious for the purposes of keeping the peace in their own and adjacent countries. It was for the purpose of organizing such a force to be employed in such quarters that the amendment has been offered, and not for the purpose of an indiscriminate employment in other fields of service.

I am prepared, Mr. President, for my own part to take all the odium that may be visited upon me for the employment of such troops anywhere, at any time, for I believe that, so far from being what the Senator has represented, they will make as good troops as any in the service. They may not endure the hardships that some others endure, they may not have the kind of courage that some others possess, but for certain purposes of warfare, and that the kind especially demanded in the western Territories, they will make better troops than any other that I have ever seen in the service of the United States.

I differ, Mr. President, from the view which has been presented by the Senator from Maryland in regard to the right of the Government to call upon these persons, who are drawing subsidies from us, for military service. I believe that it is in the power and that it is the right of this Government to call upon every man within its borders, unless perhaps it be subjects of foreign Governments, to come forward and give military support to the nation in the hour of its peril. I do not believe that the recognition of the Indian right to the soil, and the payment of treaty stipulations to support them in idleness, necessarily involve a relinquishment of that right to personal service from them in time of war; nor do I recognize as correct that position which the Senator gives to them of independent tribes with whom we can only deal by treaty, and to whom we are bound as we would be to a foreign nation. I have never recognized that as the attitude of the Indian tribes, and I do not believe the Government has ever recognized it. As to the right of the Government to enforce this personal service I assume that if it be that the Government can enforce personal service as against a citizen of Maryland, and require him in default of personal service to pay so much as a commutation, then the same rule will apply to the Indian in Kansas, and the Government is justified in raising that commutation and procuring it from the only source from which it is possible to procure it, their annuities. It becomes in so far the right and the title of the Government to exact it, and they can do so by the mode best known to them, which is the one pointed out in the amendment.

I do not desire to press this question upon the Senate; I have simply moved the amendment, because I am solicitous that we shall have all the assistance that we can and render disposable all the troops within reach. I am anxious that the western country shall be protected as far as possible from the incursions of hostile Indian bands, the wild tribes of the plains with whom we have no treaty stipulations, to whom we give no annuities or anything of the kind, and who make war for the purpose of forcing us to give them annuities; and if I can contribute in this manner to strengthen the arm of the Government to relieve a large number of troops who are now there, and who may be needed and better employed elsewhere, and inaugurate a better method of discipline in our Indian service, I shall have done what was desired in the premises.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I was not aware, when I submitted the few remarks I did, that I had said anything discourteous to the honorable Senator from Missouri; that I had said anything to which he could take any personal exception. It is not my habit. When I wish to do that I know a way to do it, not by indirection but directly; and I shall never avail myself of the privileges of the Senate Chamber to indulge in discourtesy to any member of the body. There is nothing more distasteful to me than a course of that character; but some kind friend has blessed the honorable Senator with a great deal of light. He must have "optics sharp, I ween." He not only can see what is transpiring around, but he can judge of sympathies; and he talks about my speaking in behalf of those for whom I have sympathy. Sir, I spoke in behalf of humanity and in the cause of civilization, and I have sympathy with their progress. I will take this occasion, Mr. President, once for all, to say that this common mode of meeting an argument by an imputation is a thing which, in my estimation, is too little for me to take any notice of. It is a kind of debate in which I have never engaged in all my life, and which I never expect to engage in so long as I have the presumption to think that I can meet argument with argument, and reasoning with reasoning; and never, sir, until I shall have so far lost my own self-respect as to be unworthy of joining in fair debate. Now, Mr. President, I say no more on that subject.

The honorable Senator says that I did not state correctly, or, to use his own courteous expression, that I misrepresented his amendment. I gathered my impression from the amendment as I heard it read from the desk. The honorable Senator says now that it was intended to be confined exclusively to operations in the Indian country. I do not know whether he meant to say exclusively against the Indians or not. Mr. President, get these Indians into the regular organized service of the United States, and do you suppose they will be confined exclusively to the Indian Territory? I understand that the one hundred days' men were called out under the impression that they were to serve to defend the frontiers of their own States from invasion, and yet we see them marching to the front. I do not complain of this. It is none of my business. The country needs them, and if they are liable to go as soldiers they should go, and as good soldiers they ought to go. Once have these Indians sworn into the regular service, and what power is there to restrain the Commander-in-Chief from transferring them from the Indian country to any point where in his judgment their services may be needed?

But, sir, it is said, and I have heard it frequently before, that there are great atrocities committed on the part of those in revolt. I have no doubt of it. No man condemns them more than I do. I have no doubt there are great atrocities committed also on the part of the Federal soldiery. I approve of one just as much as I do of the other. I approve of neither. But wherever either side violates those great and high principles of honorable warfare which should characterize civilized men, they meet with my just disapprobation. It is no answer to an argument against the perpetration of atrocity to say that atrocities are committed on the other side. Do right; conduct your war, if you must conduct it, upon those high and elevated principles which govern modern warfare and which are recognized in the laws of modern warfare by all civilized and Christian nations. If you do that you will maintain your own self-respect; and let me tell you if there is a just God in heaven whose laws are immutable, the transgression of whose laws cannot take place with impunity, you will be more successful than you will by an attempt to achieve your object by the violation of those laws.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The Senator from Delaware, it seems to me, could not have listened to the language of this amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, for the provision is that the Indian force thus raised "may be employed by the Government for the purpose of maintaining peace and protecting from hostile incursions the Indian and other Territories, and of relieving such troops as are now engaged in that duty." If any ambiguity may grow out of the employment of the word "may," it may easily be amended and the word "shall" substituted, although I understand the whole force of the section to be precisely the same on the War Department in limiting its power in the employment of this force whether the word "may" or "shall" is used, because it authorizes the raising of the troops on condition; and what is that condition? That they may be employed to keep the peace and prevent incursions in the Indian Territory or the other Territories.

Now, Mr. President, what are the facts? In the Indian Territory, before this war began, the Indian tribes were at peace. The rebels, through the instrumentality of their troops and their emissaries, prevailed on the Choctaws, some of the Chickasaws, the Seminoles, the Washataws, and the affiliated bands, to enter into the rebel service and join the conspiracy. With the aid of some white troops advancing with these Indians as their allies into the Indian Territory, they carried fire and devastation through that Territory, and drove out from it the Creeks and the Cherokees to the amount of more than twenty thousand, fleeing, suffering, in the midst of winter, under circumstances of suffering compared with which there has nothing been like it in this war. In substance this is but a proposition to authorize the Government to employ Indian forces to keep the peace in the Indian Territory and the other Territories where they are liable to just such incursions as these by Indian tribes joined with rebels. With such language as will guard it as to the employment of the force in this way, there can be no objection to the object, which is to enroll into the service of the United States as our allies against the Indian forces that are employed by the rebels, Indian forces. Certainly there is nothing wrong in that. The Senator from Delaware has spent his sympathies in vain, it seems to me, when he appeals to the recollections of our childhood when we read the story of the Revolution and the employment of Indian savages by Great Britain in the war for our independence against us. Sir, there is nothing like it proposed in this amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

But there is force in an objection which was raised by the Senator from Maryland, I think; and that is to say that from our relations to the Indian tribes, treating them as we do as independent tribes and nations, and our relations being with those tribes by virtue of treaty stipulations, and there being nothing contained in those treaty stipulations by which we are authorized to draft them in case of war, that part of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri which proposes to forcibly bring them into the service cannot stand investigation. I suggest to the Senator, therefore, if he will allow me, to amend his proposition so that the effect of it will be substantially that the Indians, members of tribes receiving annuities from us and living in any State, may be authorized to be received into the forces of the State as a part of the quota of the State, and that within the Indian Territory the Secretary of War shall be authorized to use as a part of the force of the United States, such Indians as may be employed for that purpose to keep the peace in the Indian Territory and to carry out the purpose mentioned in the proviso to this amendment. This would avoid all objection to grow out of what may be termed a violation of our treaty stipulations with these Indian tribes, a violation of our recognition of them as independent tribes.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether the Indians are enrolled under the conscription law.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. They are not.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then I ask the Senator, would not his proposition be this: that persons not subject to the conscription law shall be received in some States against the citizens of the States in other States?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Perhaps whether they should be credited to the State or not is another question. I can see the force of the objection made by the Senator; but the main purpose is to authorize the Secretary of War to receive and employ them in this service. That is the purpose of the Senator from Missouri. According to my proposition it would be as volunteers and not as conscripts or drafted men.

Mr. JOHNSON. Can he not do that now?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I am not aware that any law has been passed authorizing the Secretary of War to employ Indians as volunteers. I will appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. JOHNSON. There are in the service.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I understand that in point of fact Indians from some of the States have been enlisted as volunteers, and have been accepted as volunteers in the service of the United States. The Senator from New York so informs me in regard to his State.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will ask the Senator if that is not confined to that class of Indians who, under treaty or law, are made citizens of the States? By the constitutions of some of the northwestern States, and perhaps the constitution of Wisconsin, Indians are allowed to be citizens of the State, and we have some treaties allowing them to be.

Mr. COLLAMER. It is so with the Brother-ton Indians.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Perhaps that is the tribe. I ask whether any other classes of Indians have been allowed to volunteer.

Mr. HARRIS. The Cattaraugus Indians have been received as volunteers.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It would seem that in New York some of the Cattaraugus Indians have been accepted as volunteers in the service of the United States; and in Kansas, as I am informed, some Indians have been accepted in some of the regiments, and some in Michigan. But the question which I was considering was whether there has been any legislation on the subject; and I appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts to state. As we have legislated so much on this military question, I am not sure that we have not passed a law authorizing the acceptance of Indians as volunteers in the service of the United States.

Mr. WILSON. There has been no such law.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I can state the history of the acceptance of Indian troops. A year before we accepted the services of either Indians or negroes, the rebels had three regiments of Indians fighting our loyal people in the Indian Territory. The Secretary of War accepted three regiments of Indian volunteers in the Indian Territory, officering them with white men. They are now in the service, and have done good service, valuable service in the field.

Now, that the chairman of the Indian Committee may understand exactly the position of this question, I desire to suggest that you cannot without a law providing for enrollment and for drafting get this particular class of troops into the field. The Secretary of War has been willing to accept them for two years, has been trying to get them into the service. The Indian reserves, so far as the State I in part represent is concerned, are not within the boundaries of our State. They are excluded by express legislation in the Kansas-Nebraska act.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And it is so in all the other territorial acts. They are not citizens, but excluded by the action of Congress.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. By the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri we can obtain a very large force of useful troops for the western country, and we can release, instead of ten thousand, as put by the Senator from Missouri, not less than twenty thousand white troops engaged in protecting the Indian country. I feel that by the passage of this amendment we can release all but a very small portion of that force from that service and use them elsewhere in the military service of the United States.

I desire now to say a word in respect to the position taken by the Senator from Maryland. Here is a people whom this country is feeding day by day, men, women, and children; many of them shiftless, fit for nothing under God's heaven but to fight. Situated thus with them, we should not, in a case of this kind, act on a theory which every man of sense in this Senate believes to be a folly, the theory of treating those Indian tribes as independent nations. A treaty is but a burlesque; it is a humbug; and every man knows it who has had anything to do with them. We make the treaties here in the Indian department to suit the wishes of the Government. They are sent out to the Indian tribes; inducements are offered; our Great Father wants the treaty; a bullock or two is killed, and the treaty is adopted. When it comes to the Senate, if we find it does not suit us exactly we change it. The amendments are sent back, and the same kind of appliances are used, including the whisky, and our amendments are ratified.

Mr. JOHNSON. Not the same whisky. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. The same sort of appliances are used and our amendments are adopted. They are a weak, feeble, shiftless people, the greater portion of them, yet they will make good soldiers if we exercise the force that we possess in doing with them as we do with our own children, conscripting them into the service of the United States. I think, Mr. President, that if the Senator from Delaware had been at Lawrence on the 21st day of August last, he would not be condemning our Government for proposing to muster into the service of the United States Indians. Several of those men who committed that raid and that murder and those terrific outrages were rebel Indians who have been in the service from the moment this rebellion commenced. Very soon after this Administration came into power, the President appointed a commissioner and Indian agents, and sent them out to the Indian Territory, and they were the first to turn against the Government, and persuade the Indians that the Government was lost, and induce them to go into the rebel ranks among the first that were in the service in this war. He appointed what he supposed to be loyal men. They went out there and turned against the Government and carried off these Indians, and I repeat, that a year before we called an Indian or a black man into the service, the rebels had three regiments burning and destroying the property of our people.

Mr. JOHNSON. I said the other day, when the condition of the Indians that are now left was brought before the Senate, that the conduct of the people of the United States toward them perhaps could not be justified on moral grounds. I understand the Senator from Kansas now to say that there is not a sane member of the Senate, acquainted with the facts, who would not pronounce all these treaties as the merest folly in the world.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. The theory of treating with them.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is no folly in the treaties so that we get the land. What he meant to say was that the theory of treating with them, considering the manner in which we get their land by treaty, was a folly; but it is worse than a folly if he states the facts accurately. If we delude these poor Indians, if we seduce them by applying to their weaknesses or their vices, and in that way we become rich and they become vagabonds, the case is rather worse than I thought it was. But we have thought proper to do it, if we have done it at all, at any rate in the form of constitutional measures. We have made treaties ostensibly. The papers, the conveyances by which we got the lands, upon their face profess to be treaties. They are signed by the President of the United States, under the advice and consent of the Senate, as the representative of the United States, and they are signed by those who profess to represent, and who do represent, these several tribes. And in that way we are now, as far as such treaties have been made, the owners of those lands.

Now, the Senator from Kansas states—he may be right; he knows more of the character of the Indians than I do—that they are a lazy, worthless set of men, who do nothing but cumber the earth. Who has made them lazy and worthless, and a cumber to the earth? We, we. Have they not still some redeeming qualities which show that the manhood God gave to their ancestors has not altogether expired? The honorable member tells us that the regiments of Indians who are now in the service of the United States have done as useful if not more valuable service than any other regiments of the same number in the armies of the United States. They then possess some high qualities, and if properly treated they would cease to be wanderers and cumberers upon the face of the earth.

But that is not the question now, Mr. President. The question now is, have we any authority to do what is proposed? What is it? What is supported by the honorable Senator from Kansas? A proposition to force them into the service. Suppose we had the power, I was about to say I should be ashamed to use it. We have done already enough to bring us somewhat in disrepute. We, the white men of the nation, we who constitute the nation, we whose Government this is, which we created, and which we claim to be ours, and which we desire to perpetuate, we have already admitted that we were unable to protect and perpetuate it without calling upon the Africans who happen to be within our limits; and now we are asked to go a step further, to force into the service of the United States some twenty thousand Indians over whom we have no constitutional control; and the object avowed is to save from the danger of death the lives of as many white men. What will the judgment of other nations be upon it? What judgment will the civilized world pronounce if we declare that with a hundred and fifty thousand black troops and more than a million of white men now in the field, we are unable to maintain ourselves without forcing into the service some fifteen or twenty thousand of the remnant of this race who have been brought into the condition in which they are by us? I forbear, Mr. President, to anticipate that judgment by saying what I suppose it must be.

But the ground upon which I refuse to concur in the proposition offered by the honorable member from Missouri is that as things now are, under the Constitution as it is and according to the well-settled policy of the Government, we have no authority to force these Indians into the service.

A word now upon the amendment suggested by the honorable member from Wisconsin, which is to permit them to be received as volunteers. I have no doubt they may be now. The acts which authorize the bringing into the service of the United States of troops up to the limit to which the Government is authorized to call do not say that they are to be white men; they may be Indians or anybody else. The ship that comes crowded with emigrants to-morrow, capable of making good soldiers; they, without designing to become citizens and without expressing a design to become citizens as a condition of your receiving them into the service of the United States, may be received as volunteers just as legally as the native citizen. And if we can receive the foreigners from all parts of the civilized world who are here and who may offer their services, why can we not receive the Indian? There is but one difference between them, and that, if I may so express myself, is a moral difference. It consists in the fact that perhaps the judgment of the world and the judgment of the reflecting part of our own people would be that it was hazardous to bring into the field troops of this description who fight with the tomahawk.

Mr. GRIMES. Have you any objection to their being used against the Indians who are fighting us in the Northwest?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, I object to their being used as soldiers at all, for any purpose. The honorable member from Missouri has given us a statement of an outrage committed by the rebels. I hope it is somewhat exaggerated, though it may be true, for Heaven knows that enormities have been perpetrated on both sides. But he seems to suppose that because these enormities are perpetrated it justifies bringing the Indians into the service of the United States, although in all probability they will be found perpetrating like enormities.

Mr. BROWN. Permit me to say to the Senator from Maryland that on the contrary I expressly disclaimed any such idea at the time; but I stated that if it were designed to show an offset, there would be justification for it. These Indians that are spoken of are not savages; they are, most of them, just as capable of being drilled as soldiers as any of the persons who are taken up under the conscription law here; and it is simply proposed that they, equally with everybody else, shall come in and furnish their quota as they draw their pensions from the Government.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know the honorable member from Missouri well enough to be satisfied that he would not justify the employment of Indians if they were found perpetrating, or it was thought they would be found perpetrating enormities such as the report he read prescribed, because of the perpetration of like enormities on the other side. But how are you going to employ them? What Indians are you going to select? The proposition is to take them by draft.

Mr. BROWN. I would suggest to the Senator from Maryland that there is a large expedition now against the Sioux Indians in which the forces of the United States are engaged.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know.

Mr. BROWN. There are now some five thousand Navajos on the pay-roll of the Government of the United States, fed by the Government, doing nothing, living in idleness in New Mexico.

Mr. JOHNSON. The honorable member did not understand what I intended to say when he interrupted me. He said to me that a great many of these Indians were civilized. I admit it; but a great many are not. If you apply the drafting system to them what security is there that you will not draft the savage instead of the civilized? If I am told that they are to be employed as against savages, and to use the tomahawk only when they meet savages like themselves in battle, do you think that if they happen to meet other than savages they will stop to inquire whether it is proper to use the tomahawk or not?

Mr. BROWN. Does the Senator understand the tomahawk to be one of the arms in use in the Army of the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly, but it is a weapon which will be used by Indians, and it is not a bit worse than the weapon the confederates are using, the bowie-knife; and one enormity produces another. Devastating as the war has been, filling as it has done the land with misery, carrying agony into so many households, in the name of God I trust that we shall adopt no policy which looks to its being conducted upon any other principles than those principles which, according to the modern laws of war, in a manner humanize such conflict.

Mr. WILSON. I hope, Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri will withdraw this amendment. It is doubted by many Senators whether we have the power to do what he proposes, and it is doubted by many whether, if we have the power, we ought to exercise it. I think the debate shows that this amendment ought not to be pressed, and I hope the Senator will withdraw it. I think the Government, under the general laws for the raising of troops, can enlist Indians that are fit to be enlisted, and use them for such service as it deems proper in the Indian country. I trust the amendment will be withdrawn, and that we shall come to a vote upon the bill.

Mr. HOWARD. I concur entirely with the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts on this subject. I confess that I greatly doubt the authority of the United States to constrain members of Indian tribes within our limits to do military duty for the United States. I certainly do not wish to be driven to a vote on that very delicate question. It seems to me, sir, that we have too many treaties with the Indian tribes to leave the question very doubtful whether or not the Indian tribes are, in the sense of the laws of nations, independent nations. As to the Government of the United States, they are regarded as merely the wards of the nation, and subject to and entitled to our protection as their superior or suzerain. I do not wish in the face of the world, although our necessities are great, to present such a question as this, whether we shall constrain the subjects of Indian tribes, without the consent of their barbarous government, their chiefs, to do military duty in our behalf. Certainly, the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri contemplates the coercive employment of Indians in the military service, not leaving it to the option of their chiefs or their own option whether they will serve us or not.

I will say further, now that I am up, that I have no heart for the employment of Indian savages in our wars. We are not yet driven, as I think, to the necessity of asking the alliance of the tomahawk even against the barbarisms of the rebels. I shall wait long and patiently and anxiously before I shall give my vote to associate the tomahawk of the savage with the musket and the sword of honorable, civilized Christian war.

Mr. BROWN. I would ask the Senator from Michigan whether they have not some Indians from his State already in the service of the United States?

Mr. HOWARD. I will answer the Senator: I believe that we have; but it is my duty to say at the same time that a very large proportion of the Indians within the limits of the State of Michigan are not subject to the tribal government, and that the most of them are freemen and citizens of that State and actual voters at the polls. So far as I am informed and as I believe, a vast majority, not to say the whole of the Ottawa and Chippewas, to whom the Senator has alluded, are citizens of the State of Michigan, and voters.

Mr. McDougall. Mr. President, ever since the war between the colonies and Great Britain with France for the French possessions in the North, ever since the time of the expedition to Fort Pitt, we have employed the services of friendly Indians as against the Indians employed on the opposite side. Indians for certain purposes were employed in the war of the Revolution.

Friendly Indians were employed in the war of 1812. Friendly Indians have been employed in our frontier wars. When Texas was being nearly overwhelmed by the power of the Comanches in the north, the Texans employed the Lipans as friendly Indians to aid them as scouts, guides, and for various purposes to carry on their war and maintain their own frontier. Friendly Indians have been employed in Oregon and elsewhere for like purposes. Their services have never been coerced, but they have been extremely useful. They were employed in the Black Hawk war in the Northwest. Their employment for certain purposes by the Government, I think, can not be objected to, and particularly in frontier war. They may be, to a certain extent, almost necessary. Our war now in Kansas and Arkansas and in the Southwest, and in the Northwest also, requires probably the employment of Indians, and often of organized bands of Indians with proper officers; and certainly the difficulty that occurred in the Cherokee nation and throughout the Creek country shows that it was necessary for us, in order to maintain our position in that part of the Southwest, to give employment to Indians as against Indians. I believe in the proper application of such a policy; but I do not think we have a right to coerce their services, and I think I speak according to the experience of all gentlemen who know anything of the frontier when I say that such Indians as favor our Government, being in treaty with us, to whom we offer service, maintenance in the field, transportation, and other facilities to join with us, would be prompt volunteers without bounties or without any of the extraordinary provisions we offer to our own citizens and the negro population of the South. I am in favor of their employment in and about their proper uses. They are invaluable for many purposes as scouts. They are particularly valuable with the army of the West, and have been used to some extent in the army of the West as scouts and as pioneers, going ahead for the purpose of finding out the position of the enemy. For this nothing like coercive policy is required. I think that it would be well to express here as an amendment perhaps to this bill, a direct authorization—so that it shall not be a mere implied one—a direct authorization to the Government to employ them. I know that Indians whom we employed belonging to the Cherokees, organized as regiments, were unpaid and officers were unpaid, and great complaints arose, and it was because, I think, of some question as to the proper authorization of the Government to employ them.

The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. DOOLITTLE,] has prepared an amendment that will meet my full concurrence, and answer all legitimate purposes. I do not think they are people to be coerced. Unless they volunteer freely, and go into our service, their services cannot be relied upon; it will be useless legislation. I do not think, myself, we have the authority to coerce them; I think we have not, as we do not consider them citizens, and as we have treated with them, giving them annuities, &c. It would be inconsistent with the policy we have always pursued toward them, and the true law would follow as the construction of that policy that we have not the right. I should like, however, to authorize their employment.

Mr. HOWE. Two things in this debate have surprised me a good deal: one is that there should be a proposition in the American Senate to conscript members of Indian nations or tribes. I do not believe, Mr. President, you have any more legal or moral right to force an Indian into your armies to fight your battles than you have to force a Mexican or a Canadian. They owe no allegiance to your laws; they do not enjoy the protection of your laws; they are no part of the people for whose benefit your Government exists, and I am surprised that there should be such a proposition brought in here.

That does not surprise me so much as a statement that has been made during the debate, which is that there are already a number of Indians employed in the Army of the United States. The Senator from Kansas, I think, stated that there were three regiments of Indians that he knew of in the West. The Senator from Michigan tells us that there are some from his State. I am not squeamish about this matter of employing Indians and enlisting them if they see fit to volunteer. Any man who will wear your uniform and submit to the discipline of your Army, I do not care what his color is, nor where he was born, will do for service in your armies; that is my judgment; but what occasioned the surprise on my part was this fact: we have in the immediate neighborhood in which I live a small band of Indians who formerly lived in New York, known as the Oneida Indians; they are farmers, they wear our clothing, speak our language, work as we do. In 1861, they were anxious to enlist when we first began to raise volunteers, to be officered, of course, by our own men, and to serve in our own regiments; and at the request of some of them I wrote a letter to the Secretary of the Interior asking permission to recruit a company of those Indians to go into one of our regiments. The Secretary wrote back to me that he saw no objection to enlisting them, but the President was opposed to it, and therefore we abandoned it. Last winter a gentleman in our city wrote me again, saying that these Indians were anxious to enlist, and that he could raise a couple of companies, and wished me again to apply for permission to do so. I applied to the Provost Marshal General, and he told me that he saw no objection to it himself, but the Secretary of War was firmly opposed to it. Two applications, therefore, were made in behalf of a tribe as far advanced in civilization as any I know of still maintaining the tribal character at all, men speaking the language as well as most of us, and following all our habits as closely as they ought to follow them, to speak modestly; they have been excluded. I was therefore very much surprised to learn that Indians had been mustered into the service in other sections of the United States. I think, myself, there is no objection to it if they will submit to our discipline.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Let me ask the Senator what it is that constitutes the claim of the Government upon the citizen for service. I understand it to be that the Government protects the citizen; that that is the ground of the claim. Do we not protect these Indian tribes just as we protect white American citizens? Just across the river from where I live is a tribe of Indians whose property is as valuable as ours, who have as large an amount of property pro rata as we have. We extend to their homes the same protection that we do to our homes, to their property the same protection as to our property, to their families the same protection as to our families. On this side of the river we conscript our people, and yet on this theory we excuse the Delaware and Pottawatomie Indians who have as much interest in sustaining the Government as we have. They have a fund here I suppose of one or two million dollars besides the land; their homes are as valuable as ours; and yet by this sickly sentimentality we propose to excuse them and call our own people into the service. The power, I insist, is with the Government; the same power that we exercise over our own people we have the power to exercise over them; and the same indebtedness that we owe to our Government they owe to our Government.

Mr. HOWE. I think the Senator from Kansas is entirely mistaken in stating that they owe any such debt as we owe, or that they get any such protection as we get. I do not know how it is with the particular tribe to which he refers. It must be a tribe standing in an attitude entirely different from any other I know of if they get any such protection or owe any such allegiance. If a citizen of Kansas commits an offense within that Territory, he may be amenable to our laws; but if a member of that tribe commits any offense against another member of the tribe or the member of another tribe—if he commits an offense against the regulations of the Pottawatomies, for instance—our Government does not interfere, I take it, does not afford any protection.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Certainly they do.

Mr. HOWE. I do not understand such to be the general policy of the Government. They interfere, I suppose, with force to put down an Indian war sometimes.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. They are tried and punished for murder in our courts, tried and punished for felony, not in our State courts, but in the General Government courts, the district and circuit courts of the United States.

Mr. BROWN. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I have myself defended Indians before the United States courts that were tried for murder.

Mr. WILKINSON. Murdering another Indian?

Mr. BROWN. Murdering a white man. That is the same thing. If you have no jurisdiction, how can you bring them there for trial?

Mr. HOWE. I take it there would be no difficulty under our law in trying and convicting and hanging a subject of Great Britain for murdering an American citizen within the jurisdiction of our laws.

Mr. BROWN. This was on their soil.

Mr. HOWE. We have jurisdiction throughout our whole territory so far as our citizens and subjects are concerned, but we do not have complete jurisdiction over all persons within the territory.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. President—

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the Senator from Illinois will allow me I was going to suggest to the Senator from Missouri a substitute for his amendment substantially allowing the Secretary of War to accept them as volunteers to be employed in protecting the Indian Territory and the other Territories where any part of the hostile force is composed of Indians.

Mr. BROWN. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin very frankly that I offered this amendment under a sense of duty, that it was right that we should provide for a conscription there of the able men among them to assist us in our military organization. Believing that we shall only get it by a conscription, and that we shall not attain the end by voluntary enlistment, and believing that the nation has the right to call upon them, I shall decline to withdraw the amendment, and shall decline to accept the amendment proposed to it. I do not wish to protract debate; the Senate can substitute anything for it they see fit.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not think you have the power to conscript the Indians; and in reply to the Senator from Kansas I will simply state this: he places it on the ground that you protect their property and are therefore entitled to have their service in defending the Government when it is menaced. His statement proves too much. There are many persons who are subjects of Great Britain, of France, and nearly all the European Powers who own property here, some of them to a very large extent. The Indian is just as liable, and no more so, to do service and be conscripted into your Army as a subject of Great Britain or France who owns property in this country. The Senator cannot apply his doctrine to the subjects of those countries. Why? Because they would not permit it; it is not according to the laws of nations nor our own laws. If you cannot enforce it in reference to them you should not enforce it in reference to the Indians. I presume there is but little question about the fact that they are not citizens of this country. Certainly not, where they have not destroyed their tribal relations and settled inside the States or Territories, where they are not connected with a band with which we make treaties. We make treaties with these Indians every few days; when we go into executive session we have some treaty with them. Do we treat with our own people? The whole argument submitted by the Senator from Kansas would apply just as well to a subject of Great Britain owning property in this country. I am opposed to the amendment. I understand generally that we have the right to accept into our service a foreigner who comes here, and we have a right to accept the Indians. We have the clear right now, and the whole question hinges, as I understand it, on the proposition submitted by the Senator from Missouri, and to that I am opposed. Our good relations, the peace of the frontier settlements, depends upon the fact of our paying the annuities each year, year by year, and month by month as we have agreed to do it, promptly. It is a fair contract and it ought not to be disturbed. The money should be paid in my judgment by this Government without enforcing any such obedience as is here proposed.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move to substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Missouri the following:

That the Secretary of War is authorized to receive into the military service of the United States Indians of tribes in treaty with the United States, to be employed as a part of the military force of the United States for the purpose of maintaining peace and protecting from hostile incursion the Indian Territory and other Territories where the hostile or invading force is in whole or in part composed of hostile Indians.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not expect to vote for either of the propositions now before the Senate; but I am not ready to say that the Government has not the power to compel the service of Indians as well as other men. I do not understand that the Indians when in tribes are independent nations. We have, for the purpose of carrying out our policy toward them, recognized them as in respect to ourselves to some extent as independent tribes and nations, but in no other respect. The Indian tribes cannot negotiate a treaty with any other people than ourselves; they cannot make terms with any other people; they cannot sell their lands to any other people; they cannot sell their lands to our individual citizens. We permit them to sell them to us as a people, or rather we by treaty extinguish their possessory right; but we do not recognize them for any other purpose except to carry out our policy toward them as a separate people. I am not prepared to say that our laws might not be made obligatory upon them individually. It is a question that I do not choose to consider in giving a vote on this proposition. I go against it for the simple reason that when the Government of the United States is to be supported in war it should be by the people of the United States. I am not in favor of bringing into the Army of the United States an inferior race. I do not agree with Senators in the expression of opinion so frequently made here that the Indians and negroes are the equal of the white soldiers of the United States. I am very far from agreeing with the Senator from Kansas in saying that any Indian troops have been equal in war to the white troops.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I did not say that. I said they had done valuable service.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I understood the Senator to express himself very earnestly, to say that they had done valuable service, as valuable service as any other regiments in the war. If he does not occupy that position I do not desire to make him occupy it. I think there are some qualities required in a soldier that are not possessed by any inferior race. It requires the highest qualities of manhood to make a good soldier; not only physical power and courage, but intelligence, judgment, skill; these are not possessed by an inferior race. I think we should degrade our cause by bringing into our military service the Indian tribes. It is against the sentiment of our people; it is against the history of our country. Upon these grounds I vote against the proposition, rather than upon the grounds of power which have been discussed.

Mr. WILSON. I hope we shall have a vote.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The whole effect of the amendment I have offered is that they may be accepted as volunteers, and it states the kind of warfare in which they shall be employed in the Indian Territory to keep the peace, or in other Territories where the hostile force is in whole or in part composed of Indians. There is no objection to our employing Indians where Indians are employed against us, certainly.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I have no desire to continue this discussion; but I desire to say, as I said last week, that our Indian policy is an utter failure. I said that a portion of these Indians were vagabonds. They have been brought into that condition by contact with the master race. I have lived long enough in the West to know that it is the fact that the inferior is brought into contact with the superior race that debases them. Our policy has not been such as to give them that protection which the inferior race should have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I vote against this on the ground of expense.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I think we shall have a large number of Indian troops that we shall not use under this amendment. That will be its only effect, and I shall vote against it for that reason.

The yeas and nays being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Conness, Dixon, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Harlan, Harris, Howard, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Pomerooy, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, and Wilson—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Carlile, Davis, Grimes, Hendricks, Johnson, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Saulsbury, and Wilkinson—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Cowan, Fessenden, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Howe, Morrill, Nesmith, Riddle, Trumbull, and Wright—13.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment as amended.

Mr. WILSON. I hope we shall reject it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have but a word to say before the vote is taken. The reason why I shall vote against the proposition of the Senator from Missouri on legal grounds I have stated already; but this presents a different question. I have no doubt that these Indians may be received into the service of the United States; but I think it would place us in a very bad attitude in the view of other nations if we should here, at this time of day, when we have a million and a half of men in the field, or liable to go into the field, pass a law upon its face authorizing the Government to call in volunteer Indians. The Indian, as understood abroad, will not be the civilized Indian as we understand it; it will be the savage.

The yeas and nays being taken, resulted—yeas 10, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Doolittle, Grimes, Harlan, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Pomerooy, Ramsey, and Sprague—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Carlile, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Foot, Foster, Harris, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Morgan, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, Wiley, and Wilson—29.

ABSENT—Messrs. Conness, Fessenden, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Howe, Morrill, Nesmith, and Wright—10.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON. I offer an amendment to the bill, to insert as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That every person who shall be drafted and who shall serve honorably for the period of one year shall receive a bounty of $100, to be paid upon his discharge from the service; and every person so drafted, who shall be honorably discharged after a term of service less than one year, shall receive a bounty proportioned to his term of service, to be estimated at the rate herein prescribed for one year's service.

I desire this section to follow the last section of the amendment presented by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. COLLAMER,] which has been agreed to. His amendment allows the Government to draft for a period not exceeding one year. This section provides that if such persons are drafted for a period of one year they shall receive at the end of their service a bounty of $100. I think, in the present condition of the country, when laboring men can earn four or five hundred dollars a year, it will be an inducement to them to enter the service. I think it but just that at the end of one year's service they should receive something more than simply one year's pay; and I think it will tend to bring men more readily into the service of the country.

Mr. GRIMES. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts, if, at present, volunteers get $100 bounty.

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator now proposes that when a man does not volunteer, but holds back and compels the Government to draft him, he shall get exactly the same compensation in the shape of bounty that is paid to the man who comes forward voluntarily when he gets his discharge. I think this amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say that we offer a bounty of $100 to men to volunteer, and we give $100 to drafted men. We are receiving, I think, about one hundred men per week.

Mr. COLLAMER. Permit me to ask the Senator a question: why do they not pay the commutation that they get at the same rate at which they receive it—$300—as bounty?

Mr. WILSON. I suppose they will do so. But we have a law that offers a bounty of $100 to every man who will enlist, regular or volunteer, and we have a law that any person who is drafted and serves for three years shall receive a bounty of $100. Now, we propose to draft for a term not exceeding one year, and if a man is drafted for one year and goes into the service he receives no bounty at all; nothing but a bare compensation of sixteen dollars a month, and three dollars and a half for clothing. Sir, almost any man can earn from fifty to one hundred dollars per month. Labor is very high, especially skilled labor in the mechanic arts. What we want is men, men now.

Mr. JOHNSON. What do you propose to allow them?

Mr. WILSON. I propose that if drafted men serve their time out, at the end of one year they shall receive a bounty of $100; if called out for a less time, they are to get a proportionate portion of that amount. I think the proposition right and just.

Mr. GRIMES. The argument of the Senator may be a very good one in favor of increasing the monthly compensation to be paid to soldiers, but it seems to me it does not apply at all to this proposition as applicable to the question of conscription. He says it is desirable to fill up our Army. That is true; but are you going to fill it up by giving just as great a bounty to a conscript as you do to a man who goes forward voluntarily and enlists? He says there were but one hundred and twenty-two who volunteered last week or the week before. I can assure him we shall not have one hundred and twenty-two volunteers in another week, if the man who holds back, and requires the Government to be at the expense of enrolling and conscripting him, is to receive exactly the same compensation in the shape of bounty that is given to a man who patriotically comes forward of his own accord and enlists. What is a bounty? It is, as I understand it, an inducement to get a man to do something voluntarily in behalf of the Government.

Mr. CONNESS. A reward.

Mr. GRIMES. A reward to induce him to do willingly that which the Government requires him to do. And yet it is now proposed to pay to the man who is conscripted, who will not go into the service, who requires us to coerce him into the service in order to perform his duty to the Government, exactly the same compensation that is paid to the volunteer.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, I do not know what this enrollment law will be brought to at last. The prospects, I think, are not very good now, so far as its purpose and object may be to put men in the Army.

I have but a very short argument to make against this amendment. If the object of this bill and our object generally is to get soldiers, and the nation can afford to pay $100 bounty to the men who are drafted, why not, in place of giving the volunteers $100, as the law now provides, add that $100 that you propose to give to the drafted man at the end of his period of service, at the time of his discharge, to the bounty of volunteers, and change your law so as to give $200 to each volunteer? If you are going to spend a given amount of money, spend it to induce men to enter your Army, and render a draft unnecessary.

What becomes of the proposition, which no man questions, that the citizen owes service to the Government? Are you to still further attack that proposition, which is the moral one lying at the base of all this matter of getting an army, by sugar-coating it with an expenditure of $100 at the period of discharge of a drafted man?

I suggest and advise the honorable chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to add the amount of money proposed to be given by this amendment to the amount to be offered as a reward for soldiers who are willing to volunteer. Are you going to reduce the period of service to one year, fill up your Army with raw men, and then bankrupt yourself in addition by giving $100 to each man, as an inducement, I suppose, that he will not desert? I hope, sir, that this amendment will find no favor in the Senate. Of all the lavish propositions that have yet been made in connection with the obtaining of men to carry on this war, there is none, it appears to me, so baseless, so without results, as this would be if adopted.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, when the war commenced the people of the country with a great zeal and patriotism rushed into the ranks of the Army, and during the first year of the war more than seven hundred thousand men enlisted into the military service of the United States. That was an immense call upon the labor of the country. At the same time the war depressed nearly all kinds of business, and wages were low throughout the country. We paid these men who enlisted into the service thirteen dollars per month and a bounty of $100 for three years. We found after one year that it would be necessary to make laws to draft men to serve the country in the field. Under all the laws for raising men, we have mustered into the service from the beginning of the war to this time seventeen or eighteen hundred thousand men, averaging three years' service. We have to-day an immense force in the field, a force that occupies vast spaces of territory, almost a continent. We are occupying and holding possession of vast spaces of the country, covering more territory than at any other period; and never did the cause of the country look so hopeful as now. Sir, I have faith in the speedy triumph of our two great armies now in the heart of the rebellion, the army of Grant at Richmond and the army of Sherman in Georgia. We ought to send to those armies all the men that can be spared from every quarter of the country; and I suppose the Government is doing it.

Now, sir, at the present day labor of all kinds receives on an average nearly three times the reward that it received three years ago. Many of the mechanics of the country are earning from seventy-five to a hundred dollars a month, and almost any laboring man can earn fifty dollars a month. We are asking men to enlist into the service for three years. We are offering them a bounty of $100 to enlist; but they do not enlist for that sum. Some of the States are offering bounties of more than $300, and townships and individuals are adding to that amount, and still at the present time we are enlisting but very few men. We have undertaken to draft for about 70,000 men. Last October we called for 300,000 men. That included, however, all the men that had enlisted from the 26th of May, 1863. We then called for 500,000 men in February; but that 500,000 included the 300,000 of October, and made an aggregate call of half a million men. Then we called for 200,000 men in March, making an aggregate call of 700,000 men from the 26th day of May, 1863, to the present time. Those men have been raised. Some of the States have raised in the aggregate about 90,000 more men than were called for. Other States have failed to the amount of about 60,000. The returns of the draft ordered are in for 28,000 men who have been drafted, and of that number we hold about 15,000. About 4,400 men are held, 3,000 furnish substitutes, and 8,400 pay the commutation. The draft gives so far more than fifty per cent. of all the men drafted, an immense improvement on the draft of last year, owing to the amendments of the law during this session.

But it is said that law is not bringing us all the men we ought to have. I admit it; but at the same time I believe if we reduce the time to one year, and give a reasonable bounty to the men who are drafted to go into the service at the end of the year, we can raise all the men we want to raise without repealing the commutation. I believe no more odious act could be done by this Congress than to say to the country, "We make a draft; we repeal the commutation clause; we will compel every man to go himself or furnish a substitute." With these calls for eighteen hundred thousand men that have been so patriotically responded to by the people, with the immense pressure that is made upon the country by the various interests of the country for labor, it will be distasteful to the country to repeal the $300 commutation. If you undertake to enforce such a draft, if you say to the men they shall go into the service for three years, and shall not pay any commutation, you will have a great deal of dissatisfaction all over the country. But, sir, if you fix the period of service at one year and then draft, I believe you can fill your armies easily and rapidly and as fast as they are needed.

I do not make this proposition because of the needs of the country at the present time, or because it may be thought that we are driven to the adoption of it by the perils of the nation. The present condition of the country as regards this rebellion is a hundred per cent. better than at any other day during the rebellion. Sir, I believe if the nation uses the force properly that it now has and the force it can put into the field before the 1st day of January next, the power of the rebellion will be broken. Let Grant triumph over Lee, or Sherman triumph over Johnson and hold all the Southwest, all the Gulf States at his command, as he would if he triumphs over him, and the power of the rebellion is broken. While we have not the numbers estimated by Senators to-day, we have an immense force in the field. It is true that one fourth or one third of that force is not effective for field service. We have from one fourth to one third of our force who could not be made effective men in the field. Sir, you may raise ten thousand men anywhere in the country and bring them into the field and not put them in battle at all, and in six months, from one fourth to one third of those men, by disease and in one way or another, will drop out of the ranks. Our experience I am sure justifies this declaration.

Mr. CONNESS. I offer the following, which I do not desire to debate, as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts. It is to strike out all of the amendment after the word "that," and to insert in lieu thereof:

From and after the passage of this act every able-bodied volunteer who shall be accepted, and who shall enter into the service of the United States, shall be entitled to and receive, after one year's service, $100 in addition to the sum now provided by law.

Mr. McDougall. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, and also to the substitute suggested by my colleague. I should like well if we could now, as this subject is being agitated, place ourselves upon sound ground. It is well known to all Senators that we have been paying to the troops in the field not only bounties from the General Government, but bounties from States, bounties from counties, and bounties from towns, until at the expense of the aggregate Government and of the several departments of Government we have had to secure the services in the field of persons who promised service at the expense often of a thousand dollars and more. It was the right of this Government, and certainly it was within her power, to call upon all the citizens of the Republic subject to military duty to render service in the field. From the commencement of this war and from the time this subject was first discussed here I insisted that it was the right of the Government to demand service from all persons subject to military duty, and it was the obligation and duty of all persons subject to render duty; that the true rule for asserting the right on the part of the Government and enforcing the duty as against the citizen was to place them upon exactly the same footing, and to fairly compensate them for the time they were employed by substituting them in the field and rendering to them reasonable compensation.

I remember that at a very early period of the war I suggested a piece of history as illustrative of the duty of our Government and its true policy: that while the French Directory relied upon volunteers at one time, persons who fell into the army under the excitement of the early years of the Revolution, they failed, they could not maintain their own frontier, and until they adopted the regular conscription they had no victories even in France, scarcely, and none beyond the frontiers of France. I undertook then to suggest that in the old republics, in Greece and Rome, the first citizens considered themselves bound in case of a great public exigency to go into the ranks as private soldiers; that they did so; and that from the fact that men of great worth did enter the ranks (for great worth is generally united to great valor) the battles of Plataea and Marathon were won; and from those considerations the great victories of the old Roman republic, in the days of the republic, were won. In those days all citizens who were subject to bear arms were subject to the call, and had to obey the call.

I opposed this $300 commutation clause when it was first proposed. I opposed the idea of allowing any person on the payment of $300 to be relieved from service. You can make no distinction among citizens as to who are bound to maintain the Constitution and the laws of the Federal Government. If that principle had been adhered to and men subject to service had been called out from the first, we should not have what we now have in the service, a large proportion of mercenary soldiers, not brothers nor sons, not men of our people, perhaps not less gallant for that; but it has resulted in this, that to a large extent our arms are mercenary arms.

There is a wide distinction between the men who have served us in the valley of the Mississippi and those who have served us from the northern and eastern States. There are as gallant soldiers from Massachusetts as from any State; none more gallant than those from the State of Maine or New Hampshire; but a large body of them have been brought into the service who neither belong to the one nor the other, but who follow their standard. Our successes in the West were a marked feature of the early history of the war; and why was it? Every man free to bear arms throughout the West took arms. No one ventured to stay at home. Parents would not permit it; sisters would not permit it; sweethearts would not permit it; and they who went into the field bearing arms had kindred at home, and associations at home, and if they disgraced themselves they dared not return to their own homes. Therefore they fought always gallantly; therefore they were generally successful in their contests.

This is all true of the men of New England, situated as were the old population of the West, for I make no comparison between the two as to the superiority or inferiority of individual gallantry or hardihood. Our American people as a people are all brave; but they are bravest who have something at stake, who represent not merely their individual selves on the battle-field, but who represent fathers, mothers, grandfathers, and all the relations of society.

If we had adhered from the first to the policy of calling for those subject to bear arms and assessed the proper number in the various districts of the States, we could have always had our armies full. If now, without increasing these enormous debts for bounties as against the Federal Government, as against States, as against counties, and as against towns, we adopt the policy of having all those subject to bear arms placed upon the list and properly drafted, and if necessary, if they do not respond, affix such penalties as should be adjudged against those who refuse to serve their country in its peril. If we do this, we will have no necessity for an extraordinary call for troops.

My colleague has suggested an amendment; and in this same connection, by way of embodying my amendment in form, I will now suggest in the form of argument the amendment that I shall propose when I shall have the opportunity to do so. It is to strike out the proviso commencing in the tenth line of the first section:

Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to alter the provisions of existing laws relative to persons actually furnishing substitutes.

And insert:

And from and after ten days from the passage of this act substitutes shall not be allowed in the place of persons subject to draft and regularly drafted into the service of the United States.

It is nothing for a trader in any of our towns either to pay $300 or to raise it by borrowing, and he is excused. Take the young artisan, the blacksmith, if you please. His whole blacksmith shop, anvils, hammers, forge, and all, would not bring $300. He may have a wife for whom, with his unslewed arm, he undertakes to win a livelihood; but being unable to raise $300 he is compelled into the service. The same may be said of the young mechanics and the young farmers; for in the West, with which I am familiar, $300 is considered a great amount of money, and while the old head of the family might be able to raise it, his seven or ten sons could not do it; they are coerced into the service; whereas the trader in the country town, his neighbor, and no better citizen than himself, could release four or five sons by paying the $300.

The proposition that I suggest is absolute justice, because they owe a debt to the country that amount of service whenever the Government demands it. I speak of this as an abstract rule of right, and as a rule that should lie at the foundation of our policy. We should have taken all our people who are subject to bear arms, and apportion them out, of course imposing upon their proper proportions, giving them a proper compensation for their services, nothing more; nothing for bounty, nothing for hire, but simply, a proper compensation, and then require them to render service, and if they do not render service brand them with a brand that will disgrace them as false children of the Republic.

It is in this spirit that I oppose this amendment offered by the gentleman. It is in this spirit that I have opposed all these propositions. In this spirit I opposed the $300 commutation clause and the employment of substitutes. I say let every one, let the rich man's son and the poor man's son, let the mechanic and the merchant, let all men who derive benefit from the Government and are protected by the Government and its laws render equal service. Why should not the man in the city of New York, who, at the age of thirty, has built up a colossal fortune under the protection of our laws, go as willingly and promptly into the field to maintain our rights as the young man in the West who has just plowed his first forty acre field? The merchant in New York has attained his fortune from the benefit and protection of our laws; the young man in the West has an opportunity perhaps under our preemption laws or homestead acts to occupy and break his ground for his first spring crop. The first owes the greatest debt, if the accumulation of fortune can be called an obligation conferred, which is doubtful in my mind; but I say that to maintain the true philosophy and theory of our Government there should be none of these exemptions; all persons who are subject to service and are enrolled for service should go into the field, or else instead of being favored they should be punished.

For this reason I am opposed to the commutation; for this reason I am opposed to substitutes; for this reason I am opposed to bounties. Let all men be equal before the law. That is a popular term, and has received the sanction of men eminent in the use of language and in their humanitarian philosophy. Let all men be equal before the law, and as they are all equal before the law, let them all obey the law; let them all, in obedience to law, maintain the Government which enacts and maintains the law. This whole system is wrong from its beginning. I have always been opposed to it, and I enter my opposition now to this movement. I stand by the bill extinguishing the commutation clause, with this difference, that I would say, and I shall move, that there shall be no substitutes hereafter. Let him who is bound to service and is drafted for service serve without distinction of men, and let them all be equal before the law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. CONNESS] to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest to the Senator from California to modify his proposition, especially the last part of it before we take a vote upon it, unless he can tell us precisely what it means. The amendment proposes to give to a person who shall volunteer for one year $100 in addition to what he now receives. I suggest to the Senator to strike out the words "in addition to what he receives," and then let him stand upon the law. The law provides what he shall receive otherwise. I think that would be better, and there would be no misunderstanding in regard to it. In the form in which it is now put, it is in the form of increased pay.

Mr. CONNESS. I call for the reading of both the amendment of the honorable Senator and the amendment that I offered to it.

The Secretary read the amendment, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That every person who shall be drafted and who shall serve honorably for a period of one year shall receive a bounty of $100, to be paid upon his discharge from the service; and every person so drafted and who shall be honorably discharged after a term of service less than one year shall receive a bounty proportioned to his term of service, to be estimated at the rate herein prescribed for one year's service.

The amendment to the amendment was to strike out all of the amendment after the word "that," and to insert:

From and after the passage of this act every able-bodied volunteer who shall be accepted and who shall enter into the service of the United States shall be entitled to receive after one year's service $100 in addition to the sum now provided by law.

Mr. CONNESS. I think that is clearly a proffer of $100—the amount which the Senator in his amendment proposes to offer at the end of the term of service of the drafted man—to a volunteer in addition to what that volunteer is authorized under present laws to receive. If the Senator can suggest any change in it to make it plainer, I have no objection. I think it is clear as it is.

Mr. GRIMES. I trust the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw his amendment and let both these amendments fall. He has told us the Government is attempting to draft seventy thousand men, and consequently the bounty which he proposes to pay these conscripts will amount to $7,000,000.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator will allow me to say that it does not apply to those seventy thousand men who have been called for. They come in under the laws as they now exist. It is to apply to future calls whatever they may be. If we call for one hundred thousand men, of course it is $10,000,000; if we call for two hundred thousand, it is $20,000,000.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand there is to be a call made for three hundred thousand men. The Senator can therefore very easily figure up the amount that this amendment will subtract from the Treasury.

This proposition is exceedingly unjust. Here is a State that has fully responded to the calls upon it; it has sent into the field three years' men; and here is another State by the side of it that has not responded to its calls. By another provision in this bill it is proposed by the Senator to reduce the length of the call from three years to one year.

Mr. WILSON. I beg your pardon; it does not apply to any State that is short now. They have got to fill up their quotas under the old calls. The bill is plain on that point.

Mr. GRIMES. That depends upon the construction that will be put upon this provision. According to my reading of it, such will be the interpretation that will be put upon it; and if that interpretation be put upon it, which I think the language admits of, then this will be the case: that this last State that has not responded to the call will draft one man three times in order to fill up its quota to correspond with the single draft that is made in the State that has fully responded, and to each of those drafted men there is to be $100 paid; so that the Government will pay to the conscript in the one State where the calls are not responded to $300 in the shape of bounty, while in the other there will be only the bounties that were allowed before. I do not think we are prepared to do this. I do not understand that this amendment is recommended by the War Department, or that it comes from the Military Committee. It is a suggestion of the Senator which I apprehend he has not thought very long about. It strikes me as though there are a multitude of evils that might flow from it if you send your men into the Army as conscripts and give them this misapplied amount of bounty and make them stand side by side with men who last week enlisted in the same neighborhood for the term of three years, but are getting only $100 bounty. I think the Senator will agree with me there will not be very great harmony in the ranks composed of alternate men who have voluntarily gone and received $100 for three years and of these conscripts who have held back until they were compelled to go, and then after being coerced into the ranks receive the same amount from the Treasury that the volunteer has received.

Mr. WILSON. Exact equality of course it would not bring; but you have not that now. For instance, you have the old regiments that enlisted three years ago, some of whom are now passing through the city on their way home, and they enlisted for a bounty of $100 to serve three years. They are now mustered out of the service with a bounty of only $100. In those same regiments are men who came into the service in 1862 with a bounty of $200, and in 1863 and 1864 with bounties of $300 by the United States and $325 by the States, making $625, and $100 or $200 by the townships or by individuals; men in the army of the Potomac in the same company receive a bounty of $100 while other men receive a bounty of $200 or $300, and other men receive bounties running from $600 to $900; and these men now stand to-day side by side, shoulder to shoulder, fighting the battles of the country. Do we have any difficulty about it? Fully one third at least of General Grant's army, that has made marches and fought battles unparalleled in this century anywhere, have gone into the service during the last eight months. These heroic men are the "mercenaries," as they are called here to-day. They are the men who received the bounty of $300 or $400 from the General Government, $325 from States, and more from the towns, making $800 or $900. These men have fought as well and behaved as nobly as any men in the service.

Sir, I think it is wrong in the Senate of the United States, or in the Congress of the United States, to speak of brave men in the service of the country as "mercenaries" because they have taken of their State governments, of their localities, and of the national Government, bounties offered them to go into the service of their country. In the first place they ought to have had a bounty. All kinds of labor are now exceedingly high; the cost of living is high. These men who are fighting our battles have left families behind them as dear to them as our families are to us. They leave them at home and go and peril their lives for the country; perhaps come back maimed and wounded. The man who takes a bounty and uses the money as a man ought to do, to support, protect, and educate his family; that man, who bares his bosom to rebel steel, is just as much a patriot as the man who volunteered for a less sum. It looks to me, in the present condition of the country, that we are expected to pay more for men and ought to pay more than we did in the early days of the war.

Mr. GRIMES. All that is a first-rate argument why the Senator was in error the other day when he introduced his bill increasing the pay of the soldiers. If we do not give them compensation enough, in Heaven's name raise the compensation and give them what they are entitled to. But that is no argument why we should misapply this term and the principle of bounty and give to the conscript what the Senator calls a bounty—give a reward to a man who by law is compelled to perform a duty against his will; for that is the effect of it. We compel the man to go into the Army against his will and perform the duty which he as a citizen is required to perform; and the Senator proposes to reward him exactly as well as he rewards a volunteer.

Mr. WILSON. We do that now.

Mr. GRIMES. No, sir, we do not do it now, and never have done it. The cases the Senator puts were cases where there were volunteers from different States, one State or one county giving to a volunteer who agreed to accept the reward or bounty whatever the county or State might offer, and another one accepting whatever his township or city or county or State might give, and it was a matter of fair understanding and agreement between them and the respective municipal or State or national Governments. But here is a case where you take a man who, perhaps, has been in antagonism to this war, who perhaps has denounced the very men who have gone from his neighborhood to fight our battles for us, who perhaps is known not to be in sympathy either with the Government or the soldiers with whom he is compelled to associate, and the Senator proposes to reward that conscript who is thus forced to go into the ranks as well as he rewards the patriotic and worthy man who voluntarily leaves all the endearments of home and goes into the Army baring his breast in the shock of battle. I say that that is inequitable, that that is not just to the volunteer; and I never will vote for any bill that contains any such provision.

Now, Mr. President, to show whether I was right or not as to the construction of the amendment which the Senator has proposed, I will read it:

And be it further enacted, That every person who shall be drafted—

Not applying to any particular draft—and who shall serve honorably for a period of one year shall receive a bounty of $100, to be paid upon his discharge from the service.

Is there any limitation in the provisions of this section?

Mr. WILSON. It is designed to come in after the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. COLLAMER,] which applies only to future calls, and not to the past at all. This whole bill applies to future calls, and not to the calls of the past.

Mr. COLLAMER. The word "hereafter" should be put in there.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator from Vermont knew exactly what he was at when he offered his amendment. He was designing to prevent a one year drafted man being set off against a three years drafted man. That is all he sought to attain, and he has accomplished it by the amendment that he proposed. But that is not what is accomplished by this amendment without a change of the phraseology that has been made by the Senator:

That every person who shall be drafted and who shall serve honorably for a period of one year shall receive a bounty of $100, to be paid upon his discharge from the service; and every person so drafted—

Not under a future draft, not under a draft that may hereafter be authorized, and be made in consequence of an order that may hereafter emanate from the War Department, but under any draft that may heretofore have been directed to be made by the Department as well—and every person so drafted and who shall be honorably discharged after a term of service less than one year shall receive a bounty proportioned to his term of service, to be estimated at the rate herein prescribed for one year's service.

It seems to me there can be no controversy as to the construction of the language, and there ought not to be any controversy as to the merits of this proposition.

Mr. WILSON. I understood and understand the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont to apply this bill to future calls and not any part of it to those already made and that are being filled up. The draft for seventy thousand will be completed probably in the course of ten or fifteen days. I do not want to disturb or touch that in any respect whatever. I propose, however, to modify my amendment so that it shall read:

That every person who shall be drafted under any call hereafter made and who shall serve, &c.

Mr. COLLAMER. That would relieve it from the objection that was made by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CONNESS. How can the Senator modify his amendment after an amendment has been offered to it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is competent for him to do so, no vote having been taken.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to know of the Senator from Massachusetts how the bounties are regulated to volunteers now?

Mr. WILSON. We pay to volunteers for three years now $100. If we draft a man for three years we pay him $100 bounty. They are both put upon the same footing precisely.

Mr. HOWE. If a man volunteers for three years can he get any bounty unless he serves two?

Mr. WILSON. No; not under the present law.

Mr. HOWE. I had the impression that such was the law; and if it be so it seems to me there is no propriety in this amendment.

Mr. WILSON. But we are not getting any volunteers under the present law, and cannot get them.

Mr. HOWE. This is a proposition to give a bounty to a man for being drafted, not for having volunteered, for it puts a drafted man on a better footing decidedly than you put the volunteer in two respects: you give him the same bounty for one year's service that you give the volunteer for three; and you give the volunteer nothing unless he serves two years; but you give the drafted man the fraction of $100 if he serves but the smallest fraction of a year. It is really taking away all the grace and all the favor which your past legislation has held out to the volunteer, and making it no longer reputable for a man to volunteer. On the contrary, it is saying that you will do more for those who hold back and will not volunteer than for those who have done so.

Mr. WILSON. Admit that; but the truth is we are getting but few volunteers, only about one hundred a week, and we cannot get them. No volunteers can be obtained now unless you pay five or six hundred dollars.

Mr. HOWE. There is no man out of the service but what has had an opportunity to enter the service with $100 bounty, and there is no man but has had an opportunity of receiving the $300 bounty from the Government. They have declined to do it. Your armies want replenishing, and I know of no better way in the world than to draw lots.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose this amendment has been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. WILSON. No, sir, it has not. I have offered it on my own responsibility.

Mr. CONNESS. I rise to withdraw the amendment that I offered to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, so as to get a direct vote upon that amendment. I hope it will not be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I shall only detain the Senate a moment. Early in 1863 the conscription law was passed by which it was provided that for the payment of $300 commutation a drafted man might exempt himself from service. There was an experience of some nine or twelve months under that law. It was found to be wholly inoperative and ineffective. Some months ago a joint resolution was introduced to repeal simply the $300 commutation clause. That joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and they reported it back with a recommendation that it should pass. When it comes into the Senate, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs moves an amendment that the term of service shall be twelve months instead of three years, and now an additional amendment is proposed that a bounty of $100 shall be given to the man who is drafted for twelve months. I am simply in favor of repealing the $300 commutation clause, and so was the committee. The evil intended to be remedied was precisely this; under your previous law you did not succeed in getting men, but in getting the commutation. Now it is proposed to reduce the term of service from three years to one year and give $100 bounty. If the bill assumes that shape I shall vote against the whole of it, believing that the whole object of the repeal has been utterly defeated and annihilated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON. I have another amendment to offer, which I suppose nobody will oppose, because it will cost no money, but save a little. It is to insert as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the sixteenth section of the "Act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, be amended by inserting the word "transportation" in lieu of the words "traveling pay," wherever they occur in said section.

I will state that this amendment is offered on the recommendation of the Department. It has been found that under the words "traveling pay" some frauds have been perpetrated in the country. The word "transportation" expresses the original meaning, and will correct those evils.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I have a few more amendments that I should like to offer. I now move to insert the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That when a soldier, sick in hospital, shall be discharged from the military service but shall be unable to leave or avail himself of his discharge in consequence of sickness or wounds, and shall subsequently die in such hospital, he shall be deemed to have died in the military service.

I will simply say in regard to this amendment that—

Several SENATORS. We will all vote for that.

Mr. WILSON. There are soldiers in the service who are wounded and are discharged but cannot get away from here, and die after their discharge.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I now offer another amendment, to insert as a new section the following:

And be it further enacted, That payments which have been made by paymasters to non-commissioned officers of volunteer regiments from the date of their enlistment and for a time previous to their muster into the service of the United States, shall, if otherwise correct, be allowed in the settlement of such paymasters' accounts.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to have that amendment explained.

Mr. WILSON. The amount of it is simply this: the sergeants and other non-commissioned officers of a regiment cannot be legally and formally appointed until the regiments are organized; but in raising regiments, having the men in camp, it was found necessary to have such officers, and certain men were appointed sergeants or corporals by the persons who were raising the regiments. The paymasters in most of those cases paid those non-commissioned officers from the time of their appointment, although sometimes it was a few weeks before the colonel of the regiment was appointed and they could have their papers. By a ruling of the Department these payments of the paymasters have not been allowed. I think it right that they should be paid.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, if there is not another class of cases that ought to be provided for. I understand they disallow in the Department here payments that were made to regiments before they were mustered in by the United States. In many instances the commanding officer of a department ordered his paymaster to make the payments and he paid upon the rolls that were furnished him; but I understand they are disallowed here in the Department now to very large amounts, and in some cases where the paymaster could do nothing else but pay. They require some law now to adjust these accounts. I ask the Senator if there is any provision for that class of cases?

Mr. WILSON. I understand there were some complaints of that kind. How far they extend, or how much there is in them, I do not know. It is very likely that some legislation is necessary on that subject.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand that the amount is pretty large, especially in the West, and I know that very many of the paymasters are apparently very large defaulters; and it is absolutely necessary that some provision should be made by law by which those accounts should be adjusted.

Mr. WILSON. I will make some inquiry in regard to it, and see whether it is necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McDUGALL. I will now move the amendment that I have indicated to the first section of the bill. In line ten of the first section I propose to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to alter the provisions of existing laws relative to persons actually furnishing substitutes.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

And from and after ten days from the passage of this act substitutes shall not be allowed in place of persons subject to draft and regularly drafted into the service of the United States.

I have advanced my views on this subject, and, not choosing to discuss it further, I simply ask the vote of the Senate upon it. I believe this amendment involves the principle that should either govern or not govern the action of the Government. If the question is well enough understood without discussing it further, I shall content myself with asking for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to express the hope that the Senate will not adopt this amendment. I do not agree to these ideas that have been put forth that the Government ought to cast a drag-net over the nation and say to every man, "Come out; serve the country; you shall have no bounty; you shall pay no commutation; you shall get no substitute." The country is not in any such distressed condition as to require it. We have got the business interests of the country to take care of as well as the military interests. We must get the money to carry on the war, and it is just as necessary to have money to carry on this war as to have the men. We have got to watch and nurse and take care of the agricultural, manufacturing, mechanical, and commercial interests of the country. We have got to look to the condition and interests of the whole country in passing these acts for raising money and men. Sir, after this nation has put at least one million eight hundred thousand men into the field during three years, an amount of men put into war by no nation in Christendom during this generation, to go to the people and say to them, "You shall be drafted into the military service; you shall not get a substitute if one offers," would be deemed oppressive, would create a great deal of ill will toward the Government, and weaken our cause in the country. There is no necessity on earth for such action. If our armies were beaten, if they were on the retreat, if the nation was in despair, we might resort to such stringent measures; but we have been and we are on the march to victory, and we were never so strong as to-day. What I want to do is to gather up all the men we have in the service throughout the country and to push them into the front ranks, and to call for men to fill up our wasting ranks. I think there is no need of resorting to any measure that will be regarded as arbitrary and oppressive by the mass of the people who have made so many sacrifices for their country.

Mr. McDUGALL. Mr. President, during all the period that has expired between the 5th of July, 1861, and the present day of the month of June, 1864, we have heard this same thing, that we are on the eve of victory, and that our power was going to compel our enemies into subjection; and although we are now in the neighborhood of Richmond, I am not any more confident that we are on the eve of triumph than I was in July of that year. Nor do I think those things of which we are advised justify us in the opinion that this war may not continue for quite a long period. I am not one of those who believe that the taking of Richmond and Petersburg and Lynchburg is going to solve the problem which is presented to the American people; and this shouting Io triumphe before any considerable triumph has been won, in my judgment, is vain talk.

I know we have a great and gallant Army both in the West and in the East. I know we are advancing against what we have learned to be a body of desperate, determined, and organized men; and I have learned to believe that they do not consider the problem solved with themselves when all Virginia shall be occupied by our troops. It was the first proposition of the cotton States of the South that they should disintegrate themselves entirely in their policy from Virginia, Tennessee, Kentucky, Maryland, and Missouri, and organize a government of their own; and when they shall be forced into the country which they themselves claim particularly, perhaps then may come the hug and the tug of war.

We cannot promise ourselves a conclusion this campaign. I do not think that that man whom I call the best general in our service, an officer who has proved himself the equal of all occasions as far as was within the limits of science and courage—General Grant himself—would pronounce as an absolute conclusion of his own judgment that he could in this campaign coerce even the capital of the rebellion. Let us not have this song of triumph or this shout of courage. It was said in 1861 that individual gentlemen could take twenty thousand men and march from the shores of the Potomac through Richmond to Mobile and New Orleans, and would meet with no equal armies. That has been the weak opinion of uninformed men, although sometimes of men high in office.

Let us look carefully at what we have got before us, and consider that we may have a war not merely of three years but of ten years, and then look to what shall be a sound, proper public policy. I can see no peace, I can see no prosperity, I can see no general happiness, no domestic happiness throughout this land until this war is ended, and it must be ended by some commanding results. Who can promise them to-day? I suppose the Secretary of War, with his great military prescience, might assure us; but who would have confidence in him? I suppose many other men who have occupied many high military positions, such as Major General Butler, might promise us triumph in his aid to Grant's movements in a brief period. We have had no promise from General Grant himself; and the advised judgment of the best men, so far as I have been able to learn, has not been able to promise any definite results within a given period.

It is my firm conviction that until we organize war upon true principles we can have no such definite results as will establish peace. I have differed from the majority of the Senate as to that policy, particularly as to organizing armies. I differ from them now again as the question is again before the Senate. I think it is time for us to consider the experience of the past, to consider whether we should not go to work regularly to produce by a regular system and to bring out that force in the field that should be by every law, moral as well as political, subject to the Government, and who should maintain that Government at the peril of life—the proper and legitimate force of the country, irrespective of classes of society, irrespective of the wealth of individuals, regarding every citizen of the Republic, every man owing allegiance to the Government as standing upon the same footing, bound to yield obedience to the laws, having it as a duty to sustain the laws, and having it as a duty to bear arms in the maintenance of the Constitution and the laws.

That I am right in this proposition as a matter of principle, as a policy in Government, that it is an essential element of all free systems of Government, in my mind admits of no possible doubt. All history teaches that I am right. Our past history in this present war has taught that I am right; and if we shall have another and a longer history in the future, that history will teach that I have been right; for the same opinions, the same policy, the same theory I shall maintain as the only true policy of a republican Government where the individual citizen is one of the sovereigns, and where it belongs to his office to maintain the Constitution and the laws, and that it is particularly charged by our system of Government upon all those capable and bound to bear arms.

Mr. HOWE. I shall certainly vote against inserting the proposition of the Senator from California; but before I know whether to vote for striking out the proviso I should like the Senator from Massachusetts to tell me what the present provisions of law are in reference to furnishing substitutes. What is the effect of furnishing a substitute?

Mr. WILSON. I understand that a person drafted may furnish a substitute provided that substitute is not liable to draft; and if the substitute becomes liable to draft before the three years have expired, then the principal is liable; if not, he is exempted for three years.

Mr. HOWE. I see no reason in the world why those provisions should not be continued. I am as much in favor of abolishing the commutation clause as anybody; but if a man is drafted and is willing to pay a sum which another man is willing to take to go into the service in his stead I do not see the slightest objection the Government can have to allow those two to make the trade.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 6, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Doolittle, Grimes, McDougall, Ramsey, and Wilkinson—6.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Cardie, Clark, Colamer, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Foot, Foster, Harlan, Harris, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomroy, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, and Wilson—35.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Fessenden, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Saulsbury, and Wright—8.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I offer an amendment to insert the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That every non-commissioned officer, private, or other person who has been or shall hereafter be discharged from the Army of the United States within two years from the date of their enlistment by reason of injuries received in the line of duty shall be entitled to receive the same bounty as is granted, or may hereafter be granted, to the same classes of persons who are discharged after a service of two years; and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

I can explain in ten or twenty words the object of this amendment. By the act of 1863, the bounty of $100 which was given to veterans under the act of 1861 who had served two years or during the war was extended to the non-commissioned officers and privates who were discharged within the period of two years by reason of wounds received in battle. According to a construction of the War Department if a man is injured in battle in any other way than by shot or shell, he is regarded as not having received a wound in battle. For instance, if a soldier is injured by his horse falling upon him, or if a shell should strike off the limb of a tree and the limb should fall upon him, he is excluded from the privileges of this act. I understand the construction is so strict that if a man is shot while on picket duty, they will hold that it is not a wound received in battle. I believe they went so far the other day as to refuse the payment of the bounty to a soldier who had a certificate that he had been wounded at Gettysburg because it did not appear that he had been wounded in battle; but still that was a matter that could be easily remedied. The object of my amendment is to meet a class of persons equally meritorious, who are equally entitled to the bounty, who have been discharged from the service by reason of injuries received in the line of their duty; and that is the whole of it. It extends the provisions of the act of 1863, which, according to a strict construction, is confined to persons who are discharged in consequence of wounds from gun-shot and shell in the actual crash of battle to such soldiers as may have been discharged in consequence of injuries received in the line of their duty.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to inquire if the language employed in the amendment would not cover the case of persons discharged by reason of sickness contracted in the service.

Mr. TEN EYCK. No, sir; the language is, "injuries received in the line of their duty."

Mr. SHERMAN. It ought to be "wounds."

Mr. HENDRICKS. "Injuries or disability."

Mr. TEN EYCK. That might apply to cases of sickness perhaps. That is the objection to that.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "injuries" the words "or disability." I cannot see the reason for the distinction which the Senator's amendment makes. I think the condition of the soldier who is taken sick and loses his health because of sickness is equally to be regarded by Congress as the condition of the soldier who is wounded.

Mr. TEN EYCK. It seemed to me that perhaps this was going far enough now. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana would open the door to a very great variety of cases, and would admit of very broad construction. It would be very difficult indeed to determine in a great variety of cases whether the sickness to which the Senator from Indiana refers was actually occasioned by the soldier's condition in the line of his duty. I thought perhaps it was far enough to go to embrace the clear, distinct cases of actual injuries received in the line of duty, such as I referred to: a horse falling upon a trooper in the midst of a charge, or a limb shot from a tree by a shell and falling upon a soldier. That is a distinct fact which can be ascertained and established, and about which there can be no doubt or deception. If it should hereafter be considered advisable to extend it, let it be extended. My amendment is in precisely the same language as the act of 1863, inserting the words "injuries received in the line of his duty" in the place of "wounds received in battle." It is not repealing it, but merely extending it.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is rather an invidious task to oppose this class of amendments, but it is well enough for us to consider the effect of extending our bounty system in this case. I do not know how many hundreds of thousands of men would be embraced in it and would receive a bounty of $100 or $200 under it. Senators do not seem to care much about the money that it will cost; and probably considering the condition of the soldier we ought not to do so; but now what is the condition of the question? These men enlisted with an understanding that if they served three years and were then discharged, in addition to their pay, pensions, &c., they should get $100 bounty. Subsequently the law was extended so that if a soldier was wounded in battle and thus disabled he should receive his bounty the same as if he had served for three years. Now it is proposed to extend the payment of this bounty to almost every soldier who has been discharged for any cause whatever. He may have been disabled when he went into the service; his enlistment may even have been a fraud upon the Government; and yet the effect will be, especially if the amendment of the Senator from Indiana be adopted, that in addition to his pay, in addition to all the Government has lost by his enlistment, the Government shall also pay him the additional sum of $100 or $300 in bounty. When you consider that from three fifths to three fourths of the men who are discharged from the service are discharged for illness or sickness or disability of various causes and not one tenth for wounds in battle, you see you are now extending the principle of bounties to at least twice or three times the number of cases embraced by the present law. Is it not well worth while for us to consider this matter?

This proposition has never been considered by the Committee on Military Affairs. What is the Committee on Military Affairs for, unless it is to take up and examine these things seriatim and give us the proper language to convey precisely the meaning of the law? The Senator from New Jersey, who, no doubt, is very accurate in his statement, makes his proposition, and we are called upon to vote upon it. It is very hard to resist an appeal in behalf of a soldier disabled in the service; but at the same time this is an extension of the principle of bounty such as was never known in our law before. These soldiers, when disabled by sickness, get their pensions; they get their pay; they get more than they expected to get. It seems to me we ought not to adopt a principle that will be so extensive as this. I shall not vote for it, whatever other Senators may do.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understood this morning when we proceeded to the consideration of this bill that it was a very important bill in relation to the commutation question, and I, for one, voted to have it brought before the Senate. Now, sir, if we are to perfect the whole military system and the pension system and the bounty system on this bill, we shall never accomplish anything if it is to be done in the Senate in this way. A majority of the Committee on Military Affairs, as I understand, reported a simple proposition which was regarded of very great importance, and we are proceeding here by amendments, first from one and then another, and discussing them, to perfect the whole military system and pension system and bounty system, upon this bill. I know some members of the Senate who are anxious to bring this session to a close, anxious to dispose of the important business before the Senate; but we have passed this day, and we have accomplished nothing so far. I hope that Senators will allow a vote to be taken upon these questions as they shall be proposed, and let us dispose of this bill one way or the other. For one, I desire to say that I shall vote against all these propositions which are brought in upon this bill. I am willing to vote directly upon the bill that is recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs; and unless the amendments offered are germane in some way to perfect that proposition, for myself I shall vote against the whole of them, with a view of getting some action upon what is regarded by the Military Committee as a very important matter.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not think the objection made by the Senator from New Jersey to the amendment which I propose is sufficient to control the judgment of the Senate. Is it right because a man meets with an accident, a limb falls from a tree and his leg or arm is broken, that he shall have his bounty? I agree with the Senator that he ought. The illustration is forcible. But suppose he is taken with disease by reason of his regiment being encamped in an unhealthy locality or for any other cause, and that disease may more permanently impair his health than the loss of a limb for the time being, shall he not have his bounty? I do not think the proposition of the Senator from New Jersey is complete and is what it ought to be. I think if a soldier enters the service with the assurance of a bounty, and he is compelled to leave the service before the time expires when he would be entitled to bounty under the existing law, he should have a bounty in proportion to the length of time that he has served. If the amendment I have now proposed should be adopted, then I expect to propose further to amend the proposition of the Senator so as to provide that the bounty to be received shall only be in proportion to the length of time that he has served. If he is entitled to $100 for three years' service and serves but two years, let him have two thirds of that bounty; if he serves but half the time requisite to obtain the full bounty, let him have half of it. This is fair, and I think Congress ought to adopt it.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I am loth, sir, to add a single word, and were it not that the situations and the services of the persons for whose benefit this amendment is proposed justify me, I should content myself with submitting the amendment to the judgment of the Senate. Now, without appealing to my friend, the Senator from Illinois, for permission to offer an amendment of this kind, or to submit any observations, I trust his patience will be so extensive and long-suffering as to endure for a moment while I submit an additional reason or two or rather make a reply to one or two remarks.

Before doing that, however, I do not pretend to say that my amendment is perfect. My attention was called by an intelligent and worthy gentleman to this state of things: that there were a large number of cases of soldiers who were violently injured and were disabled for life, as effectually prevented from earning a livelihood in consequence of the injuries they had received in the line of their duty as if they had received a shot or a shell in their bodies or lost a leg or an arm. It was with a view to meet that class of cases and extending this bounty to such persons, and such alone, where there could be no danger of fraud or deception or deceit, that I was induced to offer this amendment. It did not come from any committee; but I submitted the amendment to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. It was not requisite that I should do so, but I conferred with him in relation to the matter, and it seemed to him to be just and proper, and it was with his approbation that the amendment was offered. I believe, however, it is not out of order to offer an amendment, even if it has not been submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs; and I think it is the usual course for a Senator to propose upon bills of this description matters which are germane, although they may not be exactly the same identical thing or an elaboration of the bill which is reported by the committee. Otherwise, there would be no such thing as an amendment to a bill.

The reason why I offer the proposition now in the shape of an amendment instead of proposing it as an original bill, as I designed to do, was because I knew that Senators were anxious to have this session brought speedily to a close, and that there would be no other way of passing this measure than in the shape of an amendment to some bill to which it was germane, and that if I attempted to bring it in as an original measure it could not pass both Houses at the present session. That is my apology, if any apology is needed, for being so unreasonable as to undertake to force this amendment at this time upon the attention of the Senate when they are justly wearied by the protracted discussion and by the numerous amendments that have been submitted by divers gentlemen, the chairman of the committee among others, for the purpose of perfecting this bill.

I am perfectly willing myself, if the Senate think well of it, to extend this amendment to meet the case of the soldier who is permanently disabled in consequence of sickness; but it occurred to me that would afford a greater opportunity for fraud and deception. There would be very great difficulty in ascertaining whether the disability in such a case really did arise from sickness actually growing out of the service. The Senator from Ohio says that a person going into the service might be disabled before he went in. If that fact could be established, that person would not come within the provisions of my amendment.

I am not tenacious of the form in which my amendment shall pass the Senate. My object is to extend the provisions of this act, its beneficial effects and aid, toward the support of the disabled soldier whose disability is as permanent and whose merits are as great as those of the soldier who actually happens to receive a gunshot wound or a wound from a shell in the actual conflict of battle, and that men who are risking their lives day and night far out on the front on picket duty, and who lose an arm or a leg in the most hazardous and gallant service, shall not lose, under a construction of the War Department, the benefit of the provision of the law that was meant to apply to their case.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I never make an apology for expressing my opinions upon any subject at any time. I intend to vote for the amendment and for the amendment to the amendment. I will vote for them together or separately, because I believe them both to be right. I believe that when a man becomes disabled in the service of his country either by casualty, as is proposed to be provided for by the amendment, or by sickness, as is proposed to be provided for by the amendment to the amendment, he is entitled to the same reward as though his disability resulted from wounds in battle; and I believe he is entitled to more consideration, because the man who is disabled in battle has a glorious memory connected with his disability, which he who is disabled by casualty or sickness has not. It is an inspiring memory that carries its solace through life. It encourages and sustains the man who is wounded in the shock of battle throughout all his subsequent life; but the disability that results from the falling of the limb of a tree or from that wasting sickness that disables so many more men in the Army than the shock of battle itself, has no such comforting recollection as that. For that reason I believe that those who lose their health by disease are more legitimate subjects for sympathy and for bounty than those who are disabled even by wounds.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I suggest to the Senator to say half past seven. It is rather inconvenient for some of us to get here by seven o'clock.

Mr. WILSON. I will say half past seven if Senators desire it.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no; say seven o'clock.

Mr. WILSON. As that seems to be the general desire I will insist on my original motion, that the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I venture to express the hope, as I feel somewhat interested in it, and I think the debate has closed upon it, that the Senator will allow the vote to be taken on the pending amendment before the recess.

Mr. WILSON. I am afraid that amendment will cover more than the Senator imagines at present, and I desire gentlemen to have an opportunity to look at it carefully.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Is the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts amendable? Can I move to amend it so as to say half past seven o'clock?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is not amendable, but the Senator can make that motion, and that being the longest time, it will take precedence.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then I will make that motion. Many of us cannot get here by seven o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question returns on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, that the Senate now take a recess until seven o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven o'clock, p. m.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the committees indicated below:

The bill (No. 446) to regulate prize proceedings and the distribution of prize money, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (No. 532) to establish certain post roads—to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The bill (No. 534) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to provide for the education of naval constructors and steam engineers, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The joint resolution (No. 99) reserving mineral lands from the operation of all acts passed at the present session granting lands or extending the time of former grants—to the Committee on Public Lands.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 54) to incorporate the Metropolitan Railroad Company in the District of Columbia; and, on motion of Mr. GRIMES, it was

Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the said bill, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

Mr. MORRILL, Mr. WILLEY, and Mr. WADE were appointed the committee on the part of the Senate.

COMPENSATION OF LAND OFFICERS.

Mr. HARLAN. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 312) to regulate the compensation of registers and receivers of the land offices in the State of Iowa in the location of lands by States and corporations under grants from Congress, to report it back with an amendment, and I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that hereafter in the location of lands by States and corporations under grants from Congress for railroads and other purposes, except for agricultural colleges, in the State of Iowa, the registers and receivers of the land offices in that State in the districts where such lands may be located shall be entitled to receive for their services a fee of two dollars for each final location of one hundred and sixty acres, to be paid by the State or corporation making such location, which fees are to be accounted for in the same manner as fees and commissions on warrants and preemption locations, with the limitations as to maximums of salary prescribed by existing laws, in accordance with such instructions as shall be given by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The Committee on Public Lands reported the bill with an amendment to add the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company may so far change or modify the location of the uncompleted portion of its line, as shown by the map thereof now on file in the General Land Office, so as to secure a better and more expeditious route to the terminus of said line on the Missouri river, said new line to be located within the limits of the land grant made by the United States to aid in its construction; and said change shall not impair the right to nor change the location of their present land grant. A map of the change shall be filed with the Commissioner of the General Land Office within one year after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa why this bill is not made general, to apply to other States as well as Iowa. It proposes to give compensation for new and additional services.

Mr. HARLAN. It is to compensate them for work which they have heretofore done gratuitously. In Iowa there is very little public land except that embraced in railroad grants, and as the officers receive but $500 a year salary, and would be compelled to keep their offices open throughout the whole year, it is deemed to be insufficient in that State. In other land States there is other business to be done, homestead entries, and also other entries; so that probably in nearly all the other States, if not all, they are receiving other compensation, besides their salary. In Iowa they will not receive perhaps ten dollars a year in excess of the $500 salary on account of the passage of the railroad bills which have been passed at this session. The amendment proposed by the committee is to enable one of the railroads in Iowa to change in some trivial respects the line of its road.

Mr. GRIMES. My impression is that two dollars is a little more money than ought to be required as a fee in making those entries for quarter sections. I propose to amend the bill by reducing the fee from two dollars to one dollar, if that will meet the approval of my colleague.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. I desire to move another amendment, to strike out in the sixth line the words "in the State of Iowa;" and in the seventh line to strike out the words "in said State," and insert "in the several States and Territories," leaving it general in its application. It will then read:

That from and after the passage of this act, in the location of lands by States and corporations under grants from Congress for railroads and other purposes, except for agricultural colleges, the registers and receivers in the several States and Territories in the districts where such lands may be located, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HARLAN, the title was amended so as to read: A bill to regulate the compensation of registers and receivers of the land offices in the several States and Territories in the location of lands by States and corporations under grants from Congress, and for other purposes.

COTTON SPECULATIONS BY OFFICERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will resume the consideration of the bill which was under consideration at the time of the recess.

Mr. POWELL. At the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENDERSON] who is sick in his lodgings, I will ask that the communication of the Secretary of War transmitting the report made by the commission, at the head of which was Major General McDowell, to investigate certain cotton transactions, be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion will go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not want it to go there. When that resolution was introduced by the Senator from Missouri, at my suggestion the Senate amended the resolution so as to call for the testimony that had been filed by General Curtis and others in rebuttal of the charges that had been preferred against them. The Secretary of War has sent here the evidence taken by the commission, but has sent none of those papers in rebuttal; and before there is any order made to print the report of the commission I wish to have a resolution passed drawing out in some way or other the testimony that was filed in vindication of the characters of the men who were assailed by the report of General McDowell.

Mr. POWELL. I have no objection to that testimony being printed; but I hope this motion will be allowed to go to the Committee on Printing. I will vote for the Senator's resolution tomorrow with great pleasure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion can only be entertained by unanimous consent, another subject being properly before the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. I prefer to leave the report where it is, and let all go to the Committee on Printing together. I do not know how much it will cost to print this report, but I suppose several thousand dollars; perhaps twenty or thirty thousand dollars. It is a vast amount of manuscript. I have never seen so large a pile brought into the Senate as composed this report.

Mr. POWELL. I will suggest to the Senator from Iowa that this matter had better go to the Committee on Printing, and it will be retained there until he can have time to obtain the other testimony. I am a member of that committee, and I assure him I will not press it until he can have an opportunity to obtain the other testimony.

Mr. GRIMES. I prefer that it should lie in the custody of the Senate until I can get the testimony that is in the Executive Department somewhere in defense of these men.

Mr. POWELL. It will be in the custody of the Senate after it goes to the Committee on Printing, and even if they report in favor of printing it it has to come back before the Senate before the order can be made.

Mr. GRIMES. I think here is the place for it, in the Senate.

Mr. POWELL. Under the rule, the motion will go to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion cannot be entertained at the present time, unless by unanimous consent. Is objection made?

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir; I object.

WILLIAM YOCUM.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the Senate to take up the report of the Committee on Printing in favor of printing the communication from the President of the United States in relation to the charges, judgment, and proceedings in the case of William Yocum. I ask that the order to print be made in conformity to the report of the committee. It will only cost about twenty or thirty dollars, I am told.

The report was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

PERFORMANCE OF MILITARY DUTY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 286) to prohibit the discharge of persons from liability to military duty by reason of the payment of money, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. HENDRICKS to the amendment of Mr. TEN EYCK.

Mr. TEN EYCK. For the purpose of making it more agreeable to the Senate, and to prevent the improper application of this bounty, I will ask leave to modify my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can modify his amendment, no vote having been taken upon it.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Then I will modify it by striking out the words "injuries received," and inserting "permanent injuries received, or permanent disability contracted in," and after the word "bounty" to insert the words "in proportion to the time he may have served," so that the amendment will read:

And be it further enacted, That every non commissioned officer, private, or other person who has been, or shall hereafter be, discharged from the Army of the United States, within two years from the date of their enlistment, by reason of permanent injuries received, or permanent disability contracted, in the line of duty, shall be entitled to receive the same bounty in proportion to the time he may have served, as is granted, or may hereafter be granted, to the same class of persons who are discharged after a service of two years; and all acts and part of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be on the amendment to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator from New Jersey, I believe, has so modified his amendment that I do not care to amend it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator withdraw his amendment to the amendment?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to ascertain whether I am correct about it. Perhaps it had better be reported again as modified.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is not exactly what I desire, but of course I accept that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator withdraw his amendment to the amendment?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey as modified.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to say one word upon that. I cannot conceive how any Senator can object to the amendment proposed. It proposes to give to the soldier permanently disabled the proportion of his bounty for the time that he has served. If we do not do this act of justice, there is no use of talking here any more about our devotion to the soldier.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I have a very small amendment that I wish to offer. I regret to have to offer any amendments to the bill; but I offer this on the suggestion of a very strong letter of the acting Surgeon General of the Army, who states to me that it is impossible to get the work done now at the rates that are paid. It is to insert the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That from and after the 1st day of July, 1861, hospital matrons shall be entitled to and receive twelve dollars per month and one ration.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to strike out the first section of the bill, as follows:

That so much of the act entitled "An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, and the acts amendatory thereof, as authorizes the discharge of any drafted person from liability to military service by reason of the payment of $300 for the procurement of a substitute or otherwise, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to alter the provisions of existing laws relative to persons actually furnishing substitutes.

Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FOOT. I will say a word or two, sir, explanatory of the vote I shall give upon this proposition of amendment to strike out the first section of the bill.

The bill under consideration having been so amended as to limit the term of service under the draft to a single year instead of three years, as heretofore, I am disinclined to vote for the repeal of the commutation clause, commonly so called, in the existing law. I am inclined to think we had better let it stand as it is.

I do not apprehend any serious difficulty in raising the requisite number of men under a draft for a single year, even if the commutation clause be left un repealed. A very large proportion of drafted men who would avail themselves of the commutation provision under a draft for a term of three years would not be likely to do so under a draft for a single year. The effect of the commutation provision is, and such in part at least was the intent, to restrict exorbitant pecuniary exactions for substitutes; and so far forth its operation has been in behalf of men of small pecuniary ability.

I need spend no time, however, upon this question. The advantages and the disadvantages of the privilege of commutation have been often and fully explained, and are well understood. Practical experience has made its operation familiar to everybody; and no one now attempts to misrepresent or to pervert the effect and intent of the law in this regard.

Believing, then, that we shall be able to raise the required number of men under a draft for a single year, notwithstanding the commutation clause may remain in force, and regarding this provision as a beneficial one in its operation, and one especially which takes away, in a great measure, the oppressiveness and odium of a draft without essentially impairing its effectiveness when the term of service is not to exceed a single year, I am disposed, as at present advised, to vote against the repeal of that provision. Without the amendment which has been adopted in Committee of the Whole, reducing the term of service from three years to a single year, I should have felt constrained to vote for the repeal of that provision for the reasons set forth by the War Department and communicated to Congress by the Executive; but the limitation of the term of service to one year instead of three, in my judgment removes, in a great measure, the objections to this provision, and so far forth obviates the necessity of its repeal.

It is after all a question of expediency depending upon contingencies, of which every member, of course will form and act upon his own judgment. The expediency, I admit, of retaining the commutation clause depends upon reducing the term of service from three years, as by the existing law, to one year, as proposed by the amendment to this bill. Again, the expediency of this reduction depends upon the prospects and the probabilities of an early termination of the war, of which also every member will judge for himself in casting his vote. I give my vote upon these questions upon the assumption, at least with the hope, and with some degree of confidence of an early conclusion of the war, I hope during the present campaign; but as I have already remarked, that is a contingency of which every member must judge and act for himself, and of course they will.

The question was asked, and asked pertinently and with significance, if not with something of sarcasm, by my honorable friend from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS,] the other day, if it was expected this war would terminate during the present or coming year. He asked us the question emphatically, how long is this war, this "horrid war," as he denominates it, to continue? That is a question none of us can answer, Mr. President. The war has already continued much longer than any of us had hoped, and much longer than many of us had anticipated. But if my honorable friend will answer me how long this rebellion, this "horrid" rebellion is to continue, he will furnish us a good criterion by which we can judge how long the war will continue. I think the war will terminate when the rebellion terminates, no sooner and no later; and I think that is the will and the determination and will be the responsive voice of the great body of the loyal, earnest, patriotic American people of all parties and of all sections of the country.

But, sir, I do not mean to allow myself to be betrayed into anything like a partisan or political debate upon these questions in the Senate. I simply rose to explain in a word the reason of the vote I shall give in favor of the amendment moved by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. McDOUGALL. After the result of the attempt on my part to amend the bill by striking out the provision allowing parties to procure substitutes, and making all the persons subject to draft liable to serve, the voice of the Senate, by a very large majority, being in favor of retaining that provision, it seems to me to follow that there should be some limit placed upon what should be demanded as the price of a substitute. The object of the bill, as I now understand it, is to enable persons to procure substitutes at any price, so that it shall be a subject for the market. I have been opposed all the time to this method of subsidizing citizens; but if that is to be the rule, then I would like to have the Government make the rule. I shall therefore support the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana, to leave the law to stand as it does now. To strike out the commutation clause and enforce the draft would place every person subject to the draft to an ununiform rule, and to great outrage.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. This motion of my colleague, as I understand it, is to strike out the first section of the bill which repeals the $300 commutation clause. If that be stricken out, there is certainly nothing in the bill for which any Senator need contend or have the least possible interest. The whole body and soul of the bill is the repeal of this commutation clause. Upon that have been incorporated certain amendments which I think have destroyed the efficiency of the bill as it now stands.

If I understood the position of the distinguished Senator from Vermont, [Mr. FORT.] it was this: that he would vote now against the repeal of the $300 clause, because the term of draft had been reduced from three years to one year; and he believed that very few would avail themselves of the benefit of that clause because the term had been thus reduced. Sir, we are not without experience on that subject. The draft in the fall of 1862 was only for nine months, and almost as many men paid their commutation then as were brought into the service under that law. And now, when it is more difficult to obtain soldiers, if you retain the $300 commutation clause and draft for one year, you will not get ten per cent. upon your draft; your armies will be exhausted; and at the end of this campaign you will be in a position of giving up the contest without an army. Sir, if we are to pursue this contest in earnest we should draft, and draft for three years, and make men serve when they are drafted.

It is true, as Senators around me say, that we obtained but seven per cent. of those drafted for three years; but I suppose we shall get no more for one year. The reason why we draft at all is because men are not willing to volunteer. It is an involuntary matter to bring them into the service either for one year or three years, and I cannot conceive that the argument will hold good. We tried the draft for nine months, and we saw how many paid the commutation; we found that the law was an utter failure. If this amendment should be adopted, I care not what other amendment may be adopted, I shall feel constrained to vote against the whole bill, for it is utterly idle and a mockery.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to say one word in reply to my colleague. He forms his opinion as to the result of drafting, retaining the $300 clause, from the report of the Provost Marshal General made through the Secretary of War, as I suppose. I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in a speech this afternoon that, upon an examination of the whole subject, so far as the drafting has gone, we have realized of the men drafted and of substitutes furnished by drafted men fifty per cent. of the number drafted. There were about eighteen districts selected by the Provost Marshal General in eight different States and sent to the Secretary of War, and that was sent to the Senate to guide its judgment. As soon as it was read to the Senate and I had an opportunity to express my opinion of it, I said the judgment of the Senate could not well rest upon a report like that. It is not worthy of the respectful consideration of the Senate for a moment. That eighteen districts out of eight different States presenting as favorably as possible the peculiar views of the Provost Marshal General should be sent in here is no guide for us, as I thought then and as I am now assured by the statement of the chairman of the committee. The chairman I understand to have examined the whole subject as it now appears from the returns in the Provost Marshal General's office, and to have said in his speech this afternoon that it has thus far resulted in about fifty per cent. instead of seven per cent.

Mr. WILSON. I saw this morning of the number of men who had been drafted through the whole country a list of about 28,000 returned to the office. There were 4,400 in the list held, that is, those who will go or pay the money or obtain a substitute; over 2,900, in round numbers 3,000, substitutes were furnished, and 8,400 had paid the commutation money, showing that more than fifty per cent. of all that had been drafted had been held to service in some form, either to go themselves, furnish substitutes, or pay the money. If we are to draft only for one year, and the man drafted may go himself or get a substitute, or may pay the $300, in my judgment we shall get five men for one year easier than we can get one man for three years under this act if the commutation should stand just as it is and we should go on vigorously drafting under it. I believe we would fill up our Army very readily under it with this change of time. That is my judgment.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. The statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, is not that fifty per cent. of the men have been obtained, but that out of 28,000 drafted 2,700 men have been obtained and some 5,000 have paid their commutation.

Mr. WILSON. Eight thousand four hundred paid commutation.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. Eight thousand four hundred paid commutation and 2,700 have stood the draft.

Mr. WILSON. Three thousand obtained substitutes and 4,400 will get substitutes or pay the money. The time has not yet expired for all of them to report. Over 2,000 of them have not yet reported.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. What I wish to direct the attention of the Senate to is this: out of 28,000, 2,700 or less have stood the draft, some 8,000 have paid the commutation, 4,000 have hired substitutes, and some others have not reported, as their time is not out; and it will stand in that proportion till the end of time; and if you do not repeal this clause you will get no drafted men under your law.

Mr. WILSON. Twenty-eight thousand men have been drafted. A little more than fifty per cent., about 15,000 of the 28,000 have been held to service in some form; the others were discharged for disability. Fifty per cent. is about all we can hold under a draft. If we draft for 100 men we perhaps can get 50. Out of that 15,000, 4,400 were put down as held to service, 3,000 furnished substitutes, and 3,400 paid commutation. You have, therefore, got the money for 8,400 men, you have got 3,000 substitutes, and you have got between two and three thousand men who report themselves. The balance will either go themselves, pay the money, or furnish substitutes; and that is not yet determined, because their time is not out.

Mr. McDUGALL. If I understand the figures aright, less than one seventh of those who were drafted responded to the draft in person.

Mr. WILSON. There were only 15,000 held in all.

Mr. McDUGALL. I thought there were 28,000.

Mr. WILSON. There were 28,000 drafted, and of them but about 15,000 were held. The remainder were discharged for disability of some kind. Those 15,000 were divided as I have stated. This is a great deal better than we used to do under the old law before we amended it at the last session, fifty per cent. better. With this change of the term of service to one year, I believe we shall easily obtain substitutes for $300, and we can fill up the Army, in my judgment, very rapidly if the commutation is allowed to stand, and if it is repealed you can do it.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs one question to see that I understand him. Out of 28,000 drafted men 15,000 were held. Now, is it not true that less than 3,000 have answered the draft in person?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. All the rest have hired substitutes or paid commutation. We have got 2,700 men out of a draft of 28,000. That is the whole of it, without going any further.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not understand it so at all.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. That is the truth about it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am not sure that I understand the chairman of the committee. We have drafted 28,000 men; but in relation to that draft as in relation to all other drafts a certain proportion of the men drafted are found not to be fit for service. Of that 28,000, therefore, only 15,000 were found fit for service. What I want to know of the honorable member from Massachusetts, if he can tell me, is, how many men did we get into the service out of that 15,000 by being personally held to service, by those who furnished substitutes, and by men who were procured with the commutation which was paid into the Treasury? How many men came into the field?

Mr. WILSON. We cannot ascertain exactly, because the time is not yet out for all the men held to report. I will state it again, and I want the Senator from Maryland to listen.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am listening.

Mr. WILSON. We held 15,000 out of the 28,000 who were drafted lately. That number of men are divided in this form in the figures that I examined this morning: 4,400 were put down as held, that is to personal service, 3,000 had furnished substitutes, and 8,400 had paid the money. You received the money for 8,400, you had 3,000 substitutes, and you had 4,400 held, although it is probable that of that 4,400 held to personal service some will obtain substitutes or pay the money in course of time as their time is not out. It will be remembered that not long since, when we had reported here the result of a draft for 14,000 men, just half of this, about 1,200 or 1,300 of that number reported themselves, and about 1,500 or 1,600 obtained substitutes. If the same ratio is preserved now, probably somewhere from 2,500 to 3,000 of these 4,400 men will respond personally. If say 2,500 have responded, then we have got 5,500 out of 15,000, besides what we have raised in money.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is my fault; but I am a little more confused now than I was before. I want to know if the honorable member can tell me how many men under that draft of 28,000 we have got into the field. I understand him to say that there were only 15,000 of the whole number found fit for service; that of that 15,000 2,700 is the amount of those who were willing to render personal service.

Mr. WILSON. Four thousand four hundred were put down as held; but General Fry said that probably some of the 4,400 men put in the column of personal service would pay or would furnish substitutes, as their time was not out, and therefore we have to estimate that number.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then we have got 4,400.

Mr. WILSON. And 3,000 substitutes.

Mr. JOHNSON. I want to see if I understand myself. That is 7,000. Now, I want to know what was the amount of commutation money paid by those who neither furnished substitutes nor entered the service themselves.

Mr. WILSON. Eight thousand four hundred paid.

Mr. JOHNSON. How many soldiers will that get?

Mr. WILSON. Eight thousand four hundred.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then we get 15,000 men.

Mr. GRIMES. That proceeds upon the idea that each commutation of $300 gets a man; but it does not get a man. Each one of the men that have been obtained has received a bounty in addition to the $300 to induce him to go into the service.

Mr. JOHNSON. That makes no difference.

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, it does make a vast difference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS.] to strike out the first section of the bill.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Foot, Foster, Harris, Hendricks, Johnson, McDougall, Morrill, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, Wiley, and Wilson—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Conness, Fessenden, Grimes, Harlan, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Nesmith, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, and Trumbull—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Doolittle, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Howard, Pomerooy, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wright—10.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the bill be laid upon the table. It is now utterly worthless.

Mr. GRIMES. I want to make one effort if the Senator will allow me, to try and retrieve it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will you renew the motion?

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir; if I cannot carry the motion I propose to make I will.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. GRIMES. I move in the last line of the fourth section to strike out the word "shall" and to insert the word "may," so as to leave it optional with the War Department or the President to call for these men for three years, or one year, or any other time they think proper. That will leave it, as I understand it, optional with the war authorities or the present Commander-in-Chief of our Army and Navy, or whoever the bill vests the power in—the President, at any rate—to determine whether these men may be called for three years or any period between that and one year, or not. The bill as it now stands is absolute. The section, if amended as I propose, will read:

That all calls for drafts hereafter made under the act entitled "An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces," &c., and of any act in addition to or amendatory thereof, may be for a term not exceeding one year.

Mr. SHERMAN. The language of the bill as it now stands will not accomplish the object of the Senator from Iowa. I looked at it with a view to make the same amendment and proposed to offer the same amendment. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs whether under the existing law the President has not the right now to call for one year troops?

Mr. WILSON. No, sir, he has not the right in my judgment. This bill provides that the men shall be drafted during the war, not to exceed three years. We enlist men for three years or during the war, and we make a draft "during the war, not to exceed three years." I think the President cannot draft a man for an hour short of three years under the present law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand according to the present law that the President can draft for any period less than three years. The only effect of this bill in my judgment is to shorten the period of enlistment. The draft is not compulsory. Any man who can pay $300 may evade it either for one year or three years. I agree therefore in the general sentiment that we are simply wasting time at this period of the session in considering a bill which, in my judgment, if carried into a law is a surrender of the contest; because the idea of carrying on this war without enforcing a draft, at a time when we cannot procure enlistments, at a time when we have to call for one hundred day men, at a time when a single State has had to furnish nearly all that has been furnished—

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to ask the Senator a question. Did the Administration call for one hundred days' men because there was a lack of volunteers under the system that was adopted last winter, or was it not the voluntary action of the Governors of certain States?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not here the organ of the Administration in regard to military matters. I am not consulted. I only speak from my own view. The Committee on Military Affairs can speak through its chairman. I understand, however, and the facts have proven it, that there was a pressing need sixty days ago for more men, and therefore these one hundred days' men were accepted, because they were absolutely needed, and there was no other way to get them. The Administration never did and never would—why, I cannot say—enforce the draft. In my judgment, two years ago they ought to have enforced the draft. There is no special need for Congress to pass laws on the subject, because they will not execute them; there is no doubt about that. They had a law on the subject two years ago, and they never did and never would execute it. I was in hopes, however, that the Military Committee of Congress would originate a law to compel them to execute a draft, and compel persons to go into the service without paying commutation; but since the majority of the Senate thinks the time has not arrived for this compulsory draft, I for one will vote to lay the bill on the table. I will not submit the motion, because I do not wish to cut off debate.

Mr. GRIMES. I think the Senator from Ohio is mistaken in supposing that this matter cannot be remedied, and vest in the President of the United States the power, if he has not that power now, to call for any number of men he may see fit, for any period less than three years. I therefore ask that in the amendment which I have moved, I may substitute the word "may" for "shall," also the words "three years" instead of "one year," so that he may call for them for a period not exceeding three years. That will then leave him the option to call for the men during any period of time below the three years.

Mr. WILSON. The eleventh section of the enrollment law reads:

"And to continue in service during the present rebellion, not, however, exceeding the term of three years."

That is the form in which the men are to be drafted, "to continue during the present rebellion, not, however, exceeding three years." I think it means they shall be drafted for three years.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Iowa that the clause to which he proposes his amendment having been adopted by the Senate on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, being an amendment adopted in those words, he will have to wait until the bill comes into the Senate in order to move an amendment to that section. The bill is now in committee.

Mr. GRIMES. I sympathize with my friends here who are opposed to this bill as it now stands and shall vote against it; but let us make an effort to retrieve it. We may benefit it, and I think we can, by putting beyond all controversy this question as to whether the President has a right to draft men for a period less than three years. Let the bill go into the Senate, and let us try to put it in some shape that is satisfactory to the Senate.

Mr. CONNESS. I agree with the Senator from Iowa in regard to this bill, but I go a little further. I believe it is impossible now to make such a bill of it as will meet the demands of the country. I think there is a necessity for some unity of action between the men who act with and for the Administration in this body. Senators will pardon that expression on my part. The men of whom I now speak are responsible for carrying on this war, for the mode in which it has been conducted, for the mode in which it is to be conducted, and I think it is due to them that time should be given now before this bill shall be voted upon any further. I hope the bill will be laid on the table at present, and I make that motion.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is that debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. JOHNSON. I want to know what the motion is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To lay the bill on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON. Temporarily, I understood, to postpone it.

Mr. CONNESS. Of course it will be ready to be acted upon whenever the Senate shall choose to take it up again. I ask for the yeas and nays on my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cadde, Chandler, Conness, Harlan, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Ramsey, Richardson, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, and Trumbull—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Powell, Riddle, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Willey, and Wilson—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Doolittle, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Howard, Pomeroy, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wright—10.

So the Senate refused to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. SUMNER. I now send an amendment to the Chair, to come in as a new section to the bill.

The Secretary read the amendment, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That in addition to the substitute furnished by a drafted person, or where no substitute is furnished, then in addition to the sum fixed by the Secretary of War for the procurement of a substitute, every such drafted person shall, before his discharge from the draft, be held to contribute a certain proportion in the nature of a title of his annual gains, profits, or income, whether derived from any kind of property, dividends, salary, or from any profession, trade, or employment, whatever, according to the following rates, to wit: on all incomes over $1,000 and not over $2,000, five per cent.; on all incomes over $2,000 and not over $3,000, ten per cent.; and on all incomes over $3,000, twenty per cent.; and it shall be the duty of every such person seeking to be discharged to make return, either by himself or his guardian, to the provost marshal of his district of the amount of his income, according to the requirements of the act to provide internal revenue of July 1, 1862; and so much of the act for "enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, as is inconsistent with this section, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

And be it further enacted, That the contributions thus made shall be employed by the Secretary of War as a fund for bounties, to be paid to the men actually drafted and mustered into the service under any call subsequent to the date of this act, whenever they shall be honorably discharged, or, in the case of death, to the widow and minor children of any such man, according to rules and regulations established by the War Department.

Mr. SUMNER. I think the amendment in its two sections explains itself. In the first section it provides that every person, besides supplying a substitute or paying the sum which he pays for the procurement of a substitute, shall contribute a certain proportion ratably according to his income; and in the second section it provides that those contributions shall constitute a fund to be distributed by the Secretary of War among the men actually drafted and mustered into service under a call subsequent to the date of this act, and who shall be honorably discharged. All this is to be in pursuance of rules and regulations made by the Secretary of War. I say, therefore, you have two elements; first, a payment ratably according to property; and secondly, out of that payment the creation of a fund which shall be a source of bounties to the soldier.

Now, sir, this proposition has in its favor two considerations; first, the consideration of justice, inasmuch as it is not just, and I never shall cease to insist upon that proposition, to make the poor man pay for his discharge the same which you make the rich man pay. When a person is drafted into the service as a soldier, and the question is of his ransom from that obligation by a pecuniary contribution, there is no element of equity which is not shocked, according to my sense of justice, if you do not to a certain measure regulate the requirement of money to be paid according to the wealth of the person drafted. What is there which a man will not pay for his life? What is there which a man will not pay who has the means, and who is not disposed to enter into the military service, to be discharged from its perils and anxieties? And yet, sir, by the law as it now stands you compel the poor and the rich to pay the same sum. The rich man is drafted, and he pays $300, which to him on that occasion is nothing; he puts his hand in his pocket as you put your hand in your pocket to find the change for a newspaper; whereas the poor man perhaps is driven to sell all that he has in order to save himself for his family. Sir, is that just? To my mind it is not.

On a former occasion, in connection with taxation, I read to the Senate what was said by an eminent French writer, Mr. Say, and I now call attention to this again in this connection, because to my mind it bears with more force now than it did then. He says:

"If it be desired to tax individual income in such manner as to press lighter in proportion as that income approaches to the confines of bare necessity, taxation must not only be equitably apportioned, but must press on revenue with progressive gravity." * * *

"Thus, a tax merely proportionate to individual income, would be far from equitable; and this is probably what Adam Smith meant by declaring it reasonable that the rich man should contribute to the public expenses, not merely in proportion to the amount of his revenue, but even somewhat more. For my part I have no hesitation in going further, and saying that taxation cannot be equitable unless its ratio be progressive."

There, sir, is the important proposition in connection with taxation that it "cannot be equitable unless its ratio is progressive." In our tax bill recently passed we have to a certain extent adopted that principle. While recognizing the principle on that occasion, I was not disposed to press it beyond the recommendation of the Finance Committee; but the case is now changed; here there is no question of taxation, but it is a question of how we shall equalize a burden upon the community so that it shall be felt by the rich and the poor alike. Sir, I can find no other way in which it can be equalized except by the graduation which is now proposed. If Senators will point out any other way, I shall be ready to follow them; but until they can point out another way, I hope they will adopt the proposition that I now offer.

Mr. COWAN. Allow me to suggest to the Senator that the general scheme of taxation equalizes burdens.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator says that the general scheme of taxation equalizes the burdens.

The Senator is mistaken. The question now is how much a man shall pay in order to be relieved from the burden of military service; and I tell the Senator that it is not equality to compel the poor man to contribute his all for that exemption while the rich man contributes what to him is next to nothing. Sir, in that there is no equality. Suppose the Senator himself were drafted, indisposed as he probably would be to military life, what is there that he would not contribute for the exemption? To him, under such circumstances, $300 would be as nothing; and yet, to the poor man, $300 is everything. In short, there are many who have it not, there are many who, by calling upon their friends, by ransacking every resource within their reach, are not able to command that small sum. Others perhaps just able to command it, are compelled, in order to obtain the exemption, to burden their families, to deny comfort to wife and child.

Now, sir, the rich man is under no such obligation. If he be drafted under the existing laws, he finds his substitute or he pours into the Treasury his $300; he draws his check and it is all over; it is nothing to him. Sir, there is no equity in the law as it now stands. But I have said that the proposition has in it two elements; the first is that it seeks justice; the second is that it provides a fund out of which bounties may be distributed by the Secretary of War among the men actually drafted and mustered into the service. In that proposition you have another temptation to the service, or if it be not another temptation it is something which will soften and mitigate its hardships. The soldier, while on the field of battle, while on his march, will bear in mind that when the time of honorable discharge comes, or should he be taken away by death, then for the benefit of his wife and minor children, he may look to the fund created out of these contributions for a bounty which shall be to him or to them something in the way of support. I say, therefore, you will have in that part of the proposition a temptation which all of you confess you now need in order to carry forward your enlistments, or you will have something to soften and to mitigate them.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Mr. President, next to that which is right is that which is least evil. I took occasion this afternoon to affirm what I held to be the right rule with regard to the bringing of our troops into the field. It did not meet with the approbation of the Senate. I thought that was altogether right, and I undertook briefly to maintain it as such. Next to that proposition is the one now offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, and I am somewhat surprised that I have come as near to him upon a war proposition as I find myself to-night, for I find myself, in the present condition of this movement, compelled to give him the concurrence of my opinion, not as a matter of the most just legislation, but under the circumstances the most expedient.

We have by our present legislation placed the poorest citizen, with regard to the money that may relieve him, upon the same level with the man of a colossal fortune. That great wrong, to a certain extent, the Senator from Massachusetts has sought to obviate by charging upon those men whose incomes are millions, or hundreds of thousands, or tens of thousands, some proportionate charge when they shall ask that they or their sons or their brothers or their cousins shall be relieved from the responsibilities of war.

I have thought that in a Government like ours there were two distinct forms of taxation, and in this I differ I think with the Senator from Massachusetts. There is a tax charged on the citizen that is paid with his best blood on the battle-field in maintaining the liberty or the integrity of his State or his Government. That is a tax that can only be discharged where armies are arrayed. Then there is a tax charged upon the wealth of the country, its commercial, its manufacturing, its agricultural wealth, with which arms have nothing to do except that they are auxiliary to arms. I have always made according to my theory an exact distinction, and therefore I have said all those who are subject to serve the Republic and to handle arms are bound to obey the call of the Government and to array themselves in battle whenever battle is challenged and whenever the Government commands. But that view of mine has been ignored by a most positive vote. Now, the Senator proposes that those persons who have accumulated large fortunes, those men possessed of vast wealth, when they are called upon for the tax where the peril of life is called for, that something which is more valuable than lands or houses or gold or silver, and when men are to be excused from paying that tax, shall contribute that which shall bear some relation to their possessions. The Senator from Massachusetts is right if we permit a compromise between the first great obligation we owe to the Constitution and the laws, the obligation of our service and our lives to maintain them, and the right to the possessions, the property, and the material interests of the country.

He proposes a compromise now between blood and money; and as blood has had no consideration in the argument of to-day and money has borne the palm alone, a compromise, if compromise can be had, is the only thing to be accepted now. I will take the compromise and see how the men of vast fortune who have to be protected, men who have ships upon the seas, men who have great warehouses upon our seaboard, men who have great manufactories in our inland cities, men who have vast farms in the West, men who live amidst abundant luxury—how far they may apportion themselves to sacrifices which demand of the young the red blood of our Republic. If we cannot maintain the right, then I will take the best compromise, and the best compromise comes from the Senator from Massachusetts. I shall therefore go for his amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that this bill be re-committed to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SUMNER. Why not have a vote on my proposition?

Mr. GRIMES. I am satisfied it will take all the rest of the evening to discuss this single proposition, and I apprehend that the bill will in the end go to the Committee on Military Affairs after we may have adopted it or rejected it.

Mr. JOHNSON. The debate on that proposition is over.

Mr. COLLAMER. I want to have the light of the committee on this very proposition.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well.

The motion to recommit was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to—ayes 17, noes 21.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Kansas to withdraw his motion for the purpose of allowing me to move to take up the telegraph bill so as to leave it the unfinished business.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. There are a great many executive messages from the President that ought to be referred to committees, and there is a very important officer in my State to be confirmed. I insist on my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, June 20, 1864.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. CHANNING.

On motion of Mr. STEELE, of New York, the reading of the Journal of Saturday was dispensed with.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS.

The SPEAKER stated the business in order to be the call of States for the introduction of bills and resolutions for reference, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Mr. STEELE, of New York, introduced a bill to incorporate the Young Men's Christian Association of the city of Washington; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

ADDITIONAL COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules inquire into the expediency of creating two additional standing committees of the House, namely: the first to be called a Committee on Internal Revenue, which shall consider all matters relating to that subject; the second to be called a Committee on Banking and Currency, which shall consider all matters pertaining to said subject.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was referred; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

Mr. PRICE submitted the following resolution, on the adoption of which he demanded the previous question:

Whereas it is and ever has been admitted since the formation of our Government that the prosperity of this nation depended upon and was attributable to our recognition and observance of the laws of God and the consequent protection of an all-wise Providence; and whereas the recent act of Congress compelling the railroad company to run their street cars in this city on the Sabbath is in direct contravention of the divine law and inconsistent with our professions as a Christian nation: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be instructed to report a bill repealing the law compelling the running of cars in the streets of this city on the Sabbath day.

On seconding the demand for the previous question, 15 voted in the affirmative and 43 in the negative; no quorum.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I appeal to the gentleman from Iowa so to modify his resolution as to make it one of inquiry.

Mr. PRICE. No, sir; I want it to be one of instructions.

Mr. MALLORY. I understand that by the law as it existed this company had the right to run their cars on Sunday, but that this new legislation requires them to run.

Mr. PRICE. Exactly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remark that the bill to which the gentleman refers in his resolution has passed the House, but is pending in the Senate, and has not, therefore, become a law.

Mr. PRICE. It has become a law so far as this House is concerned, and I want the antidote to follow the poison in quick succession.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers on seconding the demand for the previous question; and appointed Messrs. MIDDLETON and PRICE.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 15, noes 50; no quorum voting.

Mr. CRAVENS moved that there be a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. William J. Allen, Allison, Anderson, Arnold, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Blaine, Brandegee, Brooks, Broomall, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Clay, Cobb, Colfroth, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Deming, Denison, Donnelly, Dumont, Eldridge, English, Farnsworth, Finck, Ganson, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Hall, Hulburd, Jencks, William Johnson, Julian, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, King, Knapp, Knox, Littlejohn, McAllister, McBride, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Odell, Charles O'Neill, John O'Neill, Patterson, Pike, Pomeroy, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Ross, Schenck, Scofield, Smith, Smithers, Spaulding, Starr, Stebbins, William G. Steele, Sweat, Thomas, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Ward, Webster, Windom, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman.

Mr. CRAVENS. One hundred and four members having answered to their names, I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion occurred on seconding the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER stated that no quorum having appeared on the last vote, he would order tellers; and appointed Messrs. HUBBARD, of Iowa, and PRYNN.

Mr. COX moved that the whole subject be laid on the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 35.

Mr. HALE demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. PRICE demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered; and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. McKINNEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (S. No. 145) to increase the pay of soldiers in the United States Army, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had agreed to the amendment of the House to the forty-third amendment of the Senate to the Indian appropriation bill.

POTTAWATOMIE LANDS, ETC.

Mr. WILDER submitted a joint resolution securing payment to the Delaware and Pottawatomie Indians for lands sold to the Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Western Railroad Company, now known as the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, and demanded the previous question.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time.

The previous question was not seconded.

Mr. WILSON moved that the joint resolution be referred to the select committee on the Pacific railroad.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MISSOURI CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. UPSON, from the Committee of Elections, submitted a report accompanied by a resolution that Hon. JOHN G. SCOTT is entitled to retain his seat in this House as a Representative from the third congressional district of Missouri; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

RESERVATION OF MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. BROWN, of West Virginia, submitted a joint resolution reserving mineral lands from the operation of all acts passed at the present session granting lands or extending the time of former grants; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution provides that no act passed at the present session of Congress granting lands to States or corporations to aid in the construction of roads, or for other purposes, or to extend the time of grants heretofore made, shall be so construed as to embrace mineral lands, which in all cases shall be and are reserved exclusively to the United States.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. That is just, and I hope it will be passed.

Mr. BROWN, of West Virginia, demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. WILSON. I think that the joint resolution ought to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DRIGGS. It has been considered by that committee, and they are in favor of it.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FOREIGN MAILS.

Mr. KINNEY offered the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill at the present session of Congress repealing so much of the fourth section of an act entitled "An act to provide for carrying the mails to foreign ports," approved March 5, 1861, as prohibits the carrying of newspapers and other printed matter on the overland mail route from Kansas and east from California; and that they report by bill or otherwise.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KINNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF POSTAL LAWS.

Mr. NORTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 476) to amend the postal laws; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. WILSON. It seems to me that is a curious bill to introduce under a call of States for resolutions.

Mr. NORTON. The bill is an important one, and has been thoroughly examined, section by section, by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. The committee has no opportunity to report, and this was the only plan they could see to get the bill before the House.

The SPEAKER. The bill will go over under the rule if discussion arises. The Clerk will read the bill. It is a long one.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest to the gentleman that the vote be first taken on seconding the demand for the previous question. If the previous question is seconded the bill can be read afterwards. I think we shall save time by that course.

Mr. NORTON. How can members know whether to vote for sustaining the demand for the previous question without first hearing the bill read?

Mr. MALLORY. I rise to a point of order. The bill must go over under the rule, as gentlemen are debating it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has demanded the previous question, and this discussion is out of order.

Mr. MALLORY. Then my point of order is that the question must be put on seconding the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio suggested that the bill be read, and the gentleman from Iowa asked that the vote be first taken on the demand for the previous question, as, if that failed, there would be no necessity for reading the bill. Does the gentleman from Ohio accept that proposition?

Mr. NORTON. No, sir.

Mr. WINDOM. Has notice been given of the introduction of the bill?

Mr. NORTON. No, sir. I offered the bill under the call of States, and I suppose I have the right to do so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have the rule read which requires notice to be given.

The Clerk read the rule, as follows:

"115. Every bill shall be introduced on the report of a committee, or by motion for leave. In the latter case, at least one day's notice shall be given of the motion in the House, or by filing a memorandum thereof with the Clerk, and having it entered on the Journal; and the motion shall be made, and the bill introduced, if leave is given, when resolutions are called for; such motion or the bill when introduced may be committed."

The SPEAKER. As notice has not been given, the bill is not properly before the House.

Mr. NORTON. The bill was introduced by me when the States were called, on request of the chairman of the committee. It has been well considered by the committee, and ought to be considered. I have no more interest in it than every other member.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House.

ARBITRARY ARRESTS.

Mr. ROSS introduced the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That all persons not in the military or naval service of the United States who have been arrested and imprisoned by the agents of the Government without process of law, and released without trial or examination, are entitled to the same pay and mileage for the time they were deprived of their liberty as members of Congress; and the Committee of Claims are hereby instructed to report a bill at an early day for that purpose.

The House refused to second the demand for the previous question.

Mr. WILSON. I propose to debate the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Then it goes over under the rule.

TRADE WITH REBELLIOUS DISTRICTS.

Mr. INGERSOLL introduced the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this House all permits heretofore issued by the Treasury Department to any person or persons, allowing such person or persons to trade within the limits of any of the States now or heretofore in rebellion, should at once be revoked and no more issued.

Mr. FENTON. I ask my friend if it would not be well to refer this resolution to the select committee to investigate the affairs of the Treasury Department, to which this subject has been specially referred?

Mr. INGERSOLL. I prefer that the House should pass upon the subject. If the House sees fit to refer it, I shall not object. I demand the previous question upon agreeing to the resolution.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. INGERSOLL and Mr. McKINNEY were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 40.

So the previous question was seconded.

Mr. ASHLEY. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. W. J. ALLEN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 67, nays 71, not voting 44; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Anderson, Ashley, Baxter, Beaman, Blair, Boutwell, James S. Brown, William C. Brown, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cole, Cravens, Creswell, Dixon, Edgerton, Eldridge, Eliot, English, Fenton, Frank, Garfield, Gove, Hale, Benjamin G. Harris, Higby, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hubbard, Julian, Kullfleisch, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Knox, Longyear, Marey, McBride, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Noble, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Perry, Pike, Price, Pruyn, Radford, Schenck, Scofield, Shannon, Stann, Smithers, Stevens, Strouse, Thomas, Tracy, Upson, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Wheeler, Williams, Wilder, and Windom—67.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Allison, Ames, Ancona, Arnold, Baily, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Blaine, Bliss, Boyd, Brooks, Chandler, Cobb, Coffroth, Cox, Dawson, Deming, Driggs, Eckley, Eden, Finck, Ganson, Grider, Griswold, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Herrick, Holman, Hutchins, Ingersoll, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Knapp, Law, Lazear, Le Blond, Loan, Mallory, McClure, McDowell, McIndoe, McKimney, William H. Miller, James R. Morris, Morrison, Nelson, Norton, John O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Pomeroy, Samuel J. Randall, John H. Rice, Robinson, James S. Rollins, Ross, Scott, John B. Steele, Stiles, Stuart, Thayer, Van Valkenburgh, Wadsworth, Elihu B. Washburne, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Wilson, and Winfield—71.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Blow, Brandegee, Broomall, Clay, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Denison, Donnelly, Dumont, Farnsworth, Grinnell, Hall, Hooper, Jencks, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, King, Littlejohn, Long, Marvin, McAlister, Middleton, Morrill, Leonard Myers, Pendleton, Perham, William B. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, William G. Steele, Sweet, Voorhees, Ward, Webster, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—44.

So the House refused to lay the resolution on the table.

During the roll-call,

Mr. DENISON stated that he had paired off with Mr. BROOMALL.

Mr. CRESWELL stated that Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland, was still detained from his seat by reason of sickness.

Mr. HOTCHKISS stated that Mr. LITTLEJOHN was detained from his seat by indisposition.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. FENTON. Is it now in order to move to refer the resolution to a committee?

The SPEAKER. It is not, the previous question having been seconded.

Mr. PRUYN. Is it in order to offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is not, for the same reason.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded. The object is simply to provide a mode in which permits may be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury hereafter.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. WILSON. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; and on that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ECKLEY and THOMAS were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 59.

So the House refused to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question recurred on the motion to reconsider; and being put, there were—ayes 58, noes 40.

So the vote by which the previous question was seconded was reconsidered.

The question recurred on seconding the demand for the previous question.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 395) for the relief of George F. Nesbitt, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. STEVENS. I move then that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PINE in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the special order, being bill of the House No. 527, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1865.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. There was a point of order reserved on one clause of this bill which I desire to make now. It is the provision which fixes the salary of the Assistant Treasurer at Philadelphia at $4,000. I ask for the reading of the provision.

The Clerk read, as follows:

For compensation of the Assistant Treasurer at Philadelphia, $4,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I submit my point of order, that in the legislative appropriation bill an appropriation has been made to this officer as Assistant Treasurer of the United States of $1,000, and as treasurer of the Mint $2,000.

Mr. STEVENS. That is not a question of order. When we come to that I shall agree that it may be stricken out.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well; I desire first to state my point of order. The law provides that this officer may receive $1,000 salary as Assistant Treasurer of the United States, and a salary of $2,000 as treasurer of the Mint at Philadelphia; making an aggregate salary of $3,000 to which he is entitled by law. I call the attention of the Chair to the official record, which states the salaries, as I suppose, correctly. My point of order is that you cannot in an appropriation bill increase the salary beyond the limit fixed by law.

Mr. STEVENS. This bill has been referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it is too late now to raise a point of order upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the point was expressly reserved.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that this salary having been provided for in another bill I shall not ask for the passage of this provision.

Mr. HOLMAN. The two appropriations will make his entire salary $5,000.

Mr. STEVENS. When I say to the gentleman that I do not ask for the passage of this provision I hope he will be satisfied.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well; I will not press my point of order now, but will reserve it until the committee shall have reached it in the reading of the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee here informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. HAY, his Private Secretary, notifying the House that he had approved and signed a bill (H. R. No. 469) extending the time for the completion of the Marquette and Ontonagon railroad in the State of Michigan.

The committee resumed its session, and proceeded again to the consideration of the

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

The following paragraph was read by the Clerk:

For commissions, at two and a half per cent., to such superintendents as are entitled to the same under the proviso to act 2d March, 1851, on the amount that may be disbursed by them, $10,000.

Mr. ELIOT. I move to amend that paragraph in the last line by inserting after the words "may be" the words "may have been." The object of the amendment is to provide for the payment of sums which may be due from the Government for services rendered. By the language of the paragraph it is prospective only. There are small amounts due for services already rendered which I think should be properly included.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I move to amend, in line one hundred and four, after the word "dollars," by inserting "to pay for ashes purchased by the public gardener three years ago for the public grounds, $125." This is a small sum which was expended by the public gardener. I am informed by Mr. Nokes, the present gardener, that it is all correct.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I move to amend by adding at the end of line one hundred and thirteen as follows:

To enable the Commissioner of Public Buildings to reconstruct five of the old burnt-out furnaces now under the old portion of the Capitol, $5,000.

I will merely state that unless these old furnaces are repaired it will be impossible to keep the building warm.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS moved to amend by adding at the end of line one hundred and nineteen as follows:

For repairing, refitting, and furnishing the President's summer residence at the Soldiers' Home during the sickly season, $3,000.

On agreeing to the amendment, 51 voted in the affirmative and 42 in the negative; no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN called for tellers; and appointed Messrs. HOLMAN and FENTON.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 42.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I move to insert at the same point, "For a day watchman at the President's House, $720."

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. I submit that there is no law authorizing the office, and therefore an appropriation cannot in this way be made to pay the salary. The number of watchmen is fixed by law, and I take it for granted the salaries of them have been provided for.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I ask the gentleman to hear me for a moment before he insists upon his point of order. I state to the House that there is no day watchman at the President's House. The curtains about the house have been cut and the hangings and ornaments damaged to a great deal more than the value of the salary of a watchman.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is one of the difficulties that have existed for a great many years, and I think in such a time as this they may remain still longer. I must insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read, as follows:

For fuel, in part, of the President's House, $2,400.

Mr. BALDWIN, of Michigan, moved that that appropriation be stricken out of the bill.

The motion was disagreed to.

The Clerk read, as follows:

For lighting the Capitol and President's House, the public grounds around them, and around the executive offices, and Pennsylvania avenue, Bridge and High streets, in Georgetown, Four and a half street, Seventh and Twelfth streets across the Mall, and Maryland avenue west, and Sixth street south, $63,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is this the same amount that was appropriated last year for the same purpose?

Mr. STEVENS. It is the amount estimated for by the Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it the same amount that was appropriated last year?

Mr. STEVENS. I do not recollect.

Mr. HOLMAN. My recollection is that the sum appropriated last year was $54,000. The subject of increasing the price of gas has been voted down by a large vote, and I hope that no indirect means will be resorted to for that purpose. My impression is that the amount appropriated last year was less than this, but I am not certain. I move to reduce the appropriation to $54,000.

Mr. STEVENS. This is the amount required by the Department.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Does this provide for any increase in the price of gas to be paid by the Government?

Mr. STEVENS. It does not.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read, as follows:

For repairs of Pennsylvania avenue, and aiding in keeping it clean and free from dust, $6,000.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Everybody knows that Pennsylvania avenue is constantly full of dust; we could not have more than there is now, notwithstanding this appropriation, and I move that it be stricken out.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I think it must be patent to every member of Congress and stranger who sojourns in this city, that the dust upon Pennsylvania avenue is a source of great annoyance. The original estimate was for $20,000 to keep that avenue in repair, and we propose to increase the appropriation to that amount. It is the duty of Congress, by law, to keep that avenue in repair.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Why should not the city keep that avenue in repair?

Mr. RICE, of Maine. The law provides that Congress should keep it in repair. It is a requirement upon the United States. I hope that the amendment will not prevail. If it does not, I shall move to increase the appropriation to $15,000, so that the avenue may be put in good condition.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is any appropriation now made for the purpose of keeping down the dust on Pennsylvania avenue?

Mr. RICE, of Maine. This is an annual appropriation.

Mr. GARFIELD. I know that the avenue spends a large part of its time in the air, and if there is any way to bring it down I shall vote for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAWES. I would like to know whether the gentleman is confident that $15,000 will accomplish the purpose?

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I ask the Clerk to read an extract from the letter of the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds.

The Clerk read, as follows:

"That bill contains an appropriation for repairs of Pennsylvania avenue $6,000. In my regular annual estimate I asked for $20,000, but by some means an error was made in printing the estimate and '$6,000' instead of '$20,000' was inserted, and the Committee of Ways and Means, governed, I presume, by the printed estimate, reported $3,000.

"Every member of Congress who has passed along Pennsylvania avenue for the past six months must have observed the wretched condition of the roadway, and between the Circle and Georgetown it is almost impassable for carriages. The avenue is about four miles long and one hundred and sixty feet wide, and the roadway is paved about half the length of it. The pavement is broken at short intervals, and the sum of $6,000 would hardly make a show toward mending it; $20,000 would so far mend it as to make it a comfortable road to travel over. I hope the House will think proper to increase that appropriation."

Mr. BROOKS. I hope that the appropriation will be retained in order that we may prevent dust from being thrown in the eyes of the Representatives of the people, and that they may be able to see clearly all the matters that are here presented for their consideration. [Laughter.] The other side of the House has been very liberal in voting to the President, in addition to his salary of $25,000 per annum, appropriations for fuel for keeping his house warm, for gas and for servants, to some degree, and I do not see why we who belong to all of the States should not have a clean and dustless avenue between here and Georgetown. It belongs more to the Government than to the owners of private property to keep it in order. The Capitol, White House, Treasury, War, Navy, and other Departments, depend upon the avenue, and I hope that we shall have no further objection to this appropriation, so that when the war is over and the Union is restored we shall have a clean, pleasant avenue in this city.

Mr. STEVENS. The estimate was $6,000.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. The estimate by the Commissioner of Public Buildings was $20,000, but by some mistake it was sent to the committee as $6,000.

Mr. STEVENS. That was the estimate sent to us.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. That was a mistake.

Mr. STEVENS. I think $6,000 will do very well.

Mr. BROOKS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania did not hear the communication which was read. The gentleman from Maine said "$6,000" was a misprint, and that $20,000 was the estimate sent in.

Mr. STEVENS. That is all the better for my friends over there who are so very economical, and they are very glad of it, I dare say. Those gentlemen over there have been throwing more dust in our eyes than all we have got from the avenue for a great while. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I think the judgment of the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, who has this matter under his entire charge and control, stating that the avenue is not kept in repair—and I am not aware that any charge has been made of his inefficiency—admonishes us that we should appropriate more than $6,000. As, upon the motion of my friend from Illinois the other day, some portion of the avenue is to be paved by the railroad company, I have proposed to deduct $5,000 from the estimate and to make the appropriation $15,000. I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will be voted down, and that we will make an appropriation of $15,000.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I was surprised to hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] propose to increase this appropriation to $20,000, thereby adding $15,000 at one fell sweep, because I believe no gentleman in this House has clamored more than he has, except perhaps myself, against the increase of expenses. The sidewalks, which most of us use, are in very good repair, and gentlemen who are able to keep carriages can get along very well. But I am willing to let the amendment stand as it is, provided that the committee will add this as an amendment: "and that the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company shall contribute an equal amount for this object." There can be no objection to that, and I believe the railroad company should be willing to do it. This company is not bound to keep the street in repair at all. The gentleman's reference is to another company.

Mr. STEVENS. I would be willing to offer that amendment, but the gentleman from Illinois would object, and if he would not, surely the gentleman from Indiana would object to it as out of order on the ground that it would change the existing law; and therefore I dare not offer it.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I am aware it would change the law, but the gentleman knows very well that we can do that by unanimous consent; and I am certain the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will not object to an amendment which would save a great deal of money.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on striking out "six" and inserting "fifteen."

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The question is on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Maine takes precedence.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I now move to add the words, "the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company shall contribute an equal amount for this object."

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. I rise to a question of order. It is that the amendment is not in accordance with existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I trust my colleague from Illinois will not object to such an amendment.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. I object to all amendments to this bill which are not in order.

The question recurring on striking out the whole appropriation, it was put, and decided in the negative.

The Clerk read the following clause:

For taking care of the grounds south of the President's House, continuing the improvement of the same, and replacing trees destroyed by United States troops there encamped repairing fences and other injuries, $5,000.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I move to amend that clause by striking out "five" and inserting "one." The soldiers are still occupying a portion of those grounds, and the construction of the Treasury building occupies another portion of it; and if these trees are planted they will be again destroyed. Let the grounds remain as they now are until this war is over, when it will be time enough to put everything in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Unless a larger sum than $1,000 is appropriated, I do not think there is any advantage in making any appropriation. These grounds are still occupied by our troops. I find that $2,000 was appropriated for this same purpose last year, but the expenditure of course amounted to nothing, because the same causes of destruction remained. It seems to me, therefore, that the gentleman from Michigan can safely amend his amendment by moving to strike out the entire appropriation. There is a very heavy increase in these appropriations for local purposes.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not think the gentleman is in order. He is not opposing the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has not been limited on this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman is mistaken. The gentleman from Michigan moves to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$1,000." I suppose a motion to strike out the whole appropriation would be a proper one and in order. I should not make the motion if the appropriation of $1,000 could be expended for any beneficial purpose; but the grounds are still occupied by the troops for the purpose of keeping watch over the President's Mansion, and therefore the appropriation amounts to nothing.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan, and it was disagreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the entire appropriation. I find that the appropriation for this same purpose last year was $2,000. The troops are still there; and if there is an appropriation, it ought to be at least $2,000, as I understand from the intelligent and efficient public gardener; but to appropriate $1,000 is just to throw that much money away, as any gentleman can see. I therefore move to strike out the whole appropriation.

Mr. STEVENS. It would spoil the grounds in front of the President's House if there was nobody there to take care of them, and if there were to be no repairs made.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. He speaks of the grounds in front of the President's Mansion. This provision refers expressly to the grounds south of the President's House.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not know which you call the front. It is the place where people go to hear music.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. That is in the rear of the house.

Mr. STEVENS. It is the place where the gentleman from Michigan goes so often to be delighted, and where the ladies always meet one another. [Laughter.] I trust the appropriation will not be stricken out.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I think the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania is mistaken. These grounds are south of where we have the music, and I do not know any particular necessity of keeping them in repair. I still insist that this amendment to strike out the entire appropriation is a very good amendment, and I can see no propriety in turning the question off in this way. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will prevail. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HOLMAN, and KELLOGG of Michigan, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes twenty-four, noes not counted.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I move now to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,000." It is a useless waste of money.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. COLE, of California. I move to amend the clause by striking out the words "by United States troops there encamped." I presume there will be no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line one hundred and forty-four, on page 7:

To enable the Commissioner of Public Buildings to repair the old Hall of the House of Representatives by removing the old floor and placing the whole generally in a proper condition, $1,500.

I simply want to say in regard to that amendment that the Commissioner desires this sum, and says that it is absolutely necessary in order to put the Hall in anything like a decent condition, and inasmuch as the appropriation for fitting up the Hall as a hall of statuary, of which I was in favor, failed, I trust that the Hall will be decently repaired, so as not to be an eyesore to everybody.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move to amend the amendment, so as to provide for the removal of all the fruit stands and things of that kind from the old Hall.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I accept that as a modification of my amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I offer the following as a substitute for the amendment:

Be it further enacted, That a marble floor, similar to that of the Congressional Library or the Senate vestibule, shall be constructed in the old Hall of the House of Representatives, using such marble as may be now on hand and not otherwise required; and that suitable structures and railings shall be therein erected for the reception and protection of statuary, and the same shall be under the supervision and direction of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, and so much of the moneys now or heretofore appropriated for the Capitol extension as may be necessary, not exceeding the sum of $30,000, is hereby set apart and shall be disbursed for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned; and the President is hereby authorized to invite each and all the States to provide and furnish statues in marble or bronze, not exceeding two in number for each State, of men who have been citizens thereof and illustrious from their historic renown or from distinguished civil or military services, such as each State shall determine to be worthy of this national commemoration, and when so furnished, the same shall be placed in the old Hall of the House of Representatives in the Capitol of the United States, which is hereby set apart, or so much thereof as may be necessary, as a national statuary hall for the purposes herein indicated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a point of order. The moneys appropriated by law for the purpose of the Capitol extension cannot be, in an appropriation bill, diverted from that purpose to another.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Chairman, this item has reference to the Capitol itself, and is a part of the work upon the Capitol. Therefore, according to all the rulings, the amendment is perfectly in order. Whether or not it should be agreed to is an entirely different question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. STEVENS. I have offered that amendment because I know that the opposition of the gentleman from Maine to tinkering and patching that floor any more is a proper one. We have marble lying about here quite sufficient, as I understand from the architect, to make that floor. It is thought that it may be done for $5,000, though the appropriation asked is $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary. But it is believed that $5,000 will make a good marble floor and put up the railing. We all know how these beautiful columns are being destroyed and defaced by every person who chooses to inscribe a great man's name upon them. They are really becoming ridiculous; and the worst of it is that the names of half the members of Congress are omitted. [Laughter.] I think it time that some pains were taken to preserve these beautiful pillars from dilapidation and ruin; and I think that the marble floor may be made out of the materials now on hand at a cost of no more than I have stated, which is the cheapest way of doing it. It is not adding anything to the appropriation, but merely diverting it.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I do not contend against this proposition. It is precisely the same as was reported some time since from the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman, and which passed the House.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I know that it is no use to oppose any appropriation here, but I must at least protest against this. There are other appropriations in this bill which I presume could have been dispensed with. I do not, however, know the facts, and therefore did not oppose them. This appropriation, I am satisfied, we can dispense with. We all know that the Government has no money to expend in superfluous matters, for things that can be done without. Therefore I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and to all other appropriations that can be dispensed with till this war is over.

A MEMBER on the Democratic side. It is out of order to say anything against an appropriation. Mr. PRICE. It may be out of order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It is undoubtedly out of order to speak against appropriations in this House.

Mr. PRICE. So far as appropriations are concerned I know there are always just enough of votes against any attempt to strike them out to secure the failure of such attempt. I would appeal to the other side of the House to come to the rescue; but unfortunately it is just as extravagant as this side. [Laughter.] I have almost lost all confidence in my friends here. They vote almost universally for such appropriations as are asked. I have not voted for a single appropriation that I knew to be wrong; and where I have voted for such as were superfluous, it has been through ignorance. I presume that some of the appropriations voted in have been wrong, but I do not know it; but I know that we can get along very well without expending money on this old Hall till the war is over if it ever ends. And if it is not to end in a national triumph I do not want to have the work done for Jeff. Davis. I do not know that he is going to get possession of it, but I know that we require every dollar that the Government can get to pay our soldiers in the field, and to keep the machinery of war in operation. I therefore hope that no appropriation shall be made that can be dispensed with until we pay our honest debts to the country and to the soldiers in the field.

Mr. MALLORY. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, and in doing so I may be permitted to express my gratification that the gentleman has at last learned where the true friends of economy are to be found in this House. I think he has paid only a deserved compliment to the Democratic party in saying that he will henceforward call only on that party to aid him against the extravagance proposed by gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. PRICE. I merely wish to correct misapprehension in the mind of the gentleman from Kentucky. I have not at last arrived at the idea of appealing to gentlemen upon the other side to sustain me in matters of economy. I have done it continually, but then there is another misapprehension on the part of the gentleman, which is in the supposition that any heed has been paid to my appeals. I find that they are almost invariably disposed to vote for these extravagant appropriations.

Mr. MALLORY. The statement of the gentleman from Iowa, then, is broader than I supposed. He says now he did not say that he hereafter would call on gentlemen on this side of the House, but that he has all along looked to us to sustain measures of economy. I merely wish to say to him and to other gentlemen on that side that they will do well to follow the lead of this side, not only in respect to voting down extravagant appropriations, but also in respect to great questions of public policy. I can tell the gentleman that he will find a great deal of good help over here if he will apply upon all these questions, and I take his disposition to call upon us as a good arguery. In respect to this particular appropriation, however, I am afraid I cannot go with the gentleman. I confess, in this instance, I am in favor of the appropriation recommended by my venerable—perhaps I ought to say young—friend over there.

Mr. STEVENS. I shall have to rise to a question of order. I desire to know whether it is in order for an old, gray, bald-headed man to call a young man venerable. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the question of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. MALLORY. I beg pardon of the gentleman. Whatever gray hairs I may have are apparent, and if the gentleman's were as much so, perhaps he might not raise the question of order. However, I give him the benefit of the protection he has provided himself with. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, seriously I think this appropriation ought to pass, and I hope the House will not vote it down. It is not extravagant; it is something to which we ought to give a little attention. I will, however, make one suggestion to the gentleman. He provides for permitting each State to place in the old Hall, in bronze or marble, the statues of two of their most eminent living men. I think the amendment ought to say dead men. I think we ought to give these places to the memory of the great men of the nation who are gone, to those who are now dead or shall be at the time these statues are placed there.

Mr. STEVENS. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman, and will modify my amendment so as to say two persons already deceased, or deceased before the statues shall be received.

Mr. MORRILL. This question is not one connected with the question whether we shall continue the appropriations for the Capitol extension or not. If we continue them, then I contend that this is manifestly correct; if we do not continue them, I think this amendment ought to be adopted; it is doing nothing more than we ought to do for the preservation of the building. We have this marble here lying round the Capitol entirely useless; we also have machines so that it can be cut with the utmost facility and with very little delay. The old floor, as every one knows, is in a state of decay, and ought to be replaced. This proposition simply is to provide a marble floor such as now covers most of the rooms and corridors about the Capitol. If the foundation of the floor should prove to be sufficient, the expense would be very little; if that, too, has to be replaced, the expense will of course be something more. It does not necessarily increase the appropriation in the bill at all, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. PRICE. In reply to the gentleman from Vermont I want to say first this: I do not propose to vote for the appropriation of $300,000 to continue the work on this Capitol; and I shall not vote for this, because if this passes it may be considered as a reason for voting for the other. I propose, therefore, to begin here. Now, I desire to say in respect to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MALLORY,] who, after the speech made by him, declared his intention to vote for it, that, like a great many other men, his talk is good but his practice is bad. He talks economy well, but he votes economy badly. I want men to vote right, and I am not particular whether they talk right or not.

I will say, Mr. Chairman, that there is not a member of this House who, in conscience, would make these appropriations in reference to their own private affairs. I think that we ought to confine ourselves to indispensable appropriations and do without everything that can be dispensed with until we have paid the expenses of this war. I do not want to see widows and orphans and disabled soldiers refused for want of money to pay their just claims while we are passing these appropriations which are entirely unnecessary. I will say that I have only succeeded, after protracted effort, in securing the payment of $150 due to an Iowa soldier who lost his leg upon the battle-field during this war. While we refuse such paltry sums to our soldiers we vote millions, as if the Treasury were overflowing.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to enter into any extended discussion on this subject, but in my judgment every soldier as well as every man in this country feels a just pride in the Capitol of the nation. The last thing they want to see done is the work upon this building stopped. I hope that it will not be stopped. I hope that we shall go on with the improvements, and that all reasonable and proper expenses will be provided for, so that the work may be continued upon this great work in which the nation takes a just pride. I shall therefore vote for this appropriation as reasonable and proper.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Chairman, I propose to vote for this amendment, and I do it mainly for the reason assigned by the gentleman from

New York [Mr. STEELE] who has just addressed the House. I never pass through the old Hall of the House of Representatives without feeling myself reproached by the spirits that haunt that place. I look around to see where the venerable John Quincy Adams trembled in his seat and voted, and I see a huckster woman selling gingerbread. I look to see where Calhoun sat—for there was a time when we might speak with reverence even of him—I look to see where he sat, and where Clay sat, and I find a woman selling oranges and root beer. I look around the floor where these men stood and uttered their patriotic sentiments in the day when patriotic sentiments were heard with reverence everywhere and by every man, and I see a floor rotting and trembling under my tread.

Sir, I have none of that narrow feeling of economy of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.] I believe there are occasions when liberality becomes true economy; and I know that it is important to keep a rallying point here of which we shall all be proud. I feel, with the gentleman from New York, that the expenditure is a proper one for an object that we much need, and that will repay us thousands.

This Capitol is now the rallying point of our patriotism, and every part of it should be made to correspond with the greatness and glory of the Republic. Gentlemen look around in the gingerbread box in which we legislate now and seem to forget everything that ought to be kept in remembrance in connection with the old Hall, which I this day regard as better fitted for our deliberations than the beautiful room in which we now are. There is grandeur, simplicity, character to be found there not to be found here, and from which we are rapidly divesting it by the base uses to which we are suffering it to be put.

Mr. PRICE. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SCHENCK. I cannot yield. I am expressing some sentiments which will induce me to go for the appropriation. The gentleman has addressed the House some three or four times already on the subject.

Mr. Chairman, the condition of that old Hall, I repeat, is a disgrace and a reproach to us. Why, as you enter that old Hall you pass by a bronze door which cost thirty-five or forty thousand dollars, twice as much as is proposed to keep the old Hall in order, and that bronze door opens upon these apple-stands and upon these hucksters. I would drive them all out, as others were scourged in former times from the temples, and I would put in their places, if not the statues of the greatest men of the country, something at least which shall be creditable to this country, either in the shape of a library or works of art, and I would place the Hall in that good order and decent condition which will not make us blush as we pass through that Hall as we go from one end of this gilded building to the other.

I stand, sir, by the old Hall; and for the reason that I wish it thus restored and made as it ought to be and no longer remain a disgrace to us, I shall vote for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PRICE. In reply to the gentleman I will say that if he considers the expenditure of money which does not belong to us but belongs to other people as narrow-minded economy, then he and I have read political economy out of different books. It will be time enough to adorn that Hall when we have money to expend, and until that time arrives I shall oppose all amendments of that kind.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The amendment as amended was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the House received a message from the Senate, by Mr. FORTNEY, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate have agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 192) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1865; and that the Senate insist upon their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the bill of the Senate (No. 266) to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes, agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and have appointed Mr. MORRILL, Mr. TEN Eyck, and Mr. RICHARDSON the committee of conference on their part.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. No. 247) granting lands to the State of Wisconsin to build a military road to Lake Superior; when the Speaker signed the same.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs of the basement of the President's House, $3,000.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I move to amend that clause by striking out "three" and inserting "five." The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds visited the President's House and examined thoroughly the condition of the basement, and after that examination, and obtaining estimates from a gentleman competent to make them, came to the conclusion that it would cost $5,000 to put that basement in a proper state of repair. I hope that sum will be appropriated.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend by inserting, after line one hundred and fifty-eight, "for painting the iron railing around the Capitol grounds, $1,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For cleaning and painting the crypt and passages under the rotunda, $2,000.

Mr. PRICE. I move to strike out that clause. I think we can get along without painting this crypt and these passages for the present—certainly until this war is closed—and therefore I am opposed to this appropriation.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

To pay expenses incurred by the Commissioner of Public Buildings in enlarging bench in Supreme Court room, $1,214.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend by striking out that clause. I am at a loss to know why it should cost $1,200 to enlarge a bench upon which some gentlemen are to seat themselves. There was a bench there before, and this appropriation is not for constructing a new bench but for enlarging an old one. Where I come from we do not understand that kind of economy.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. This is to prepare a bench for a distinguished judge from the gentleman's own State to sit upon.

Mr. PRICE. I venture to say he will dispense with this appropriation, and if he will not I will pay for the bench myself.

Mr. STEVENS. Pine boards are very high now—remarkably high. If that judge would bring along his own bench we could get along very well without this appropriation; but as we have to make it for him, we need this money.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PRUYN. I offer the following amendment:

For alterations and improvements in the Senate Chamber and Hall of House of Representatives, to improve the lighting and ventilating thereof, the sum of ———, to be expended under the joint direction of the Committees of the two Houses on Public Buildings and Grounds.

I shall propose to fill the blank with $50,000 if no other sum be named.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I shall have to raise a point of order on that amendment. It is independent legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I should like to know upon what grounds.

Mr. GANSON. On public grounds.

The CHAIRMAN. There is authority for the appropriation.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that there is a joint committee now investigating this subject, and perhaps it would be better to wait until that committee reports.

Mr. PRUYN. Does that committee propose to report this session?

Mr. MORRILL. They are now engaged in the investigation, and have power to report at this or the next session. I do not think they will be able to report at this session, because it is a very large subject.

Mr. PRUYN. One chief object I had in view in offering this amendment was to call the attention of the members of the House in this way to the condition of these two Halls. I believe it is universally admitted by every person here that a very great mistake was made, when this extension was planted on this beautiful hill, that the external light and the air of heaven were shut out entirely from these two rooms; and the sooner we commence an improvement, which it is admitted by all ought to be made, the better it will be. What that improvement ought to be we cannot tell until the matter has been thoroughly investigated by architects, but I wish the House now to say that something ought to be done. I hope that by some vote on this occasion they will indicate their opinion that it is an improvement which ought to be made. I am not tenacious about any particular way. I left my amendment in blank, saying that I should propose to insert $50,000 if no other amount should be named, not that I am informed that that sum is necessary or sufficient, but if expended judiciously it will be at least a wise and judicious expenditure. I should, therefore, like to have a vote upon this amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe it is almost universally conceded that the ventilation of this Hall is defective; but to make an appropriation now, without knowing at all what we are going to do, whether to remove the Hall or to make such improvements as will remedy the defect of lack of ventilation, I think would be unwise. I hope the gentleman from New York will be content to wait until the committee shall have thoroughly investigated the subject, as they are endeavoring to do, and can report.

Mr. PRUYN's amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the end of page 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee have passed that point in the bill, and it is not in order to go back unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. STEVENS. I object to going back.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. The amendment can be introduced in the miscellaneous appropriations, but it would be more appropriate at the end of page 3. It would have been introduced at that stage of the bill but for the fact that a document in relation to it from the Light-House Board was in the possession of the Committee of Ways and Means, and I could not procure it at that time. I hope the objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not withdraw the objection now. I want to get through this bill. When we have passed through the bill I will not object to the gentleman's offering his amendment.

I now offer the following amendment to come in on page 8, after line one hundred and sixty-five:

For balance due the draughtsman for his services in charge and continuation of the series of maps ordered by resolution of the 4th May, 1848, for part of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1852, $1,520 33.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to reserve a point of order until I hear some statement in regard to that amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. This work was done according to law; but there was no appropriation made to pay for it. That is the whole case.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I offer the following as an additional paragraph:

For repairs to the bridge across the Potomac river at Little Falls $500, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, who is hereby charged with the care of said bridge.

This is for the Chain bridge, and I will send up to be read by the Clerk a communication from the officer in charge of it.

The Clerk read, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 16, 1854.

SIR: The bridge across the Potomac, near the Little Falls, (sometimes called the Chain bridge) was built under an appropriation made by Congress on a plan furnished by me, and was in part constructed under my superintendence. It was finished about seven years ago, and does not appear to have received any attention since then. Its importance, especially at this time, is such that I respectfully beg leave to suggest and recommend that you should apply to Congress for an appropriation of $500, to meet the expense of screwing it up to its original level, and for other necessary repairs of flooring, &c.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE THOM,

Colonel A. D. C., and Major of Engineers.

B. B. FRENCH, Esq., Commissioner of Public Buildings.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. This bridge is of great military importance. It was originally built by the Government, and now it is asked that it be placed in charge of the Commissioner of Public Buildings.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "Commissioner of Public Buildings" and inserting the words "the Secretary of War." Judging from the way in which this building is taken care of I think that that official has just as much on hand as he can attend to, without trying to extend his supervision to outside matters.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. All the other public buildings here are under the charge of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, and there is no complaint that they are not properly taken care of. I trust the amendment to the amendment will not prevail.

The question was taken on Mr. SCHENCK's amendment to the amendment; and it was rejected.

The question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. RICE, of Maine; and it was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I move the following amendment, to come in at the end of the last paragraph:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to provide temporary accommodations for the State Department, and for such of the clerks of the Second Auditor of the Treasury as cannot be accommodated at Winder's building, $10,000.

I ask to have a letter read from the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Clerk read, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 9, 1854.

SIR: I transmit herewith copies of two communications from the supervising architect of the Treasury, under dates of the 3d and 5th instant, relative to the immediate necessity of providing accommodations for the State Department, in order that the work upon the north front of the Treasury extension may be proceeded with.

You will perceive from the correspondence that application has been made for rooms in the Patent Office building, and also the Capitol, without success; and that the State Department will require an amount of room nearly equal to that contained in three stories of the south wing of the Treasury extension.

The architect calls attention to the fire-proof building on the northeast corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Seventeenth street as well adapted to the requirements of the State Department. It is now occupied by the quartermaster's department. If this building could be obtained it would not be necessary for any of the occupants of the south wing of the Treasury to remove and seek accommodations elsewhere in order to provide room for the State Department, as has been proposed.

I transmit also a communication from the Second Auditor, urgently representing the necessity for more room for the proper transaction of the business of his office, which is continually falling behind for want of a sufficient clerical force; and though additional clerks have been authorized by Congress there is no accommodation for them; while of those at present employed a considerable percentage are constantly on the sick list, owing to the crowded condition of the rooms where they are located, and the want of means for proper light and ventilation; and on account of these disadvantages the business of the office is still further retarded.

Under these circumstances I respectfully request that an inquiry be made by Congress as to the extent and distribution of accommodation for the clerical force of the several Departments, and that such new arrangement as may be found needful and adequate be made under its direction, or that authority be given to the Secretary of the Treasury to hire such additional rooms as may be required for the business of this Department, and to make such arrangements as may be necessary for the accommodation of the State Department during the building of the north front of the Treasury extension. Should the latter alternative be preferred, an appropriation of $25,000 will be required.

As the necessity for prompt action is urgent, I trust the matter may be presented for the early consideration of Congress.

I am, very respectfully,

S. P. CHASE,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. J. H. RICE, Chairman Committee on Public Buildings, House of Representatives.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The paragraph in reference to the Potomac water-works having been read,

Mr. BROOKS said: Mr. Chairman, I find that there are $150,000 of appropriations for the Washington aqueduct in two different forms, and I avail myself of this opportunity to say that I hope the authorities will give to this city purer and clearer water than they have been giving heretofore, and that some arrangements will be made for filtering it.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Chairman, it is to secure the same object which the gentleman from New York has mentioned that we have reported this appropriation. It may not be generally known to members of this House that we have never had one drop of Potomac water come through the aqueduct. When that work was laid out, they commenced to build the conduit pipe at both ends. About three or four miles from town they built what is called the receiving reservoir, by building up a dam between two small hills where there was a stream of water.

The water we get here comes from that stream. It contains the washings of the surrounding country—about four thousand acres of arable land. When they came to build the aqueduct across the Potomac, and ran it up to the upper end of the receiving reservoir, which had been filled some time before, the water became extremely obstinate, and all ran back to the Potomac. [Laughter.] The reservoir, from the surface ten feet down, was drained the moment the water was let in. It all flowed back to the Potomac. [Laughter.] Not one drop of it came this way after that. It became necessary, therefore, in order to prevent the flooding of the Potomac, [laughter,] that a gate should be put in at the upper end of the reservoir, which gate is there now, and preserves the Potomac river from being muddied by this aqueduct, [laughter,] but does not protect us from getting the muddy water this way. What is proposed here is to begin above the reservoir, and make a continuous pipe from there to Washington, avoiding the reservoir altogether, and putting a gate at the lower end of the reservoir, so that none of that water shall come here and pollute the water of the Potomac.

Then we have provided that in case of fire we can get the addition of that foul water to use for the purpose of extinguishing fires, if there should not be enough coming through the conduit. As the aqueduct is now built, the capacity of the pipe was such that the city would be supplied with Potomac water at the rate of twenty-five million gallons in twenty-four hours. When the cut-dam shall have been completed so as to fill that aqueduct full, it will furnish, without any reservoir, a constant stream equal to fifty million gallons in twenty-four hours. That the committee deem sufficient for all ordinary purposes. Leaving the reservoir for the extraordinary purposes of fire, we have thought it best for the present to abandon the work on the distributing reservoir. This will give to the city a reasonable amount of pure water for ordinary purposes, leaving the distributing reservoir to future time. We found that to deepen the distributing reservoir eight or nine feet, covering as it does so large a space, would involve the expenditure of a great deal of money. We have therefore proposed to carry the pipe around it and connect it with the pipe below as I have stated. I may say that the entire work upon the aqueduct up to this time has only been about $3,000,000.

The Clerk read the following paragraph to the bill:

Botanic Garden:

For grading, draining, procuring manure, tools, fuel, and repairs, purchasing trees and shrubs under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress, $3,300.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I move to strike that whole paragraph out. I cannot see any possible necessity for the appropriation. I believe the plants, seed, flowers, &c., of the green-house are appropriated almost exclusively for the benefit of members of Congress, and I think we can dispense with them very well. For one I should prefer to see these grounds laid out as a handsome park and planted with beautiful trees, instead of this green-house being kept there for the accommodation of members of Congress and their friends. I repeat that I think we can dispense with them very well, and I hope the flowers will be stricken out.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope it will be retained. The gentleman from Michigan I know is a gentleman of delicate tastes, and yet he first endeavors to deprive himself of music and then of flowers. He is surely doing himself great injustice. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will find some better argument than his delicate ridicule of gentlemen who oppose appropriations for their support if they are to be passed. I certainly think there is no necessity whatever for appropriating money to keep up a green-house for members of Congress.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Will the gentleman state how many bouquets he has received from the green-house, during this winter? I should like to have him state what became of that great bouquet I saw on his desk the other day. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I have had two or three bouquets during the winter, and I believe every gentleman here is notified that he can have them if he chooses. Members are also notified in the spring that they can have a box of plants, flowers, &c., which are all very desirable no doubt; but is it best to make this very considerable appropriation every year for that purpose? If we want a green-house for national purposes let us have one on a scale that will be worth the name; but rather than to make this appropriation for keeping up this green-house every year for this purpose, I ask gentlemen whether it would not be better to have these grounds laid out as a park, in which people may walk and enjoy themselves if they choose?

Mr. PRUYN. I hope the chairman of the Committee on the Library will explain this matter. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENS. I do not think it needs any explanation. My friend from Michigan seems to have been bit by HOLMAN. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I hope my bachelor friend will not get too facetious.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. FRANK moved to increase the appropriation to $5,345 70 in the following paragraph:

For pay of superintendent of botanic garden, and assistants in the botanic garden and green-houses, to be expended under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress, $5,221 50.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move to insert the following:

To pay Lewis Bollman and others for furnishing articles for the agricultural report for 1861, and to pay the claim of Vilmore, Andrews & Co. for acorns furnished the Agricultural Department, the sum of $3,704.

Mr. WILSON. I make the point of order on that amendment that it is not in pursuance of any existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. If that be the case, the amendment is not in order.

Mr. HALE. Before the Chair makes his decision I wish to say a word in reference to the amendment that I have proposed. It makes an appropriation to pay for articles furnished in 1861 for the agricultural report, which has been published and laid upon our desks. At that time the Bureau of Agriculture was under the Commissioner of Patents, and he employed these men to write these articles for the report for that year. It was done under act of Congress. They were to furnish these articles at a price which was fixed. In the mean time the Bureau of Agriculture was taken away from the Commissioner of Patents, and erected into a separate department under a Commissioner of Agriculture. The Commissioner of Agriculture had no funds, and those which the Commissioner of Patents had had been expended. The consequence had been that these men, who furnished these articles under contract with the Commissioner of Patents, and whose labor we have enjoyed in the agricultural reports which we have distributed throughout the country, have gone ever since uncompensated.

Mr. WILSON. This is nothing more than a private claim, and is not in order to an appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. It is a just and proper claim, and one which we ought to pay. I hold that it is in order because it provides for a deficiency in the Department of Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules the amendment out.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Columbian Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind:

For salaries and incidental expenses, embracing, in addition to the objects heretofore provided for in this appropriation, the salary of an additional teacher, construction of a new sewer, and the construction and repairs of fences, $7,500.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to add to that the following:

For continuing the work for the accommodation of the students and inmates in said institution, in addition to appropriations heretofore made.

For the purchase of a tract of improved land, containing about thirteen acres, bordering on Boundary Street of the city of Washington, and adjoining the lot now belonging to the institution, to enable it to instruct the male pupils in horticulture and agriculture, and to furnish sites for mechanic shops and other necessary buildings, $26,000.

For the erection of a building to be used as mechanic shops for the instruction of the pupils in useful labor, and to furnish more convenient and healthful apartments, as well for the instruction as for the sleeping rooms for the male pupils, $31,445 87.

To bring the Potomac water into the institution from the nearest water mains, or other adequate sources in the city, $3,200.

Mr. Chairman, the accommodations of that institution are now taxed to their utmost. Thereception of deaf and dumb children was limited to those from certain districts, but the children of killed and wounded soldiers in this war are taken wherever they may come from.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. I make the point that there is no law authorizing this appropriation, and that therefore it is not in order to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes too late.

Mr. STEVENS. This institution has been incorporated by Congress, and we have made appropriations for it every year. This appropriation is for the purpose of doing what we ought to have done long ago. I will say further that it is under the control of the Department of the Interior by express enactment of law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FENTON. I am authorized to offer the following amendment:

To enable the Commissioner of Patents to pay for carpenters' work done in the west wing of the Patent Office building, $5,720 04, or so much thereof as may be found necessary: Provided, That said work shall be referred to three commissioners, to be appointed by the Commissioner of Patents, for their inspection and measurement.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. That seems to me to be a private claim, and therefore not in order to this bill.

Mr. FENTON. It is an appropriation authorized under the act of 1857.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If it were authorized under that act it could be paid under that act.

Mr. FENTON. I will ask the Clerk to read the letter of the Commissioner of Patents.

The Clerk read, as follows:

"There was more than a sufficient sum appropriated to pay the full amount claimed by Mr. Davis, but the surplus remaining over after payment to him went back to the general fund of the Treasury. Mr. Davis having presented his claim for payment to your predecessor, Hon. Caleb B. Smith, - The Secretary, after careful personal examination of the claim of Mr. Davis, directed me by letter to have the work done by Mr. Davis remeasured by three practical mechanics.

"The measurement was intrusted by me to Messrs. Angus, Downing, and Morsell, who were highly recommended for competency and honesty, and who were selected on my own motion.

"These gentlemen having been duly sworn, reported to me that after careful examination, and making the deductions by the contract, the amount due Mr. Davis was $17,596 39, making $5,720 04 more than had been paid him. The appropriation asked for by the Secretary, in his estimate, was for the payment of that amount, which, in my opinion, is justly due him."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. That is evidently a private claim. It also provides for commissioners, and that is independent legislation.

Mr. FENTON. I am willing to strike out that part of the amendment which refers to commissioners.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order that this is a private claim, and not in order to this bill.

The Clerk read, as follows.

For surveying the public lands in the Territory of Idaho, $15,000.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I move to reduce that to $10,000, and to add a similar appropriation for Montana of $10,000.

Mr. WALLACE. I trust the amendment will not be adopted, for the reason that no public land has been surveyed in Idaho. The bill, as reported, only provides $15,000 for surveys in that Territory which has an area larger than any other Territory in the United States, and with the Territory of Montana, including an area nearly equal to eight States like Ohio. That Montana should have an appropriation equal to that of any other Territory must strike the mind of every gentleman upon this floor; but to reduce the appropriation for Idaho strikes me as wrong in the extreme, and as doing injustice to the people of that Territory. For this reason, I trust the amendment proposed will not be adopted.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I have no ill-will against Idaho, and would do anything I could for her. I moved the amendment because Montana was omitted, and because Montana was carved out of Idaho and should have the benefit of a part of the appropriation. As $10,000 only was appropriated for some of the other Territories, I supposed the Committee of Ways and Means intended the $15,000 for the whole Territory of Idaho before Montana was taken out. If that is so, the amendment is just and proper.

Mr. WALLACE. As I understand it, the proposition to organize the Territory of Montana out of Idaho was before the House before this estimate was submitted to the Committee of Ways and Means, and that the $15,000 was intended for Idaho exclusive of Montana.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I would inquire of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means whether this sum of $15,000 was intended to cover the surveying for the Territory of Idaho excluding Montana?

Mr. STEVENS. It was intended to cover the whole Territory before Montana was carved out of it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHLEY. I now move to insert after line two hundred and fifty-three the following:

For surveying the public lands in the Territory of Montana, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I now move to strike out "and" in line two hundred and twenty-nine, and insert after "Idaho" the words "and Montana," so as to make the provision in reference to the general appropriation for surveys complete.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKS. I avail myself of the opportunity in connection with these appropriations amounting to nearly three hundred thousand dollars for surveying the public land, to say that I hope that some gentleman from the western States or Territories will at an early period next session of Congress introduce a bill giving all the public lands to the States and Territories, reserving the right of Congress to insist upon our excellent system of surveying. We are appropriating large sums of money for these Territories, and we have given large portions of the public lands away under the homestead bill, but have taken back a large part under the railroad and wagon road grants which have passed this Congress; so that in point of fact the whole public domain has or is about to become of no value to the people of the United States.

Under the circumstances it seems to me the wisest course we can take is to free ourselves from this railroad, wagon road, and telegraph line legislation in the Halls of Congress, and transfer it to the States and Territories. If the system is to be persisted in—and I suppose it is—of throwing away this immensely valuable domain, and deriving no income from it hereafter to assist in the payment of the public debt, I am quite disposed to second any bill, as at present advised, which may come from the western States or Territories, giving this public domain to the States and Territories.

Mr. KINNEY. I move to amend by inserting, after line two hundred and fifty-three, "for surveying the public lands in the Territory of Utah, $10,000." My chief object in offering this amendment is to provide compensation for surveying the Indian reservations in Utah, which by act of the present Congress have been vacated, ordered to be surveyed into subdivisions, and sold in fee simple.

I see by the provisions of this bill appropriating money for public surveys that the Territory of Utah is entirely ignored. I cannot think it was intentional on the part of the Committee of Ways and Means to overlook so important a Territory. There is no appropriation in this bill for public surveys in that Territory; but, on the contrary, in a paragraph on the antecedent page the Territory of Utah is excluded from any share in the benefits of appropriations for surveys of the public lands, while all the other Territories of the United States are provided for. Such seems to be the case from a hasty examination of the bill, never having seen it until this moment. I call the attention of the House to this fact, as I have upon other occasions during the present session when that Territory has been excluded from her just share of appropriations for useful and necessary purposes, and again remind the House that there is such a Territory as Utah, larger in population and agricultural wealth than any other Territory in the United States.

The remarks of the distinguished gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] who has just taken his seat, that the public lands should be donated to the actual settlers of our western Territories, strikes me with much force. Such donations would be but an act of justice to the enterprising pioneers who, as the advance guard in civilization, are forming mighty States upon the western confines of this New World. Especially are the people of Utah entitled in this particular to the most liberal legislation. No Territory has ever been settled under as many weighty discouragements, none where the prospects for agriculture were not more inviting.

Oregon, with her rich valleys, her genial climate and fertilizing showers, was not sufficiently attractive for settlement, until, to induce emigration, Congress made liberal donations of public lands to actual settlers, and then, and not until then, did emigration take up the line of march to that distant Territory.

No such encouraging legislation or fostering care has ever been extended to the people of Utah. Unaided by Congress they have settled a desert, and by their energy have far outstripped in population and prosperity their more favored sister Territories. Manifest your appreciation of their hardships by donating to the people the land they occupy, which but for them, I hesitate not to say, would not have been reduced to intelligent cultivation. I therefore unite most heartily in the sentiment expressed by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] and indulge the hope that that gentleman will, at an early day of the next session, propose a bill and lend the influence of his great ability in perfecting a system by which the actual settlers of our western Territories shall receive as a free gift from the Government the lands of the Territories, not only for agriculture, but for schools and colleges, public buildings, and for purposes of general improvement.

But, sir, there is another point intimately connected with the question under consideration. Congress has wisely provided a homestead law for actual settlers upon the public lands. This law can be made available to persons in every Territory in the United States, except in Utah. Do gentlemen ask me how it is that the people of Utah are excluded from the benefits of this law? I will tell you, Mr. Chairman. In the first place there is no land district or land office in that Territory. The settlers cannot make a legal selection, or at least cannot perfect a selection by recording a description of the land selected in the land office, for the very potent reason that there is no office in the Territory where it can be done. In the second place the land must first be surveyed by the Government, the township, section, and quarter section lines established, before the settler can file in the land office a description of the land claimed as a homestead. Both a land office and a Government survey are necessary in order to make the homestead law available. By withholding an appropriation for a survey of the lands in Utah, the people are prevented from taking the first necessary step toward perfecting their inchoate rights under your wise and beneficent homestead law.

Mr. STEVENS. The omission to make surveys in Utah has been entirely for the benefit of the inhabitants of the Territory. As the gentleman, I suppose, is well aware, a good deal of money has been expended heretofore in making surveys in Utah, and yet there has never been an acre of surveyed land called for.

Mr. KINNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there never has been a public land office established in the Territory of Utah so that the people could purchase lands.

Mr. STEVENS. They take the land just as well and rather better than if it was surveyed, and it is because we do not wish to disturb them in their peaceful and harmonious action that this omission has been made. The note of the Land Office to the estimates states that no estimate is submitted for Utah for the reason that there exists no demand for surveyed lands in Utah Territory.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would ask the Delegate from Utah if there is no land office in the Territory.

Mr. KINNEY. Not one; no land office has been established there, and hence we can purchase no lands.

Mr. STEVENS. We had better establish a land office there before we authorize any further surveys. Until that is done, it would be idle to survey more land there. But we cannot by this bill establish such an office there.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would ask the Delegate from Utah if the people or the Legislative Assembly of his Territory have ever petitioned the General Land Office to have the lands surveyed for the purpose of bringing them into market.

Mr. KINNEY. I am not aware that they have. Organizing a land district and establishing a land office was so reasonable and just that it was hardly to be expected that they would petition for it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If the people of Utah wish to have the lands surveyed, they have only to bring the matter to the attention of the Land Office or of Congress. I think we need make no appropriation now. Whenever the people of the Territory come and ask to have their lands surveyed for the purpose of purchasing, I have no doubt the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will be very much gratified to report an appropriation to survey the lands.

Mr. KINNEY. The amount of the appropriation proposed in the amendment is very small, only $10,000; and the lands in the vacated Indian reservations ought certainly to be surveyed; they cannot be sold until they are surveyed, and they cannot be surveyed until Congress makes an appropriation for that purpose. I do not want to press this matter in opposition to the desire of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means. He informs me that it is not properly in order here. I therefore withdraw the amendment.

Mr. McBRIDE. I offer the following amendment, to come in on line two hundred and thirty-nine, as follows:

Provided, That in expending these appropriations the Commissioner of the Land Office may, in his discretion, allow a sum not exceeding two dollars per mile in addition to the rate now fixed by law for surveys.

Mr. STEVENS. I should be very glad to have that done, but I must raise the point of order that this is establishing a new rule and changing the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend by striking out the clause appropriating $300,000 for continuing the work on the Capitol extension. Mr. Chairman, when the deficiency bill was before the House last winter, I opposed the item appropriating $250,000 for this Capitol extension. I attempted to arrest the appropriation, but like almost all other attempts of the same character I have made, it failed. The reason given for the appropriation at that time was that the work needed protection, and that if the appropriation was not made the building would suffer because of the unfinished condition in which it was. I believed then and believe now that a much less sum would have been sufficient to protect the work, and that at least $225,000 of the appropriation might have been saved. That appropriation was made, however; and now we are asked for an additional sum of $300,000 for continuing the work on the same building, and the same reason is given for it that was given for the appropriation of $250,000.

I do hope, Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the many exhibitions of a determination on the part of the House to pass everything in the shape of appropriations, that this appropriation will not be made, and that so much money will not be expended in this work at this time when there are so many immediate, pressing needs for the money.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, called for tellers on the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BLAINE, and WASHBURNE of Illinois, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 43, noes 50.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend by striking out the appropriation of $500,000 for the continuation of the north wing of the Treasury building. I ask for a vote upon the amendment without occupying the time of the committee with a speech. I have been charged with occupying much time here with speeches, but I think the Globe will show that I occupy as little time in that way as any member on this floor. I make this motion now because I think it should be sustained, and because the money should be applied to other purposes. I offer the amendment in good faith, and I am only sorry that I have not the power to put gentlemen on the record by yeas and nays on this question.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "Treasury" the word "building," so that it will read "Treasury building extension."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected. The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LAW. I move to amend by inserting the following:

For the embankment of the Ohio river on the grounds of the Evansville Marine Hospital, (Indiana,) for the purpose of preserving said grounds and hospital from being injured by the floods in said river, $30,000.

Mr. STEVENS. That is one of the amendments that have been ruled out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STEVENS. I will state to the gentleman that we have this item in another bill.

Mr. LAW. I desire to show why it should be in this bill rather than in another. Some ten or fifteen years ago Congress appropriated a large sum of money for building a hospital on grounds below Evansville. The Government purchased a square of land, and appropriated sixty or seventy thousand dollars in the erection of buildings. Owing to the floods in the Ohio river every spring the embankment in front of the building is giving way; and the result is that while the building stood six hundred yards from the river when it was erected it is now only one hundred and sixty yards from it, and the ground is giving way more and more every spring.

Mr. SLOAN. I make a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. I wish to state that this item does not come within the class of cases ruled out of order. I understand this to be an appropriation to preserve a public building at Evansville, Indiana, constructed in pursuance of law. The express ruling on the point of order was that any appropriation to preserve and finish a building was in order, and was a proper item in this bill.

Mr. LAW. An act of Congress was passed and an appropriation made for the building itself, and I say to my friend from Pennsylvania that whatever is done to preserve it should be done quickly; that before the passage of the bill to which he refers I am afraid one half of the work will be destroyed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment to be out of order, and he does it on his construction of the following rule:

"No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, and for the contingencies for carrying on the several departments of the Government."

Mr. LAW. It is precisely on that rule that I insist that the amendment is in order.

Mr. MALLORY. It is; that is the point I make, that there is a law authorizing this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not been able to find any law, and decides the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. LAW. I understood that the point of order had been waived in order to enable me to make an explanation. I think I have a perfect right to explain why this appropriation should be passed now, and I therefore ask the consent of the House to say that for the interest of the Government, as a matter of economy, it is important that the appropriation should be made immediately, in order to prevent the destruction of the whole property; and I repeat that if it is put in the bill the gentleman from Pennsylvania says he is about to report that before that bill will pass and we are able to get the money probably one half of the property will be destroyed. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that there is no objection to the appropriation, and that he has put it in the other bill.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I desire to know what question is before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question before the committee. The Chair has decided the amendment to be out of order; and the gentleman is speaking by unanimous consent.

Mr. MALLORY. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. LAW. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether this appropriation is not in the other bill to which he refers.

Mr. STEVENS. It is in the bill which I endeavored to report on Saturday, but which I could not report except by unanimous consent, and somebody objected. We shall report it the first opportunity we get.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask the committee to allow me a moment to explain my appeal.

Mr. STEVENS. Oh, no, I think it explains itself.

Mr. MALLORY. I want to say that I do it with great reluctance, and I would not insist on it at all if the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not know the decision was wrong.

On sustaining the decision of the Chair 51 voted in the affirmative and 82 in the negative; no quorum.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MALLORY and PATTERSON were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 39.

So the decision of the Chair ruling the amendment out of order was sustained.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to explain the paragraph ending line two hundred and sixty-eight, making an appropriation of $30,000 for the construction of vaults for the security of the public funds in United States depositories.

Mr. STEVENS. It refers, I suppose, to the sub-Treasuries or perhaps the national banks designated as depositories.

Mr. WILSON. I understand then that this appropriation is for the construction of vaults for the national banks which have been designated as depositories. Now it does seem to me that it is sufficient for us to deposit the money of the United States with these national banks without building vaults for them. I suppose they ought to have vaults for themselves of their own.

Mr. STEVENS. These are vaults for the sub-Treasuries.

Mr. WILSON. I understood the gentleman to say national banks.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman knows that there are a good many sub-Treasuries or depositories, and several of them have no safes. This is for the purpose of providing safes for them.

Mr. WILSON. I only wish to be informed in reference to this matter. If the Committee of Ways and Means have any estimates, I should like to see them. I want to know whether this appropriation is for the construction of vaults in banks which have been designated as depositories.

Mr. STEVENS. Let this be passed over for the present.

Mr. WILSON. I agree to that.

The Clerk read, as follows:

For the repair and preservation of custom-houses, marine hospitals, and other public buildings under the supervision of the Treasury Department, $40,000.

Mr. BROOKS. I move to strike that out. It is another one of the class of wandering appropriations which we ought to put a stop to. Here is an appropriation of $40,000 for custom-houses and marine hospitals generally. No particular custom-houses or marine hospitals are specified. The Department can spend the money where it pleases.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. This is a proper provision, which has been in the appropriation bill every year. There are small repairs to be made in the custom-houses and marine hospitals which are submitted to the Treasury Department, and this appropriation is necessary to pay them where they are ordered to be made.

Mr. BROOKS. My friend seems to be on the wrong side.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. No, sir; this is a just and proper appropriation; it is the usual appropriation.

Mr. BROOKS. It may have been the practice to pass these wandering appropriations within the past six years, but I know that it was not the practice ten years ago. It was then insisted that appropriations should be specific; and loose, wandering appropriations of this character would not be supported by either side of the House.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to go back to the appropriation for the construction of vaults. The estimates are as follows:

For building vaults, as an additional security to the public funds in United States depositories, $30,000.

Mr. WILSON. That is almost the exact language used in the bill. It does not explain what these depositories are. I want to know whether any of these vaults are to be built in any of the banks which have been designated as depositories.

Mr. STEVENS. It refers to the depositories under the sub-Treasury law.

Mr. WILSON. Some of the national banks recently established are now in operation and have been designated as depositories of the public funds.

Mr. STEVENS. Not under the sub-Treasury act.

Mr. WILSON. I do not know that. We have obtained no information on the subject from the estimate which has been read. It is the same as the language used in the bill. Now, unless we have some further information on the subject I shall move to strike the appropriation out.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. In order to make it certain I move to amend it so that it will read, for additional security under the sub-Treasury law. I have no doubt that is what it means.

Mr. STEVENS. It ought not to be confined to that.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I shall oppose this appropriation until we know specifically where these vaults are to be built. We had twenty depositories under the law existing at the commencement of this session, and we had not any intimation that there was any deficiency in vaults for the public money. We know that under the act of this session the Secretary of the Treasury has been authorized to constitute various national banks depositories of the public money. We know also that the money received in payment of taxes is at present, against my judgment and protest, deposited in these banks. I am unwilling to appropriate money to build vaults in these banks, and I am unwilling to make this appropriation until we know where these vaults are to be built, and whether they are necessary or not.

The amendment of Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, was agreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. WILSON's motion, and the paragraph, as amended, was stricken out.

The Clerk read, as follows:

For plates, paper, and special dies, and the printing of circulating notes, and expenses necessarily incurred in procuring said notes, including miscellaneous items, $441,350.

Mr. BROOKS. I must avail myself of this opportunity to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means one or two questions. He gives us an opportunity to discuss the bills that he reports; but there is another member of that committee who has reported a bill which is now upon our tables, and who never gives us any opportunity for discussion. In that bill there is an appropriation of $4,000,000 for issuing $400,000,000 of Treasury notes. I wish to know whether this appropriation is necessary in connection with that $4,000,000. I would not press the inquiry now if I did not feel quite sure that when that $400,000,000 bill comes up it will be put through under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. I was not aware that $4,000,000 were appropriated.

Mr. BROOKS. It is in the eighth section of House bill No. 515, reported by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOOPER.]

Mr. STEVENS. It has not been passed.
Mr. BROOKS. It is to be passed, I fear, under the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. When that bill comes up I hope the gentleman will have an opportunity to discuss it.

Mr. BROOKS. I hope the gentleman will give me that opportunity.

Mr. STEVENS. So far as I am concerned, I will.

Mr. BROOKS. I am quite sure the gentleman will, but I fear other gentlemen may not.

The Clerk read the following:

For compensation of the Assistant Treasurer at Philadelphia, $4,000.

Mr. STEVENS. I am willing that should be stricken out.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was understood that that should be stricken out, and I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STILES. I move to amend by inserting, after line three hundred and one, "for additional compensation to the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, $1,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose a point of order should be raised on the amendment of my friend. I dislike to raise it upon my friend, and against the gentleman who is intended to be benefited by this amendment, but I must insist upon my objection to this mode of legislation. My point is that the amendment increases the compensation of this officer, and hence is changing an existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules out the amendment.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by inserting after line three hundred and one the following:

For payment of salaries for additional clerks in the Navy Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865, $9,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by inserting after the last amendment the following:

To compensate persons on board the United States gunboat Cincinnati, in accordance with the joint resolution, approved February 19, 1864, $7,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COLE, of California. I move to amend by inserting after line three hundred and three the following:

For compensation to the stamp clerk in the office of the Assistant Treasurer at San Francisco, $2,400, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

When the law providing for the stamping of instruments went into effect the Government furnished that officer all the stamps to be used in that country. He had to sell, distribute, and dispose of them. It was throwing a new burden on him, and it became indispensable to employ an additional clerk for the purpose of keeping the accounts in connection with that branch of business.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. As it is about time to take a recess, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PIKE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 527) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1865, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. The hour of half past four o'clock having arrived, the House, according to order, will take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

The House took a recess accordingly.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

RESERVATIONS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. STEELE, of New York, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee for the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, instructed to ascertain by what authority or other means the public reservations, streets, and avenues of the city of Washington are devoted to corporate or individual uses, and what legislation, if any, is necessary to preserve and perpetuate such reservations, streets, and avenues, to the uses and purposes for which they were originally intended, and to report by bill or otherwise; and for the purposes of this resolution, said committee are hereby authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers and administer oaths, and do and perform such other acts and things as may be necessary and proper in the premises.

COMMUTATION, ETC.

Mr. SCHENCK. Among the reports to be made to-morrow by the Committee on Military Affairs is one in relation to commutation, substitution, &c. I desire to have the bill printed and recommitted to the committee, so that the House may see what it is.

Mr. BROOKS. I object to that unless I can have some understanding as to whether this bill is to be put through to-morrow under the previous question.

Mr. SCHENCK. That depends upon the disposition of the House.

Mr. BROOKS. Does the gentleman propose to pass the bill without any discussion?

Mr. SCHENCK. I suppose the House will understand thoroughly what the measure is.

Mr. BROOKS. Well, I object.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of reporting the bill with a view to have it recommitted and printed.

The question was put on the motion to suspend the rules, and there were—ayes 21, noes 6; no quorum voting.

Mr. BROOKS. I would certainly desire to see that bill in print, but if it is to be put through, after an explanation from the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and without any discussion of it on the other side, or any proper understanding of it, I would rather have it put through without printing.

Mr. SCHENCK. I withdraw my motion.

CALIFORNIA STATE PRISON.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table bill of the Senate (No. 306) to grant to the State of California certain lands for State prison purposes.

No objection was made; and the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from California explain the grounds on which he asks the passage of this bill?

Mr. HIGBY. These grounds are adjacent to the State prison of our State, and the object is to secure the title in the lands to the State.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. Are there any opposing claims to the land?

Mr. HIGBY. These are protected by this bill. There are no grants there.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. Then I have no objection to the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HIGBY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. A. W. CLARK, from the Committee on Printing, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, bill of the Senate No. 265, to expedite and regulate the printing of public documents, and for other purposes.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. A. W. CLARK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM YOCUM.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, by unanimous consent, submitted a written report in response to the resolution of the House instructing the committee to inquire into and report all the facts connected with the alleged trial, imprisonment, and pardon of William Yocum, of Illinois, and his detention in prison after his pardon.

The report was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

MISCELLANEOUS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill making appropriations for certain miscellaneous expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th of June, 1865; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEVENS. I would like to have Friday next fixed for the consideration of this bill. It will take only about half an hour.

Mr. PENDLETON. This is not a general appropriation bill, and I must object.

Mr. STEVENS. I think there is nothing in the bill to which anybody can object.

Mr. PENDLETON. I dislike to object, and I hope that the gentleman will not press the motion that the bill shall be made a special order.

Mr. STEVENS. I give notice then that I will call it up on Thursday or Friday next.

NAVY-YARD EMPLOYEES.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution concerning the employes at the United States navy-yards; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. What does the gentleman propose to do with that joint resolution?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I propose to put it on its passage.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I object.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Then I move that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be requested to examine into the expediency of repealing all laws or parts of laws which require at stated periods the regulation and fixing of the rate of pay of the mechanics, workmen, and other employes in the different navy yards according to the rates paid in private ship-yards, workshops, or establishments where mechanical or other labor is employed, in the neighborhood of the respective navy-yards; and to report at an early day by bill or otherwise.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Mr. STEELE, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to incorporate the Young Men's Christian Association; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

Mr. ASHLEY. I ask unanimous consent to present the following joint resolution, which I will agree to postpone that it may be printed:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That when the inhabitants of any State have been declared in a state of insurrection against the United States by proclamation of the President, by force and virtue of the act entitled "An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved July 13, 1861, they shall be, and are hereby, declared to be incapable of casting any vote for electors of President or Vice President of the United States, or of electing Senators or Representatives in Congress, until said insurrection in said State is suppressed or abandoned, and said inhabitants have returned to their obedience to the Constitution and Government of the United States, nor until such return to obedience shall be declared by proclamation of the President, issued by virtue of an act of Congress authorizing the same.

Mr. DAWES. I object.

GIFT OF SOLDIERS' WEAPONS.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the justice and expediency of providing by proper legislation that every soldier in the military service of the United States who shall keep in his possession during his term of service his musket, rifle, sword, or carbine, without ever losing or surrendering the same, shall on his honorable discharge be presented with such weapon as a testimony of valor and patriotism for himself, and a most precious heirloom for his family, and that said committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BROOKS. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the two Houses of Congress being unable to agree upon the time of adjournment, the President be requested to adjourn them to such time as he shall think proper, that time not extending beyond the first Monday of next December.

Mr. STEVENS. I object; and I now move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PIKE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN stated the pending question to be on the following amendment:

For compensation to the stamp clerk in the office of the Assistant Treasurer at San Francisco, $2,400, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. COLE, of California. Mr. Chairman, when the law passed requiring stamps to be affixed to all instruments, they were issued and sent to the Assistant Treasurer of the United States at San Francisco, and the duty was devolved upon him to dispose of them. This rendered it necessary for him to employ a stamp clerk, for whose payment there has been as yet no provision of law. This appropriation is for the payment of that clerk, and I hope it will be passed.

I will state, for the information of members, that the Assistant Treasurer at San Francisco is also superintendent of the mint, and he is burdened with business perhaps more than any other officer of the Government. When this extra duty was imposed upon him it was necessary for him to employ a clerk, and that clerk ought to be paid.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I reserved a point of order on this amendment. I ask that it be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say that when the business of taxing by stamps first commenced there were no parties in California to whom the stamps could be properly sent for distribution on the Pacific coast, and a special law was passed in order to give the people of California an opportunity to purchase the stamps required to be used in their business, designating this officer to receive them. I suppose it was really necessary for him to employ a clerk and that this amendment was proper.

Mr. STEVENS. Upon the point of order I desire to say that under the rule any amendment that may be necessary for that purpose is in order. This is an amendment for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN: The Chair overrules the question of order.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I now move as an independent section or paragraph if necessary, in order to make it in order, an amendment making provision for continuing the light-house works at Racine and Milwaukee. The amendment would more properly come in on the 3d page, if there be no objection, although it is in order here. I submit the following:

For completing the light-house works at Milwaukee, in addition to former appropriations, $12,287 25.

For completing the light-house works at Racine, in addition to former appropriations, $21,335 25.

I now call for the reading of a communication from the Light-House Board.

The Clerk read, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD,
WASHINGTON, April 12, 1864.

SIR: In compliance with your oral request, I transmit herewith copies of the estimates of amounts of appropriation required to complete the light-house works at Racine and Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

These estimates are approved by the Light-House Board, and it is hoped that the appropriations may be speedily made.

Very respectfully,

W. B. SHUBRICK,
Chairman.

Hon. J. R. DOOLITTLE, United States Senate.

Estimate of amount required for completion of light-house and pier at Racine.

For ten cribs to form piers of protection.....	$38,477 97
For screw bolts.....	363 00
For foundation of dwelling and tower.....	3,658 10
For tools and appliances.....	2,935 68
For keeper's dwelling with tower.....	8,000 00

$53,434 75

Deduct present value of materials on hand, and workmanship and labor performed, to include September 30, 1863, balance in hands of Light-House engineer at that date, and also the balance in the Treasury of the appropriation of June 20, 1860, for this work.....

32,099 47

Additional amount required to be appropriated according to present plan.....

$21,335 28

There being no objection, the amendment was adopted and inserted after the fifty-fourth line on page 3.

Mr. HALE. I move to add the following as a new section:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized to allow the clerk in the Treasury Department who, outside of his stated duties, prepares the annual estimates of appropriations, the sum of $250 per annum for each year that he has performed the work, and the amount necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to a question of order. That amendment provides for new legislation. There is no law authorizing the payment of this money that I know of.

Mr. HALE. I understand that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will go for this amendment.

Mr. WILSON. I do not know anything about that, but the appropriation is not in pursuance of existing law, and I raise the question of order.

Mr. HALE. It is in order, and in pursuance of law. The law requires this work to be done and this is an appropriation to pay for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the question of order, and decides the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. PENDLETON. I move to add the following as a new section:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the compensation of the clerk of the Committee of Ways and Means shall be $2,160 per annum, to commence with the present Congress, and that such an amount as shall be found necessary be, and hereby is, appropriated.

Mr. WILSON. How long is that to last?

Mr. PENDLETON. Till otherwise ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object to that if it is to extend beyond this Congress. If the gentleman will so modify his amendment as to confine it to this Congress, I will not object; otherwise I shall make the point of order that it is new legislation.

Mr. DAWES. I shall be under the necessity of raising a question of order unless the amendment can be so modified as to include the clerk of the Committee of Elections at $1,800 a year.

Mr. PENDLETON. If there be no other question of order except that raised by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN,] I will accept the modification proposed by him.

Mr. DAWES. I shall certainly raise a question of order unless the gentleman will put in the clerk of the Committee of Elections at $1,800 a year. I make the proposition in good faith, and hope the gentleman will accept it.

Mr. SCHENCK. Well, sir, I shall make a point of order upon the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] unless the clerk of the Committee on Military Affairs is also included at $1,800 a year.

Mr. PENDLETON. Has not the Committee on Military Affairs had a clerk at $1,800 a year during the whole session?

Mr. SCHENCK. No, sir; but the duties are very heavy, and he ought to be paid that compensation.

Mr. DAWES. The duties of the clerk of the Committee of Elections during the present session have been very important; there is no committee in the House which has had more arduous or continued labors to perform.

Mr. PENDLETON. I submit to the Chair that these questions of order are not debatable.

Mr. DAWES. I raise the point of order, and will insist upon it, unless the concession be made to these two clerks of committees.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman cannot raise a conditional point of order.

Mr. DAWES. Then I make it unconditionally. I do not desire to interfere with what is a fair compensation for the clerk of the Committee of Ways and Means; at the same time the Committee of Ways and Means should yield to these two other committees.

Mr. PENDLETON. The question is not debatable.

Mr. DAWES. I withdraw the point of order, and will trust to the House to permit this amendment to be offered for these two clerks of committees. I move to amend by inserting $1,800 for the clerk of the Committee of Elections.

Mr. PENDLETON. I desire to know if the point of order is withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been. The question is now on the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio. Has he modified it according to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN?]

Mr. PENDLETON. I prefer not to modify it.

Mr. DAWES. I move to amend the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that there is no point of order made on the amendment.

Mr. WILSON. I raise a point of order on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DAWES. My amendment is that the clerk of the Committee of Elections and of the Committee on Military Affairs shall be paid for this Congress a salary of $1,800.

Mr. PENDLETON. I will accept that amendment provided there be no point of order made on it.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is made by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.]

Mr. PENDLETON. It is made on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PENDLETON. If agreeable to the gentleman from Iowa I will accept the amendment, otherwise I will not.

The CHAIRMAN. The original amendment is received, not being objected to. The amendment to it offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is objected to; and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SCHENCK. Before the vote is taken on the amendment I desire to say that my colleague is mistaken in regard to the state of facts as to the clerk of the Committee on Military Affairs. Owing to the immense amount of work thrown on that committee and its clerk, I proposed, at an early period of the session, to increase the compensation of the clerk to $1,800 per annum, being the sum which was then and is now paid to the clerk of the Committee of Ways and Means, and to some two or three other clerks of committees. The objection was made that that was too much.

What is not enough now for the clerk of the Committee of Ways and Means was then esteemed too much for the clerk of the Committee on Military Affairs. We had, therefore, to get the best we could, and the salary was reduced, because of that objection, to a per diem payment amounting to much less than $1,800 for the year, to be paid only during the session. That clerk is allowed nothing except while Congress is in session, which, for the short session, is only about ninety days—and at a per diem. We esteemed it unfair, but it was the best we could get. If the salary of the clerk of the Committee of Ways and Means is to be now increased to a sum so much beyond what he was then receiving, I deem it not unfair to ask for the clerks of these other committees what was thought too little for the clerk of the Committee of Ways and Means. We only ask for them now what the clerk of the Committee of Ways and Means has been all along receiving.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to state that it is absolutely necessary that there shall be prepared a digest of contested-election cases since 1834; and I submit that gentlemen should withdraw any objection to a reasonable allowance to the clerk of the Committee of Elections for preparing that digest.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Rather than agree to the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts in that shape, I suggest that it shall be put in another shape which will accomplish the same end. I think this digest should be made, and that there should be a small sum allowed to the party preparing it.

Mr. DAWES. I should be very glad to adopt that suggestion if I knew what was a reasonable sum. If the gentleman has any knowledge of what would be a reasonable sum I should be glad to hear it named. The last digest was made up to only 1834. Previous to that it made a volume equal to Brightley's Digest; and since that no digest has been made.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I think $500 would pay him well.

Mr. DAWES. I think a sum not exceeding $1,000 would be right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. What became of the amendment to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It was not received.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend by inserting, after line three hundred and three, the following as a new paragraph:

For compensation of clerks and extra clerk hire, in addition to that already appropriated, in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, $100,000.

Perhaps this amendment deserves some explanation, as it appropriates a large sum. On the 20th of last month the Secretary of the Treasury wrote to the Committee of Ways and Means saying that $100,000 was necessary for this purpose; and we inserted in the legislative bill, I believe, an appropriation of $100,000, which was then supposed to be sufficient for the increasing business of the next fiscal year. On Saturday last we received another letter from the Secretary in which he says that he requested of the Committee of Ways and Means an appropriation of $100,000 for compensation of clerks and extra clerk hire, in addition to the amount previously estimated for; that he is now convinced that that sum will not be adequate to the requirements of the Department under the continual and rapid increase of business in its several branches. He states that the several bureaus have indicated the necessity of an addition to their present force, which would require in the aggregate an expenditure of about $150,000 during the next fiscal year.

I think we have already appropriated $100,000 in a previous bill, and under that impression I now offer an amendment to appropriate $100,000 more. If it should turn out that we have not appropriated $100,000 I shall ask hereafter to increase this amount.

Mr. GANSON. I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether there is any explanation by the Department why on the 20th of May last they thought $100,000 would be sufficient, and on the 18th of June they find out that $150,000 more is necessary? It is a very remarkable circumstance.

Mr. STEVENS. The Secretary states that he has since received reports from all the heads of bureaus showing that business is increasing to such an extent that $150,000 more will be necessary. I think we have already appropriated $100,000, and have now moved an additional sum of $100,000, thinking that, perhaps, may be sufficient.

Mr. HALE. I would like to know under what law this appropriation is asked. I was ruled out of order just now in offering an amendment to appropriate $3,000 to pay a debt of the Agricultural Department. The Agricultural Department is established by law, as much as the Treasury Department.

Mr. STEVENS. There is an express provision that any amendment necessary to carry on the Department is in order. I am sure my friend would not object because he was ruled out.

Mr. HALE. I merely wished to know what the difference is. There is a difference in the amount, I know, but I do not know of any other difference.

Mr. BROOKS. Is there any estimate showing for what purpose these clerks are wanted, or in what bureaus?

Mr. STEVENS. The letter just read states that the Secretary has received reports from the heads of all the bureaus in which the aggregate amount is $150,000. We have put it at $100,000.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not like to see this carping at appropriations of this sort. The Secretary of the Treasury is issuing money at the rate of one or two millions a day, and I would give him all the additional clerks he wants. We are informed by him that he is calling in circulation at the rate of a quarter of a million a day, and issuing bonds, and he wants this additional clerical force to aid him in the calling-in process. I do not think there ought to be any questioning or carping on this subject. I think we ought to let him have these additional clerks and to appropriate the money to pay these clerks.

Mr. STEVENS called for tellers on his amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. GANSON and BEAMAN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 29.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to insert the following as a new paragraph:

For payment to Messrs. Little, Brown & Co., for three hundred and ninety-five volumes of the Statutes at Large, at $3.50 per volume, delivered by order of the Secretary of the Interior, dated February 21, 1863, $2,765.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to a question of order. That is a private claim against the Government, and is not in pursuance of existing law.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman is mistaken. There was a law passed expressly authorizing the publication of these books by Little, Brown & Co. They did publish them, and they sent them here, and they have never received pay, because there was no appropriation to pay them. I guess that if there is an honest firm in the country it is the firm of Little, Brown & Co., of Boston. Nobody, I think, does work better than they do. I do not think there is any printing in the United States equal to that of the Statutes at Large.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BLAINE. Little & Brown have not furnished the kind of index which they stipulated to furnish, and if we have any power over them I think we ought to exercise it by stopping this appropriation.

Mr. WILSON. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It is apparent that the amendment is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decided in accordance with the statement of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means that there is an existing law authorizing this purchase.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I should like to have that law read.

Mr. WILSON. The existence of any such law is disputed, and for that reason this claim ought to come in in a separate bill where it can be considered on its merits.

The question was taken on the appeal; and the decision of the Chair was sustained as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I should like now to have some explanation of the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. When the contract was originally made with Little, Brown & Co., it was for two thousand copies of this work. At that time the volumes were not half as large as they are now. I believe it will be conceded on all hands that there never was a work of this kind better executed, on better paper, or more accurately printed than this has been.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to ask the gentleman when those books were delivered?

Mr. MORRILL. After books were no longer distributed to members of Congress, a smaller number was required for the purposes of the Department, and instead of ordering two thousand copies, I believe they first ordered sixteen hundred and five copies and subsequently only three hundred and ninety-five copies. I think that was some time in 1863, and it is for those copies that pay is now asked. They were sent here under orders from the Interior Department.

The question was taken on Mr. STEVENS's amendment; and it was agreed to—ayes 64, noes 28.

Mr. DAWES. I now offer the following amendment, to which I hope no gentleman will object, for I am certain they will see the justice of it:

For compensation to the clerk of the Committee of Elections for preparing for publication a continuation of the digest of election cases, to be expended under the direction of said committee, the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as in the opinion of said committee shall be necessary therefor.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire what is the present compensation of the clerk of the Committee of Elections.

Mr. DAWES. He gets only his four dollars per day during the session, the ordinary pay of a clerk, although his duties are very arduous.

Mr. HOLMAN. Through what series of years is it necessary to make this compilation?

Mr. DAWES. There is a digest up to 1834. The design is to continue that down to the present time.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will make a point of order, unless an amendment to the amendment is in order.

Mr. DAWES. I trust the gentleman will not interpose an objection to this.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask to have an amendment to the amendment read. If that is not in order I will object.

Mr. WILSON. I object to any bargains.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts. I would like to know under what law that is to be appropriated. I just now offered an amendment which was ruled out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DAWES. I raised no point of order on the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HALE. It was raised over there in your neighborhood. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAWES. If I were responsible for what occurs in my neighborhood I would have a different state of things.

Mr. HALE. A man is known by the company he keeps. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAWES. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. HALE. The clerk in the Treasury Department who makes out the estimates for appropriations asks for $250; and the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means knows he ought to have it.

Mr. STEVENS. I did not object to it.

Mr. HALE. You did not, I know.

Mr. DAWES. I submit that the House should give to the Committee of Elections an opportunity to collect the contested-election cases, so that we may make more reasonable reports. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is out of order.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HALE] has withdrawn the point of order on my amendment.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DAWES. I now offer my amendment:

For compensation to the clerk of the Committee of Elections for preparing for publication a continuous digest of election cases, to be expended under the direction of said committee, the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as in the opinion of the said committee shall be necessary therefor.

Mr. SCHENCK. I propose to amend the amendment, and if my amendment is not in order, I am sure that the gentleman's [Mr. DAWES's] is not. My amendment is to add the following:

And for the compensation of the clerk of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, at the rate of $1,200 per annum, for the Thirty-Eighth Congress, there is appropriated $3,600.

Mr. WILSON. I raise the point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] that it is not in pursuance of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then I raise the same point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is too late.

Mr. SCHENCK. I rose to a point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and said that if my amendment to the amendment was not in order then the other was not.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Ohio raise the point of order originally?

Mr. SCHENCK. Yes, and stated it.
The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will decide that the point of order is well taken.
Mr. HALE. I now renew the amendment which I offered before:

For the payment of the contributors to the agricultural report for 1861, the sum of $3,393 25.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the Chair whether this amendment has not been ruled out of order already.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman allow a letter from the Commissioner of Agriculture to be read, showing that this was necessary to carry on the Agricultural Department?

Mr. ASHLEY. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will vouch for the letter being in the handwriting of the Commissioner, I shall be in favor of its being read. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENS. The amendment has been ruled out of order. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PIKE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly bill of the House No. 527, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1865, and had instructed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments and with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which to-morrow night was assigned for the consideration of the Pacific railroad bill.

The SPEAKER. The motion will be entered.
Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask whether that motion is in order. I understood the whole of the evening session of to-morrow was by unanimous consent set apart for the consideration of that bill.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. That is all true; but I, as a part of that unanimous consent, have the right to move to reconsider, which I do.

The SPEAKER. The motion is in order.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. STEVENS. I call for the previous question on the bill.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his demand for the previous question to enable me to submit an amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I will withdraw the demand and allow the gentleman's amendment to be reported.

Mr. DAWES. I submit the following:

For compensation to the clerk of the Committee of Elections for preparing for publication a continuation of the digest of election cases, to be expended under the direction of said committee, the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as in the opinion of said committee shall be necessary therefor.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend the amendment by adding as follows:

And for compensation of the clerk of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, at the rate of $1,800 per annum, for the Thirty-Eighth Congress, there is appropriated $3,600.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to a point of order, and submit that the amendment to the amendment is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order on the ground that it is a contingency for carrying on an existing branch of the Government. The rule says that "no appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills or be in order as an amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, and for the contingencies for carrying on the several departments of the Government." In the opinion of the Chair the Congress of the United States is the legislative department of the Government, and however improper the amendment may be in the opinion of gentlemen, the Chair does not think it can be ruled out on a question of order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I shall then raise a question of order on both propositions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order.

Mr. HALE. I propose to amend the amendment.

The SPEAKER. An amendment and an amendment to the amendment are pending, and no further propositions to amend are in order.

Mr. MALLORY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] however, may withdraw his demand for the previous question until the vote has been taken on the pending amendments, and then the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HALE] will be in order.

Mr. STEVENS. I am afraid we should get matters mixed up. I think I had better insist on my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

On motion of Mr. MALLORY, by unanimous consent, the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were read over, and such as no separate vote was asked on were considered as adopted.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded a separate vote upon the following amendment:

Insert as follows:

For repairs, refitting, and furnishing the President's summer residence at the Old Soldiers' Home during the sickly season, $3,000.

Mr. STILES demanded the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the amendment:

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was adopted—yeas 58, nays 35.

Mr. NELSON. Would it be in order to offer an amendment changing the cow pasture in front of the President's House to some other place? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The amendment would hardly be in order at the present time.

Mr. PRICE. I desire to know if it would be in order to demand a separate vote upon any paragraph of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Not unless it was amended in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WALLACE, of Idaho, called for a separate vote on the amendment reducing the appropriation from $15,000 to $10,000 for surveying the public lands in the Territory of Idaho.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. STEVENS called for a separate vote on the following amendment:

Page 12, line two hundred and sixty-six, strike out as follows:

For the construction of vaults, as an additional security to the public funds in the United States depositories, $30,000.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the compensation of the clerk to the Committee of Ways and Means shall be $2,100 per annum, to commence with the present Congress; and such sum as may be found necessary to pay the same be, and is hereby, appropriated.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I offered an amendment to that, that it should commence and end with the present Congress, which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] accepted.

Mr. NELSON. But he afterwards withdrew his acceptance.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed that the gentleman from Ohio had accepted it, but he stated to the Chair that he did not do so.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It was on the ground of his acceptance of my amendment that I consented to waive my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. PIKE,] what his recollection is of the matter.

Mr. PIKE. My recollection is the same as that of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. NELSON. I heard the gentleman from Ohio withdraw his acceptance when objection was made.

Mr. STEVENS. Is not the House controlled by the record?

The SPEAKER. It is; and the record is as it has been read by the Clerk.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I insist that the fact is as I have stated it.

The SPEAKER. There seems to be abundant proof on both sides. The gentleman from Ohio, who is absent with a committee of conference, has been sent for.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman from Ohio is now in the Hall, and I ask what is his understanding of the matter.

Mr. PENDLETON. The gentleman objected unless it should be limited to the present Congress. I then accepted or agreed to accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois. At a subsequent period in the discussion, when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] offered his amendment, the question of order was raised as to his amendment, and I stated that I accepted it. The question of order was insisted on, and afterwards was withdrawn. At all events the Chair put the question whether I accepted the modification or not, and I stated that I desired it to come in without modification unless the question of order was made. The Chair stated that the question of order was not made, and therefore I did not accept it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will state how I understand the matter, and the chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union will bear me out. The gentleman from Ohio proposed this amendment, which was out of order, and which I objected to; but I stated that I would waive that objection, provided he would accept my amendment; and he did accept it. I knew nothing of his withdrawal of that acceptance, and he had no right to withdraw it.

Mr. STEVENS. I stand by the record.

The SPEAKER. The reporters corroborate the Clerks.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If this thing is to be thrust upon us in this way, I hope that it will be all voted down. I demand the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 78, nays 40, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William J. Allen, Allison, Ancona, Ashley, Augustus C. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blow, Brooks, James S. Brown, Ambrose W. Clark, Coffroth, Cole, Cravens, Dawson, Driggs, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Eliot, English, Ganson, Garfield, Grider, Hale, Herrick, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Philip Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Knapp, Knox, Longyear, Mallory, Marcy, Marvin, McBride, McHugh, McKinney, Middleton, William H. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, James R. Morris, Morrison, Nelson, Noble, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Pendleton, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rebasen, James S. Rollins, Ross, Scott, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stevens, Siles, Strouse, Stuart, Sweet, Wadsworth, Ward, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Williams, Wilder, and Windom—78.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, John D. Baldwin, Blair, Boyd, William G. Brown, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Creswell, Dixon, Eckley, Farnsworth, Finck, Frank, Harding, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Higby, Bolman, John D. Hubbard, Julian, Loan, McDowell, Daniel Morris, Norton, Orth, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Edward H. Rollins, Scofield, Sloan, Smithers, Thomas, Tracy, Unson, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Joseph W. White, and Wilson—20.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, Alley, Anderson, Arnold, Bailey, Blaine, Bliss, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomall, Chandler, Clay, Cox, Henry Winter Davis, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Deming, Denison, Donnelly, Dumont, Feuton, Gooch, Grinnell, Griswold, Hall, Benjamin G. Harris, Hotchkiss, Hutchins, Jenekes, William Johnson, Kasson, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, King, Law, Lazear, Le Blond, Littlejohn, Long, McAllister, Melndoe, Samuel F. Miller, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, John O'Neill, Patterson, Perry, William H. Randall, Rogers, Schenck, Shannon, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, Thayer, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhees, Webster, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—64.

So the amendment was concurred in.

During the roll-call,

Mr. HIGBY stated that Mr. SHANNON was detained at home by sickness, and that Mr. KENLOGG of New York was suddenly called away to attend a wounded son at Fortress Monroe.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, informed the House that the Senate have disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate (No. 54) to incorporate the Metropolitan Railroad Company in the District of Columbia, ask a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and have appointed Mr. MORRILL, Mr.

WILLEY, and Mr. WADE as such committee of conference on their part.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. HOOPER, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back a bill to provide ways and means for the support of the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER. I move that the bill be printed, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and postponed until Wednesday next.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand the reading of the bill.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOOPER. I move the previous question upon my motion.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, ordered to be printed, and its consideration postponed until Wednesday next.

NORTHEASTERN BOUNDARY.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I ask unanimous consent to report from the select committee a bill for the defense of the northeastern boundary.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it in order to ask for the reading of the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not until after the rules are suspended.

Mr. HOLMAN. The only objection I have is that the character of this bill is not understood.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. My object is to have the bill printed and recommitted. I do not expect action on it this session, but desire to have it printed that members may be enabled to examine it.

The rules were suspended, the bill introduced, read a first and second time, recommitted to the select committee, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote last taken; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, (at twenty minutes to ten o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 21, 1864.

Prayer by Rev. B. H. NADAL, of Washington, District of Columbia.

On motion of Mr. GRIMES, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 20th of May, a statement showing the full amount of the public debt of the United States up to the 14th instant; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the memorial of Alfred Jones, of Missouri, praying for an appropriation to test his invention of a submarine battery for defending the harbors of the country and for rendering more efficient the blockade of the southern ports; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MORGAN presented a petition of citizens of Wayne county, New York, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to secure to persons in the military or naval service of the United States homesteads on confiscated and forfeited estates in insurrectionary districts; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of Simeon Draper and other citizens of New York, praying that a vote of thanks of Congress may be tendered to Commodore W. D. Porter and the officers and crew of the United States gunboat Essex for their gallantry displayed in the destruction of the rebel ram Arkansas on the 6th of August, 1862, and that a bounty may be granted the officers and crew; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. COLLAMER presented nine petitions of citizens of Vermont, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to secure to persons in the military or naval service of the United States homesteads on confiscated or forfeited estates in insurrectionary districts; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas, presented a letter of William M. Fishback, claiming a seat as Senator from Arkansas, addressed to him, giving a detailed account of his conduct during the present rebellion, and in defense of himself against charges of disloyalty; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FESSENDEN presented a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Finance, communicating a copy of a report of the Light-House Board in relation to improvements required in the aids to navigation in marking dangers in the approaches to the harbor of Portland, Maine, and recommending an appropriation for that purpose; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of men and women of Maine, praying for the abolition of slavery, and such an amendment of the Constitution as will forever prohibit its existence in any portion of the Union; which was referred to the select committee on slavery and freedmen.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. GRIMES, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 434) to authorize the bailiff of the orphans' court in the county of Washington, and District of Columbia, to serve processes issued by said court and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 255) granting certain privileges to the Guardian Society of the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

Mr. POMEROY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 276) to secure to persons in the military or naval service of the United States homesteads on confiscated or forfeited estates in insurrectionary districts, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 522) to amend the charter of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 470) to authorize assimilated rank to be given to the warrant officers of the United States Navy, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 95) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to amend the contract with John Ericsson for the construction of the two impregnable floating batteries, the Dictator and the Puritan, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the following subjects, which was agreed to, namely:

A bill (S. No. 5) to amend the act entitled "An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863;

A bill (S. No. 6) to increase the pay of the rank and file of the Army;

A joint resolution (S. No. 10) for the relief of the officers and soldiers of the United States now held captive in the rebel prisons at Richmond and vicinity;

A joint resolution (S. No. 48) concerning appointments in the military service;

A joint resolution (S. No. 49) to provide additional ground for a cemetery at the Soldiers' Home;

A joint resolution (S. No. 56) to authorize the President to call out men by draft for one year;

A resolution of the Senate instructing the committee to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for bridging the stream on the military road between Fort Leavenworth and Fort Scott in Kansas, and between Fort Scott and Fort Smith in Arkansas;

A resolution of the Senate instructing the committee to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for erecting a bridge across the Republican Fork of the Kansas river between Fort Riley and Junction City;

Sundry petitions of paymasters of the United States Army, praying for an increase of the compensation of their clerks;

Sundry memorials and petitions, praying for an increase of the pay of soldiers and sailors of the Army and Navy of the United States;

Sundry petitions of hospital stewards, praying for an increase of their rank and pay; and Sundry memorials and petitions, praying that colored troops may be placed on an equal footing with white troops as to pay, bounty, and pension.

HOOR OF MEETING.

Mr. POMEROY submitted the following resolution; which lies over for consideration:

Resolved, That when the Senate adjourns on Thursday, the 23d instant, it adjourn to meet at eleven o'clock on each day for the remainder of the session.

BILL BECOME A LAW.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. HAY, his Secretary, announced that the President had approved and signed, on the 20th instant, an act (S. No. 145) to increase the pay of soldiers in the United States Army, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate:

A bill (No. 265) to expedite and regulate the printing of public documents, and for other purposes; and

A bill (No. 366) to grant to the State of California certain lands for State prison purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill of the Senate (No. 85) to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill of the Senate (No. 54) to incorporate the Metropolitan Railroad Company in the District of Columbia, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and has appointed Mr. E. WHEELER of Wisconsin, Mr. J. G. BLAINE of Maine, and Mr. J. W. PATTERSON of New Hampshire, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (No. 527) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th June, 1865; and

A joint resolution (No. 101) to provide for the publication of a full Army Register.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had approved and signed on the 18th instant an act (H. R. No. 469) extending the time for the completion of the Marquette and Ontonagon railroad of the State of Michigan.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 253) to amend the act of December 21, 1861, entitled "An act to further promote the efficiency of the Navy;"

A bill (S. No. 270) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish and equalize the grade of line officers of the United States Navy," approved July 16, 1863; and

A joint resolution (S. No. 44) for the relief of the clerks at the Kittery and Philadelphia navy-yards.

RICHARD FITCH.

Mr. CARLILE. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the application of Richard Fitch for a land warrant under the act of 1855, have instructed me to report a bill for his relief. Mr. Fitch rendered military service in the war with Great Britain, and applied for a land warrant under the act of 1855. He could only prove a service of twelve days by record evidence. By parol evidence he has proved an additional service of six days, making altogether eighteen days—four days more than the law required.

Mr. WADE. I hope the bill will be passed at once. I think there is no objection to it.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 319) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a land warrant to Richard Fitch, of Ohio, was read three times, and passed.

CARMACK AND RAMSEY.

Mr. COLLAMER. I move to take up the joint resolution relative to the case of Carmack & Ramsey, which was laid over yesterday morning.

The motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 11) in relation to the claim of Carmack & Ramsey was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the resolution to be read a third time. The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

INTER-CONTINENTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the bill (S. No. 302) to encourage and facilitate telegraphic communication between the eastern and western continents.

Mr. BROWN. That is a bill which will give rise to a great deal of discussion. We have already devoted one day to it; it has not passed either House, and it is very doubtful whether it will get through at this session. There are bills lying before us here now of great importance to the country and immediate importance connected with the war; and I think it is an outrage upon the condition of the nation that we should devote the last days of the session here to discussing bills of this kind and of this character, in preference to those of national importance that demand our immediate attention. I trust the Senate will not take up a measure that is going to involve us in another day of useless discussion.

Mr. CHANDLER. This bill will lead to no discussion unless the same small, factious opposition appears that appeared when it was up before. The friends of the measure have nothing to say about it. It is a bill to surround the globe with a telegraphic wire. I hold in my hand a dispatch from our minister to France relative to a convention recently concluded at Paris in reference to a telegraphic line from Africa to Brazil. I will read it to the Senate:

PARIS, May 20, 1864.

Sir: I cut the annexed small slip from Galligani. It gives you, I presume, the result of the conference held in Paris some months since as to a southern line of route between the European and American continents. I wrote you of this conference at the time it assembled, stating the fact that neither England nor the United States were invited to take part in it.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM L. DAYTON.

To his Excellency WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c.

Copy of the slip.

"After conferences opened at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs for the establishment of an international telegraphic line, projected by M. Balestrini, between the European continent and America, a convention on the subject was yesterday signed by M. Drouyn de L'Huys, the Brazilian, Italian, and Portuguese ministers, and the Chargé d'Affaires of the republic of Hayti."

Those nations have deemed it of sufficient importance to hold a convention by which they pledge themselves to carry a telegraphic wire across the Mediterranean sea down through Africa and thence across the Atlantic ocean by the islands to Brazil, involving an expenditure of many millions. We have now presented to us an opportunity to have direct telegraphic communication with all the civilized nations of the earth, and more, sir, for a telegraphic wire is already extended into India; and at what cost? It is to cost us the use of a ship-of-war to take soundings in the Pacific ocean; it is to cost us, in every fifteen miles the line goes through the public domain a quarter section of land that is to us entirely useless, or so much of a quarter section as may be needed for the establishment of stations by the telegraph company, and then we promise to pay the company the small sum of $50,000 a year for that amount of service to the Government for ten years after the line shall have been completed. And, sir, while the nations are holding conventions and resolving nationally to build a line from Europe to Africa and thence to South America across the Atlantic, we, the Senate of the United States, are higgling about a small promise of $50,000 a year for ten years after the line shall have been completed.

Sir, the friends of this bill have no remarks to make upon it. No statesman will oppose it, and I am astonished that any man representing a commercial State should oppose it. I am not surprised that a northwestern man should oppose it. It is of very little interest comparatively to the Northwest; it only affects that great region in so far as the national aspects of the question are concerned. Sir, the friends of the bill ask for a vote upon it. If its enemies see fit to consume the time of this body as they did on Saturday last, let them do it and take the responsibility. I give notice that I will antagonize this bill against every bill that comes before the body until it is passed, I care not what that bill may be. I simply ask for a vote on this bill.

Mr. BROWN. I like the highway manner in which the Senator demands "Your land and your money or your life" of this Senate in behalf of this corporation. Really, sir, it would seem as if we had nothing else to do but to pour out the public lands whenever any corporation comes forward here and demands them of us, as if we had nothing else to do with the public money but to answer the demands of every corporation that comes and claims it at our hands. Is that the spirit in which the Senator comes here and makes this demand for a corporation which promises to be the most remunerative one in the world? Is that the spirit, sir, in which he comes here and makes this demand for a corporation which, if I am correctly informed, is to be under the control of one that now monopolizes the telegraphic communication across the continent, and is reaping a richer harvest from it than any other corporation in the United States? Is that the spirit, sir, in which he would come forward and make demands of that sort and say what he will antagonize it to all the business of this nation, he will antagonize it to every measure of national importance, to the war, to the finances, to everything that comes up here to save this nation in the hour of its peril? This grasping monopoly, this corporation will come up and say, "Your money or your life, sir." I have no other remark to make as to this demand; I leave it to the Senate to determine now whether they will act in accordance with the best which has been given forth to them here this morning. They, I suppose, understand their duty, and they can act upon it. I ask for the yeas and nays on the proposition to postpone all other business and take up this bill at the demand which has been made in this style and in this spirit.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to say that if I could have this line as a war measure in operation to-day I should be willing to vote $5,000,000. One single dispatch within the last three years would have been worth more than ten million dollars to this nation. When the Alabama was in the Chinese seas suppose we could have telegraphed, "Keep your vessels in port, the Alabama is around," how many millions would have been saved to the commercial interests of this nation? I therefore say that if I could have the line completed as a war measure I should be willing to vote, and vote it as a matter of economy, $5,000,000.

Mr. MORRILL. I was not in the other day when this bill was before the Senate, and I regret that the bill should be likely to suffer any prejudice this morning in the impartial and fair consideration of the Senate by the remark from the honorable Senator from Missouri that the bill should not stand in the way of measures which are of public importance. The implication from such a remark is very obvious, that this bill may as well be considered at some other time as the present.

Now, I can hardly conceive that this bill, when looked at in the spirit of candor, as the Senate will of course examine it if it comes up, would be likely to occupy the attention of the Senate for any considerable length of time. The proposition is certainly a very simple one. I do not suppose there is a Senator who does not approve of the undertaking. I certainly need not appeal to the honorable Senator from Missouri, whose public spirit is so well known. The enterprise of constructing a telegraph around the globe certainly would commend itself, I think, to every intelligent gentleman in the country, and that is this proposition, and it is not a thing—and this is all I desire to say on taking the question up—that may be acted upon now or next December without prejudice to the public. It is a thing that the circumstances of the case demand should be acted upon now if you desire to secure the advantages, which I think are of very great public importance, which you may lose if you do not act upon it at once. By the arrangements made with the Russian Government it is necessary that the party acting for the American interest should proceed to secure the advantages of that contract, and actually to commence the construction of this line upon the Russian territory prior to June, 1865. If this bill is postponed until December and then not passed till late in the winter of 1865, it will be seen at once that it will be entirely impracticable to enter upon the construction of the work prior to June, 1865, so as to secure absolutely the benefits of this arrangement. I think that of itself, if the enterprise is considered laudable, desirable, should induce the Senate to take up this measure at the present moment and give it its present consideration.

I hope, therefore, that my friend from Missouri will not invoke the judgment of the Senate against this bill in the first place as one of very little moment. I appeal to the Senate that I can hardly conceive of an object in its character more grand than the one contemplated. That it is one of immediate, pressing importance as applicable to the passing events of the day, I do not mean to argue; but it is important, nevertheless, on that account. I say, therefore, that I hope the Senate will not be prejudged against this bill, and will not refuse to take it up on the statement that this is a case which may be postponed, but that the Senate will be disposed to allow it to come up for consideration now.

Mr. WADE. I have said nothing on this subject; but I have not omitted to speak upon it because I do not feel a very deep interest in the passage of the bill. I know it has been hinted that gentlemen have been tampered with on this subject, but I can say that no person has approached me in regard to it. I saw some years ago that the idea of this great and beneficial project of circumscribing the whole world and bringing us in telegraphic communication with the nations was projected; I have watched its progress with a great deal of interest, and without the least doubt that when it should come before the American Congress for our aid and support it would receive it without argument. I had expected that those engaged in this enterprise would ask of us as our fair proportion toward it much more than they seem to desire. The burden to be imposed upon us to enable us to participate in this great and grand measure is very light indeed; and I am entirely unable to understand why it is that the proposition has elicited so much feeling as has been manifested in the Senate. I should be exceedingly loth to have it go to the eastern continent that the great American nation failed to second this important movement, so beneficial to them, at least as much so as to any other people in the world, because they were so hard pressed with this war. I do not feel that to be so. I know that the war is a great burden to us; but a great and proud nation should never bow its head, even before a storm like this, and show to the world that it does not feel competent to take care of its own concerns in a direction that will be so honorable to it if it second the movement and so shameful if it refuses. Suppose we refuse to participate and stop this great enterprise, how should any of us feel if we were to go to Europe and the fact were mentioned to us?

We are not asked to run any risk. We are only called on for $50,000 a year, and we are not to pay that until the line is in operation; there is no contingency about it. It must be in operation usefully, permanently, before we are to contribute a cent. I hope we shall take up the bill and pass it at once. The Senator from Maine has told us why it is necessary to take it up and act upon it now if we are to act at all. We cannot be too quick about it. I did not rise to argue the question, but only to say that presuming there is a majority here that fully understand all the bearings of the question, we may as well pass upon it without further argument as to spend more time in its discussion. One entire day has already been consumed over it, and I presume it was then discussed in all its important bearings, which are remembered now and need not be repeated. I hope, sir, we shall take up the bill at once and pass it without further discussion.

Mr. GRIMES. If the Senators who are the advocates of the passage of this bill suppose they are going to expedite its passage by characterizing the conduct of those who opposed it upon a former occasion as petty and small they may possibly be reckoning without their host. So far as I am concerned, I opposed the passage of this bill from conscientious motives, and I propose to continue to do so; and it is not going to pass to-day without thorough investigation and argument, such argument as shall not only be heard here, but as I intend, so far as I am concerned, shall be heard by my constituents and the country. If the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Michigan are so anxious that this bill shall pass without any further debate why do they rise here and expatiate themselves upon the merits of the proposition, and why are they joined by the Senator from Maine? Is it supposed that those who act from equally conscientious motives in opposition to the passage of the bill will not say something in their own vindication and to justify their own vote, justify the conduct they have hitherto pursued, and that which they propose to pursue hereafter?

The Senator from Ohio says he should be ashamed to go to Europe if the Senate should higgie upon a question of this kind. Why, sir, there is not a man in this body who is unwilling to do precisely what the British Government has been willing to do. We are willing to grant the right of way; we are willing to give the lands; we are willing that vessels-of-war should be employed in transporting, if you please, the material with which the construction is to be made, and in laying down the cable and making the surveys and soundings. What I object to is the subsidy, which is not given by either the Russian or the British Government. Why is it that Great Britain is unwilling to give any subsidy when this telegraphic line is to connect her with her own immediate possessions, and that we are asked to give a subsidy when it is only going to connect us with our consuls in Europe?

The Senator from Michigan has told us that this line would have been a saving to the Government of $5,000,000 if it had only been constructed at the time the Alabama was in the Chinese seas. Will the Senator tell me how far it is from Behring's straits, where it is proposed to lay down this telegraphic line, to the most northern port that the Alabama touched? Thousands of miles. And how could the Senator have had any communication between Behring's straits, or the mouth of the Amoor river, and our vessels-of-war that were at that time in the Chinese waters? No method of communication at all. Then of what advantage would it have been? How would it have saved $5,000,000 to the Government?

Mr. CHANDLER. Does not the Senator know that England now has a line to Calcutta?

Mr. GRIMES. Calcutta is in the southern part of Asia. England has communication from Europe, through Egypt, down to Calcutta, but that is thousands and thousands of miles from where the Alabama was. She was not at Calcutta at the time the Senator speaks of, and that is thousands and thousands of miles from Behring's straits.

I am not going to be put in a false position in regard to this matter. I do not intend to have it thrown in my teeth that I am opposed to granting every reasonable facility for making this line of telegraph. I am willing to do precisely what other Governments have done; I am willing to do exactly what is necessary in order to secure the telegraph itself; but I know, and I think every man who has conscientiously investigated the subject knows, that this telegraphic line can be and will be constructed without any subsidy from us. It is in the hands of one of the richest companies on the face of the earth. It does not belong to Mr. Collins. Whatever right Mr. Collins may have derived from the British Government under what is called the concession (which is neither more nor less than a letter from the secretary of the Duke of Newcastle stating the terms upon which the right to construct this telegraph may be secured) he has transferred to the Western Union Telegraph Company, for which he received the sum of $100,000 down, and $1,000,000 in paid-up stock of the company, with a stipulation that he should be permitted to receive $1,000,000 more, for which he is to pay. I hold in my hands a circular issued by the directors of the Western Union Telegraph Company, dated March 24, 1864, and signed by O. H. Palmer, secretary of the company—a circular to the stockholders, informing them what steps had been taken to secure Mr. Collins's interest, the amount of stock they proposed to increase after having secured it, and the manner in which they proposed to dispose of that stock. I will read it:

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
ROCHESTER, NEW YORK, March 24, 1864.

To the Stockholders of the Western Union Telegraph Company:

The grand enterprise of uniting Europe and America by overland telegraphic communication by way of Behring's straits has been inaugurated under the auspices of this company.

Not under the auspices of Mr. Collins.

The great importance of the undertaking, if successfully accomplished, as it is believed it will be, not only to this company, but to the commerce and civilization of the world, can hardly be over-estimated.

For the last eight years Perry McD. Collins, Esq., American commercial agent and acting consul at St. Petersburg, Russia, has been pressing the subject assiduously and indefatigably upon the attention of the Russian Government, and has finally obtained its favorable consideration, and has secured from that Government, as well as from the British Government, highly favorable grants and privileges. These valuable grants and privileges have been made over to our company.

I cannot within the brief limits of a circular give a detailed statement of the rights secured or of the terms of the transfer to this company.

The Russian Government undertakes to construct a line from St. Petersburg to the mouth of the Amoor river, in eastern Asia, a distance of about seven thousand miles, and it has already built the line as far as Irkutsk, on Lake Baikal, nearly three fourths of the distance. It is to be taken up by this company at the mouth of the Amoor, and continued by way of Behring's straits till it shall intersect the present lines of the company at some point between Chicago and the Pacific coast. The action of the British Government in respect to British Columbia has been liberal and honorable. The grants and concessions from the Russian Government are exclusive for thirty-three years.

Mr. Collins retains the right to one tenth part of the new stock created for the construction of the line, free from call or assessment, as paid-up stock; also the right to subscribe for one tenth part, upon the same footing as other subscribers. He is also to receive, as compensation for his services and expenses during the eight years engaged in securing the grants, the sum of $100,000, which will be a charge upon the fund arising from the creation of the new or extension stock.

Mind you, during these eight years he was the commercial agent and consul of the United States at St. Petersburg, drawing a salary from us.

These terms were believed by the board of directors to be as reasonable on the part of Mr. Collins as justice to himself would warrant.

It would seem that this company thought this grant was of vast value to them, and I apprehend that at the time they gave the $100,000, and the $1,000,000 of paid-up stock, they did not think it would be necessary to come to Congress to obtain a subsidy of $500,000 to enable them to construct the line. The circular goes on:

For the purpose of accomplishing the object aimed at in the most speedy and efficient manner, the board of directors, on the 18th day of March, instant, as authorized by the charter of the company, unanimously adopted the following resolutions:

"1. Resolved, That a special stock of this company, to be denominated the extension stock, and to consist of one hundred thousand shares of $100 each, be, and the same is hereby, created for the purpose of erecting and constructing a new telegraphic line from some convenient point on the present lines of this company (not east of Chicago) to the mouth of the Amoor river in eastern Asia, and connecting the telegraph systems of the eastern and western continents by the way of Behring's straits."

Now, mark the next resolution:

"2. Resolved, That all persons who shall be shareholders in the Western Union Telegraph Company at the close of business on the 16th day of May, 1864, shall be entitled to receive of the stock hereby created an amount equal to fifty per cent. of the stock then held by them respectively in the Western Union Telegraph Company, (excluding, for the convenience of distribution and to avoid fractions, all odd shares,) upon the payment by them to this company of the par value of such stock as hereinafter provided. That twenty thousand of said special shares be set apart for Perry McD. Collins, Esq., in pursuance of the agreement made by this company with said Collins, one half of which is to be subject to no further payment or call; and that the residue of said shares be distributed to such persons and in such amounts as in the judgment of this board shall seem best calculated to advance the substantial interests of this company."

What does this mean? They provide that each stockholder shall receive fifty per cent. in the new stock, and that two million of the ten million shall go to Perry McDonough Collins, and then the "residue," after that distribution, shall "be distributed to such persons and in such amounts as in the judgment of this board shall seem best calculated to advance the substantial interests of this company."

"3. Resolved, That the special stock hereby created shall be entitled to no interest or dividend until the completion of said contemplated line, and until a dividend shall be earned thereon, and that the holders of said stock shall have no right to vote thereon at any election of officers of this company until the same shall have been paid up in full or otherwise declared full stock, and shall have been made and declared to be homogeneous with the general stock of this company as hereinafter provided.

"4. Resolved, That upon the completion of the said new line, a separate and distinct account shall be kept of the receipts and expenses for a period of two years from the time it is opened for through business; and that as soon thereafter as the accounts can be examined and adjusted, the special stock hereby created and the general stock of this company shall, by resolution of this board, be merged and united upon the basis of their respective relative net incomes; and the said special stock may for this purpose be increased or diminished accordingly, and from the period of such union all distinction between the several kinds of stock shall cease and determine.

"5. Resolved, That in the final adjustment of the relative value of the extension and general stock of this company, the extension stock shall be credited with a rebate of forty per cent. on the Western Union tariff, upon all the through messages passing over the contemplated new line; and that while said new line is in process of construction, and until the same is completed, the same rebate upon the messages passing over such portions of the new line as shall be finished shall be credited to the said special stock, and accounted for to them as part of the revenue of said new line.

"6. Resolved, That the secretary be directed to give notice by a printed circular to the shareholders of this company, of the rights and privileges secured to them respectively of taking their proportion of the said special stock; and all shareholders who shall neglect to give notice to the secretary of their election to take such stock, on or before the 16th day of May next, shall be deemed to have declined to take the same, and the stock so declined shall be and remain at the disposition of this company.

"7. Resolved, That each person who shall be entitled to, and who shall elect to take the said special stock (except Perry McD. Collins, Esq.) shall, at the time of indicating such election, pay to the treasurer of this company five per cent. upon the nominal or par value of the stock assigned to him, and shall receive a certificate for said special stock, showing the number of shares, the amount paid thereon, the special character of the stock, and stating that the unpaid balance of said share shall be subject to call at the pleasure of this board.

"8. Resolved, That in case any of the parties taking such special stock shall neglect or refuse to pay the said five per cent., or any subsequent installment that may hereafter be called in, for a period of thirty days after the same shall have become due and payable, this board shall have the right to declare such unpaid stock to be forfeited, with all previous payments made thereon, if any, and may sell and dispose of the same at its discretion.

"9. Resolved, That the moneys to be paid to Perry McD. Collins, Esq., under the contract made with him by this company, for the transfer of his grants, be charged upon the fund arising from the new stock hereby created."

I give the resolutions entire, as best calculated to impart the information sought to be given by this circular.

As matter of interest to the stockholders, I would also mention that in view of the contemplated construction of the overland European line of telegraph, connecting the two hemispheres, the stock of the Pacific Telegraph Company not owned by the Western Union Company has been merged into the stock of this company, so that we now have but a single interest between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

Although the 16th of May is the time fixed for determining as to the distribution of the new stock, yet I shall be glad to receive as early notice of the election to take or not the part of the stockholders as may be practicable.

Respectfully, &c., O. H. PALMER, Secretary.

I have read this communication to show the Senate that Mr. Collins is not the man in interest. It is this immense monopoly known as the Western Union Telegraph Company that has seen fit to buy of Mr. Collins, according to its own declaration, these concessions or whatever they may be (they are evidently exceedingly valuable in its opinion) and to pay him $100,000 in cash, and to give him in paid-up stock $1,000,000 and then the right to subscribe, as though he had been an original stockholder in their original company, for $1,000,000 more. With that showing, do you suppose it is necessary for us to do more than the British Government has done, more than the Russian Government has done? Do you suppose it is necessary for us to do more than furnish our Navy to survey the route, to transport their materials, and to sink their wire; that more is necessary for us than to give them land, the right of way, the eternal use, for such they get under the bill? If anybody comes to that conclusion, he reaches a vastly different one from the conclusion at which I have arrived.

Mr. MORRILL. The honorable Senator from Iowa does not deal with his usual fairness when he attributes to me a disposition to argue the merits of this cause on the question of taking up the bill.

Mr. GRIMES. I only followed the example of the Senator's associate and himself.

Mr. MORRILL. I caution the honorable Senator not to follow a bad example, when he chooses to apply it to me, for, sir, I forbore to say anything on the merits, and simply invoked the Senator from Missouri not to undertake to prejudice the mind of the Senate against this bill outside of its merits; and I did not suppose that on the question of mere taking up I should be allowed to state the merits of the case very much at large; and I do not purpose to do so now further than I find it necessary to reply to the argument of the Senator from Iowa. But before I reply to him, before I tell the Senate what the mare's nest is that he supposes he has discovered in the circular which he has read, I want to say a word as to what I understood occurred on a former occasion. Then it was said that there was no evidence before the Senate that the American interest had secured any grant from the Russian Government or from the British Government at all, and the papers not being at hand they were demanded.

Now, sir, this question has been before a committee of the Senate, whose duty it was to inform the Senate on some things, to find some facts, and one fact they did find was that the gentleman who represents the American interest had made a beneficial contract with the Russian Government by which he had secured an undertaking on the part of the Russian Government to build a line of telegraph in connection with the European lines down to the mouth of the Amoor river; and a further fact that the Russian Government had conferred upon this American citizen the right, the exclusive right, to extend that line of telegraphic communication to Behring's straits, and thence across the straits to the British frontier; and further that this same American citizen had acquired the right from the British Government to construct in continuation this line to the American boundary. These are prominent facts, important facts in the case; the committee find them and report them to the Senate. If anybody doubts on that subject, here are the documents; here is the original document in the Russian language, and here is the interpretation of it; and here is the document from the British Government, showing in detail that these rights have been secured to this American citizen. I will send them to the Clerk's desk to be read at the proper time if anybody raises a question on that point.

Mr. POMEROY. I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but I think the rules are to very little purpose if we can discuss the merits of a question on a motion to take it up. This discussion has been prolonged to such an extent that I do not know but that it ought to be permitted to go on now; but I supposed the question was on taking up the bill, and I submit whether we can discuss the merits of the bill on that motion.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand the honorable Senator to be quite right about that. I began by saying that it was not my intention to go very far into the merits of the case, and I think I am authorized in what I have said by what has been said on the other side. It is strictly in reply.

Now, a word in answer to the argument of my honorable friend from Iowa, which is calculated—not designed, I know—to create a prejudice against this measure before it is in a condition to be considered by the Senate. That is the tendency of it. He reads a circular here which he thinks prejudices this claim at a time when it is not before the Senate to be considered on its merits.

Now, sir, let us look at it. What are the inferences which the honorable Senator desires the Senate to draw from the circular he has read in your hearing? He says here is an overgrown monopoly back of this; Mr. Collins is the mere creature in their hands; he has little or no interest in it. Well, it is a monopoly of the American Government; it is a child of your own; if it is odious and hateful it is your fault. But is it so? In what sense is the Western American Union Telegraph Company a hateful monopoly? Where is the evidence of that? That is all assumption, I submit, with all respect to my honorable friend. I have yet to learn that the Western Union Telegraph Company (if that is its name) is a hateful and odious monopoly, at the mention of whose name the legislation of the Senate should stand aghast. I content myself with saying that there is no evidence of any such thing before the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. Permit me to call the Senator's attention to the fact that it has been necessary for us here already at this session to legislate against the abuses of that company—legislate against their abuses in selling at high and exorbitant rates the transmission of news to single papers and associations of papers, exercising a discrimination against others; and that it has won the hostility of almost the entire press of the United States in consequence.

Mr. MORRILL. I think it very likely. The press are a little sensitive on a great many subjects in which I do not sympathize very much. I am not going into that controversy. What is to be apprehended from this monopoly of which the honorable Senator speaks? What calamity is to befall the American people if this monopoly is permitted to build this telegraph line, and so connect with those which are to complete the circuit of the world? That is the question. How is the public interest to be prejudiced or injured by it? Will the honorable Senator be kind enough to explain that to us?

This line, as I understand, is to cost an outlay of at least $5,000,000. The Secretary of State tells you in his communication to the Senate that probably it will cost an outlay of $10,000,000. How is that investment to be made? Who is to make it? The telegraph poles are to be set up and the wires to be put upon them at an expense of from five to ten millions. Who is to do it? The Government does not propose to pay a dollar. Mr. Collins, with all the enterprise he has exhibited, and it is of the most commendable character, is not able to do it. Where is the man or the set of men that is to give to the American people this great boon of a telegraph around the globe? Will the honorable Senator tell me that? Oh! he says, it can all be done; there is no trouble about it; it will go itself; if you put up the poles, the line, according to the laws of gravitation or some other great law not explained, economic or otherwise, will range along the poles, and the lightnings will begin to flash some morning when the sun rises. But, sir, telegraphs are not produced in that way; they are not the product of any such law that I ever heard of. If the honorable Senator can tell me who will build this line, who will put in the five or the ten million dollars, I will turn my back on this hateful company that he speaks of, but until he can show me the man or the class of men that has the spirit or the enterprise to undertake to construct a thousand miles of line through a trackless desert a portion of it, and some of it up to the latitude of 63° north, until he can show me the man of spirit and enterprise that has the capital and is willing to do it, I shall continue to think it singular good fortune that the American people have cherished in their midst an institution, if it be an institution, or a company that has the means and the enterprise to undertake the accomplishment of such an object as this.

That is my judgment in regard to it; and instead of invoking a prejudice against this company, I think they deserve our commendation and the thanks of the American people that they are willing to come forward and to second the movements of this citizen of ours, Mr. Collins, who has devoted the last ten years of his life with singular assiduity, with wonderful enterprise, to this great work.

The honorable Senator informs us that Mr. Collins has been commercial agent of the United States during all that time. Does the honorable Senator know what salary he has had? Does the honorable Senator know what pittance he has lived on? Does the honorable Senator know that the salary paid to him has been merely nominal, mere nothing? During the ten years he has been there he has projected this great enterprise which is to encircle the globe with a telegraphic wire; and he comes and lays it down a boon at your feet. He tells you that he has not only been able to obtain the favor of the great Power of Russia for its encouragement, and to bring the line down to the mouth of the Amoor river, but that Power has given to him, an American citizen, the exclusive right to construct the line to the east and across its possessions; and thence across the British possessions he has the right from the British Government.

This is an enterprise on which the honorable Senator thinks it is worth his while to invoke the prejudice of the Senate. I commend Mr. Collins for his enterprise, his public spirit, his self-sacrificing devotion to a great end; for I stand here to say that among the great things of the last half century none will stand higher in history than this, and I take especial pride in the fact that an American citizen has conceived it and has accomplished it thus far. It needs now, what? It needs for the American Government to say that in the spirit of enterprise, international comity, and commercial unity, they will cooperate with the Russian Government and the British Government, and join hands in putting around the globe an electric circle. On that my honorable friend from Iowa invokes the prejudice—no, I do not know that I ought to say that; but the argument that he submits here is calculated to excite the prejudice of the Senate against the whole enterprise, to postpone its consideration, throw it over to the next session; when I have already admonished him that that is fatal to the whole enterprise, and that to postpone is to defeat.

My honorable friend has read from this circular; he does not favor us with the inferences which he draws, but he states it in a way to leave us to draw the most unfavorable inferences. That is what I complain of. He says that this Western Union Telegraph Company propose to issue ten thousand shares of special or extension stock for the purpose of building these eight thousand miles of telegraphic line from the American possessions to the Russian possessions and the mouth of the Amoor river. What of that? Is there anything wonderful in that? Is there anything that should excite your apprehensions of danger? Is there anything in that fact which would advertise the Senate to be on their guard against conspiracy? Was any company ever organized yet that did not issue stock in a similar way? How is a road or a telegraph ever to be built except upon the issue of stock?

Mr. CONNESS. Will the honorable Senator permit me to suggest to him that we are now organizing just such a company, just such a monopoly, for the building of an overland Pacific railroad, giving them a grant of $100,000?

Mr. MORRILL. I am quite obliged to my honorable friend.

Mr. BROWN. I would suggest also that it is not customary, though, for committees charged with that business to report against all rival routes.

Mr. MORRILL. I had not the good fortune to hear my friend from Missouri.

Mr. BROWN. I was answering the Senator from California.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator says his answer was to me. I confess I do not understand him. I understood him to say that committees to whom such subjects were referred were not in the habit of making reports against rival routes. Am I right? I certainly am at a loss to know what the honorable Senator means.

Mr. BROWN. I will explain, with the permission of the Senator from Maine, that to this same committee that has reported the bill granting this subsidy to this line through California and Oregon, another bill was committed granting a subsidy to an overland line from Idaho across; that the committee in making their reports have discriminated against that, have given the subsidies and land grants to this line, and have not only done so but have given it branches all through the Territories of the United States, making it virtually the largest monopoly in the world.

Mr. MORRILL. If I could suppose anybody on earth had any private griefs as to that action of the committee, I have an abundant answer; but as I do not suppose anybody has, and as it has not the slightest connection with the line of my argument, I beg leave not to reply to it at the present time. I prefer to confine myself to the argument of my friend from Iowa. His statement was that the Western Union Telegraph Company is to issue ten thousand shares of this extension stock. Very well; that is the method of building it. Now, who will take it? That is the question; who will take those ten thousand shares and pay the ten millions of money and build the line? That is the question. How does my honorable friend explain that? Until the shares are taken the line is not built, that is clear. In order to build the line the shares must not only be issued but they must be taken by somebody. Who is to take them? My friend says one thousand shares are to be given to Mr. Collins as a gratuity. Just think of that—a millionaire at once. But let us consider. This man has got in his pocket I assume—I do not know how the fact is, but to make the argument strongest against him I assume he has got a thousand shares of this extension stock in his pocket. What is the par value of it? What is it worth to-day, not a shilling paid in? Who will take it? What is its value? How will you estimate it? There is not a pole up; there is not a mile of line; there is nothing but this general grant in his favor. Now, what is the value of his thousand shares? That is all prospective. My honorable friend estimates that they are worth $1,000,000. But they are worth one penny or nothing at all just as the enterprise succeeds, and the enterprise succeeds just as they go forward and pay in the money, dollar for dollar; and if the enterprise is a good one, if they can make the line as they expect, if the enterprise is feasible and the route is as feasible as they believe, and it does not cost more than $10,000,000, then it is a plain proposition; he will have $1,000,000, and he will thus get a reward for his ten years' labor and enterprise, and connect his name in future history with one of the grandest enterprises of the last fifty years. That will be the result. Who will mourn over that? Seeing that he is an American citizen, is that a thing to weep over? No, it is a matter over which I will rejoice, and so will every patriot in the land; all will rejoice, and none more so than my honorable friend from Iowa.

But the honorable Senator says that the stockholders of this company have really divided among themselves fifty per cent. of the additional extension stock, after deducting what Mr. Collins is to have. Suppose they have, what is that worth? Much or little, dependent on the success of the enterprise. That is, they agree to take so much of the new stock. To-day it is not worth a shilling. When they pay in their money dollar for dollar and build the line, then the stock will be worth par if a success, possibly more, possibly fourfold. I hope so. No harm will come to the public, I trust, if an American company should succeed in that way. But the honorable Senator says there is another very significant fact, and what is it? That the remaining fifty per cent. is to be divided among such persons and in such amounts as the company shall determine. What is the inference to be drawn from that? I suppose it is that that is to be given to the "lobby" to carry this bill through. What then is to be done with that other fifty per cent.? Who has any of it in his pocket? Who has been approached with it? If according to these inferences I were to meet Mr. Collins, I should expect to find his pockets stuffed to repletion with this surplus stock for such persons and in such amounts as would favor this interest! Is that so? Is that the interpretation of the circular? Do men engaged in a great scheme to plunder the Government publish that kind of a record to the country, and then send it here to Congress and put it into the possession of my honorable friend?

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator will permit me to say that the circular did not come to me from the company. It is addressed to the stockholders; I suppose it was not printed for public use; but I would inquire of the Senator what disposition is to be made of that extra stock?

Mr. MORRILL. I will inform the honorable Senator. The inquiry seems to imply that I was not wrong in the inference which I supposed the honorable Senator desired the Senate to draw, that this surplus fifty per cent. of stock was to be distributed as a gratuity to whoever would help the bill along; and they, with that fact patent on their record, instruct their secretary to notify the stockholders of that fact! It is not a private circular; it is a thing for the world, as their records are open to the world. Does anybody suppose that this fact is susceptible of any such inference as that? What is the honest inference? Here is this telegraph company about to invest ten millions of money, more or less, in this extensive stock, in this grand enterprise of constructing eight thousand miles of telegraph line, the success of which is undetermined. They naturally say, "We vote to each of ourselves the right to take fifty per cent. of the stock that is left after Collins gets his share, and agree to take that amount. But what is to be done with the rest of it? As men desirous to make money, what shall we do with the other four millions?" because, according to the argument of my honorable friend, what is left is worth four millions. "If we can get a subsidy from Congress of half a million, we will give them four millions!" That is the argument. Would not that be a nice speculation, to give away four millions and get in return a subsidy of half a million, payable in installments beginning five years hence? They will never build the line if that is the class of men they are. But what is the rational interpretation? It is this: "Having secured the taking of fifty per cent. by our own stockholders, we will distribute the residue in the Atlantic cities at great points where we can secure the patronage of the public and the favor of the public over our line." To give it away? No, sir, but to sell it, to dispose of it for the construction of the line; and if it is that "big thing" which my honorable friend tells the Senate it is, you will find many a broker, I dare say, advertising the sale of this stock, and you will find men very solicitous to buy it—not men expecting to get it as a gift or a bonus. Now, I submit to the candor of the Senate and the judgment of the Senate; looking at this public circular, looking at these facts spread out on the record, whether it can feel authorized to draw an inference prejudicial to this great enterprise from such a fact.

My honorable friend assumes that this will be a very lucrative enterprise; that these men will make an immense amount of money out of it; that they are very rich now. My first answer to that is, that none but a company that was able could or would undertake such an enterprise or could carry it through; and it is a blessing and not a curse that they are able to carry it through. That is my first proposition. The second is that, instead of its being demonstrable that it is to be "a good thing," there are no facts in the case which authorize any such assumption. If it shall become the great line of intercommunication between the eastern and western continents, when there shall be some two or three hundred million people on this continent, and when telegraphic communication shall become familiar as the alphabet to the American people, as in no remote future I trust it will, then I can conceive that this will not only be one of the grandest enterprises of the century, but will make good returns to the stockholders. I should hope so; I should trust the future of this country would warrant as much as that.

Now, Mr. President, having done thus much, having attempted simply to repel the inferences against this bill, I have done all I desired to do at this stage of the case, and will meet the question on its merits when the subject is before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Michigan, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 302) to encourage and facilitate telegraphic communication between the eastern and western continents, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 24, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Coffman, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Harris, Hendricks, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Saulsbury, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, and Willey—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Cowan, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Lane of Indiana, Pomeroy, Sherman, Ten Eyck, and Wilson—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Harding, Henderson, Lane of Kansas, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, and Wright—10.

So the motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the bill was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on an amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHANDLER] to the proviso in the third section, which the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. TEN EYCK] moved to strike out. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan is to strike out the word "fifteen" before "years" and insert "ten," and to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty" before "thousand;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That if, during any of the ten years aforesaid, the business done for the United States under said contract shall, at the ordinary rate of charge for private messages, exceed the sum of $50,000, an account thereof, duly authenticated, shall be presented to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall certify the same to Congress for payment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I suggest to the Senator from Michigan to allow the vote to be taken on these two propositions separately. First, let us vote on reducing the time to ten years.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I was going to suggest that the other amendment should not be agreed to, but that the Secretary of the Treasury should only certify the excess over $100,000.

Mr. CHANDLER. That $100,000 should be $50,000.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Let the question be divided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is susceptible of division; and the first amendment is to strike out "fifteen" and insert "ten."

Mr. TEN EYCK. I inquire of the Senator from Michigan whether he really thinks that will answer his purpose. There are two portions of time to which this may apply. There are five years given in which to complete the line, and then there are ten years after it is completed during which the subsidy is to run; and that is the reason, I presume, that "fifteen years" was first put in this proviso.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir.

Mr. TEN EYCK. My object is to perfect the bill, and not to make war upon it. Will not the amendment, as the Senator now has it, require the subsidy of $50,000 a year to be paid for the first ten years, including the five years when the line is being constructed?

Mr. CHANDLER. No; there is nothing to be paid until the line is completed.

Mr. TEN EYCK. My impression is otherwise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment is in line nineteen of section three, to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty" before "thousand."

Mr. JOHNSON. If I understood the remarks made by the mover of the amendment, he intended to reduce the expense of the Government; but I rather think that he has perhaps increased it by this amendment. We are to give $50,000 a year for the use of the telegraph whether we use it or not; and as the bill stands without the amendment, if we use it to the amount of $100,000 then we are to pay extra.

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill as originally drawn gave a subsidy of $100,000 for fifteen years. The committee cut down the time from fifteen to ten years, and the amount from $100,000 to $50,000. There was a clerical error, however, in the proviso to this section, in not making that change.

Mr. JOHNSON. Whether this is a proper amendment or not, looking to the view taken by the chairman of the committee and the friends of the bill, is one question. Whether it is such an amendment as the Senator from New Jersey contemplated making, or those who may agree with him, is quite another thing. I understand now that the bill as originally drafted gave to the company $100,000 for ten years, whether it should be used or not. That is to say, we should have a right to use it until the amount should be $100,000. Now you have reduced that to $50,000, which makes the gratuity on the part of the Government, if it can be called a gratuity, $500,000 instead of $1,000,000; but when you come to the proviso you say, provided this amendment be adopted, that if we use it to an amount which, according to their rates, will exceed $50,000, then in addition to the $50,000 we shall pay for the excess, whereas the bill as it is upon our table only requires us to pay for the excess provided the excess be over $100,000. I only wanted the Senate to understand what is the effect of the amendment, and to call the attention of my friend from New Jersey to it in order to show him that I think he has proposed an amendment which is not at all in accordance with his purpose.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I hope the Senator from Maryland will not charge me with the responsibility of having moved this amendment. I have resisted it. I have called the attention of the Senate to the peculiar character of this proviso, and I have moved to strike it all out, not designing that there should be any such provision in the bill. After making that motion I stated the difficulties arising out of it, and that I supposed the fair construction of this proviso would be not only that the company should receive the subsidy of $50,000 a year for the period of ten years subsequent to the time the Government made a contract with the company to transmit their messages, but that it would also require the payment for transmitting all the intelligence over the line which a faithful and accurate account would show exceeded the amount of $100,000; and I supposed that the design of the persons who were interested in the bill was that between the amount of $50,000 and $100,000 there should be no account kept, and that if the Government transmitted messages to a greater amount than $50,000 and less than $100,000, there should be nothing paid on account of the excess over the $50,000, as an inducement on the part of Congress to pass this bill and give this authority. I stated that I was opposed to any subsidy at all, and that I was opposed to paying any amount that might be asked for transmitting messages amounting to $100,000 in addition to the $50,000. In consequence of that difficulty, the Senator from Michigan moved to amend the proviso, and he has got it in the present shape which now requires us to pay for all the messages transmitted; and that being so, I see no occasion for putting in "$50,000," unless it is to require the Government to pay that amount anyhow. That will be the effect of it. If we do not transmit a message or properly make ourselves liable to one dollar's expense during the whole period, according to the provision proposed by the Senator from Michigan we are to pay the $50,000 a year by way of subsidy, and if we transmit messages to a greater amount than that we are to pay just like private individuals.

Mr. CHANDLER. Allow me to suggest that I have drawn this proviso to satisfy the Senator's doubts:

Provided, That no payment shall be made to said company until the line is built and in working order.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I do not object to the Senator proposing any amendment that he sees fit, but I am opposed to the whole proviso. Of course my motion to strike out must give way to his efforts to perfect the proviso and put it in the shape that he thinks proper and right to effect his object. After he shall have accomplished that I shall still insist upon having the proviso stricken out, because I think the appropriation of $50,000 a year is under the circumstances improper.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall not offer the proviso which I just suggested, for I think the clause is now sufficiently guarded.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to this bill. I should like very much to see the enterprise carried out. The only question is what amount of disbursement we should incur. As it stands now we are to give in annual payments for ten years $500,000, and for that we are to have the privilege of using the telegraph at the rates which the company may charge, but only until by our use of the line according to those rates we shall have used it to the extent of $50,000 a year.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The honorable Senator from Maryland will excuse me for interrupting him. The amendment which I proposed the other day and which lies upon his table printed has reference to this matter of the rates, and proposes to restrict the rates so that they shall not be at the option of the company.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was not speaking of the rates. I referred to the rates, not for the purpose the Senator supposes, but for a different purpose.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I understood the honorable Senator to say that the rates would be at the control of the company.

Mr. JOHNSON. I did not say so; but I said that no matter what the rates might be, without inquiring into what they might be or what we may direct that they shall be, whenever we do use the line, and the rates charged to us shall exceed $50,000 a year, then we are to pay for every dispatch that we send in excess of that amount. Now it seems to me to be a very good bargain on the part of the company, and not unreasonable on the part of the Government, to ask that if we are willing to advance, whether we use it or not, $500,000, we should not be compelled to pay for every excess that may be caused by our use of the lines. I supposed, therefore, that the bill, as it was printed and as it was placed upon our table, had met with the concurrence of the committee, that the $100,000 mentioned in the last proviso of the third section was not an error, but that the committee thought we should be at liberty to go on to the extent of $100,000 in consequence of our agreeing to give, whether we use it or not, $500,000. If the Senate should be of a different impression, it may be that we shall have to pay for each one of these ten years $100,000, when we could by properly sustaining the company make a bargain which would authorize us to use the line to the extent of $100,000, paying only $50,000.

Mr. MORRILL. It is plain enough what the intent of the framers of the bill was. As it stood originally, it pledged the Government to pay $100,000 a year for fifteen years, and gave them the privilege of using the telegraph to that amount; provided, however, that if they used it to a larger amount than that they should pay for the excess. The committee amended the bill by reducing the sum to be paid to $50,000, and the time to ten years, so that the Government by the bill now stand pledged to pay $50,000 a year for ten years with the privilege of using the telegraph for those ten years; provided, that if they shall use it to a larger amount than $100,000 they shall pay the overplus. The mistake was in not reducing the $100,000 in the proviso to the $50,000 as in the sum granted. That was an oversight on the part of the committee, and now to make the bill symmetrical and harmonious with its original purpose, the $100,000 in the proviso should be reduced to $50,000, and then the Government would be on that showing pledged to pay $50,000 for ten years, and as much more during the ten years as the Government use of the telegraph may amount to. If the Senate think the Government ought to have the entire use of it as provided in the bill for ten years for the $50,000 a year, then the proviso ought to be stricken out entirely, and the motion of my honorable friend from New Jersey should carry. Otherwise I hope that the proviso will be made to correspond with the sum granted. I am quite indifferent about it myself.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to strike out the proviso as amended.

Mr. MORRILL. Let the proviso be read as it now stands.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Provided, That if during any of the ten years aforesaid, the business done for the United States under said contract shall, at the ordinary rate of charges for private messages, exceed the sum of $50,000, an account thereof, duly authenticated, shall be presented to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall certify the same to Congress for payment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope that proviso will not be stricken out.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I do not wish to prolong the discussion lest I should come under the censure of our friends who seem to think that there is a desire here by faction to kill the bill. I am in favor of the general principles and provisions of the bill, and have said so from the beginning; but I do not wish the Government, under all the circumstances that have been stated, to undertake to bind itself to pay a subsidy. I prefer that there should be no such obligation. I think it is unnecessary. I think the Government ought not to undertake that burden now. I am not sure whether the striking out of this proviso will have any very great effect or not; but as I understand the third section, which has been retained in the bill by a tie vote of the Senate, if this line be constructed the Government can contract with the telegraph company for the use of the line for a period of ten years at the rate of $50,000 a year; and that will be the contract, as I understand, if the section stands without the proviso. Whether the Government transmits messages to the amount of $100,000 or to the amount of $5,000 only, the payment is to be $50,000 a year for the use of the line, if the proviso be stricken out. I think, under the circumstances, this proviso should be stricken out, because I should be opposed to the Government undertaking to pay $50,000 a year anyhow, and then $50,000 more if it should turn out by reason of the use of the line that that should be required, after having given to the company the use of the Army and Navy for the purposes stated in the bill, and public lands to the amount of thousands if not millions of acres.

Mr. HOWE. I want to say a word. The reception that this bill has met with in the Senate has astonished me a little. I do not think we meet it with the welcome that it is entitled to. I have never seen Mr. Perry McDonough Collins; I have never seen the Western Union Telegraph Company; I do not know that I ever saw a man who belongs to the Western Union Telegraph Company or has any stock in it; and I have not got any myself. The minister of one of the foreign Powers resident here called my attention to this measure not long since, and I was half mortified and half gratified that a measure of this magnitude that promises such immense results to the world should have first been brought to my notice by the subject of a foreign Power. I did think that a man born in New England and domiciled in the Northwest ought to be up with the times; but I found myself behind time on that occasion. A gratifying fact, however, which goes in some way to offset this is that a citizen of the United States, appointed some years since commercial agent to reside at the mouth of the Amoor river, instead of taking the usual track to his place of destination, took it into his head, acting in the spirit which actuates the American people, if not the American Government, to traverse the Russian empire and finally brought up—I think the first American citizen who made that journey—at the mouth of the Amoor river. Not satisfied with that, after examining the country and its resources and its capabilities, he proposed to the Russian Government and then to the Government of Great Britain the project of building a telegraph line to connect these two continents. He secured readily, it appears, promptly, the cooperation of those two great Powers, and now comes to his own people and to his own Government and asks us for our cooperation; and we object. And what are the objections? First, that Mr. Collins is likely to make something out of the enterprise. I trust he will. I think he ought to do so. Secondly, that somebody else will do it for less, and that the Government need not subject itself to the expenditure which this bill suggests. What is the evidence that somebody else will do it for less? These two continents have lain for several years just as they are now; this route has been open to the world, if it pleased to occupy it, ever since my remembrance, and perhaps some time before that; and none of your other telegraph companies, and none of your other enterprising citizens have ever proposed the idea of connecting these two continents by telegraph; and now, when the route is surveyed and the capabilities of the countries through which it passes made known to you, you fancy that somebody else, if permitted to step in and take hold of these discoveries, may do the work for less than it is offered to be done for here. I want to see the guarantee. The one fact, I know, is that here is a proposition to build the line without a dollar's cost or a dollar's risk to the nation; and only when it is built, without a dollar's cost or a dollar's risk to the nation, then you are to commence to pay for the use of it, and you do promise to pay absolutely, whether you use the line or not, the sum of $50,000 a year.

Mr. WILSON. Suppose the line does for us $60,000 worth of work?

Mr. HOWE. The bill provides that if it does $60,000 worth of work for you you shall pay $60,000, and I think the American Government ought to pay for all the work that is done for it, and I believe it is willing to do it. There was a proposition in this bill to give to this company the use of a quarter section of land once in fifteen miles for the use of their agents and stations. I believe it has been reduced to forty acres. The Senate was started at it as a prodigal flinging away of the public domain. Mr. President, you have already announced to the world that you consider a single settler on any one of your quarter sections of land worth the one hundred and sixty acres, and you offer it as a free gift; and here when a company proposing an enterprise like this ask you to be furnished for use, and not to sell a quarter section of land, you want to cut it down to ten acres.

But getting over that obstacle, circumscribing them to the occupation of forty acres once in fifteen miles, you come next to the proposition whether you are willing to pay $50,000 per annum for ten years to have the use of this telegraph. You tell us we are at war; we have great need of money. I know the fact: I am not prepared to dispute that. Fifty thousand dollars is a good deal of money, unquestionably; $50,000, if it be levied per capita upon a population of twenty millions, and I suppose ours equals that and will equal it after the war is concluded, amounts to two and a half mills per head. The gross payment for ten years would be two and a half cents to each individual. Now, enormous as that may be, and hard up as I am, I want to say by way of encouraging this enterprise that I am willing to stand it. And more than all that, if the Western Union Telegraph Company can change a five cent note I am willing to pay my two and a half cents in advance, the whole of it, and take the risk of the completion of the line.

Sir, the single question for us to determine, it seems to me, is whether we think it is worth to the American people and the American Government $50,000 to have the capacity furnished to us of communicating daily with all the courts of the eastern continent. Facts transpire here every few months, the communication of a single one of which to the different courts in Europe, I think, would be worth $50,000 in cash. The prompt communication of a single fact, as we know from the history of Governments, may often save a war. This much I say in reference to the political importance of this measure. Its commercial importance perhaps outweighs this vastly. I am almost prepared to say that if I knew the Government would not want to use this line for a single message during the first ten years, I should be willing and I should be proud to have the Government make this utterly insignificant expenditure to achieve this vast enterprise.

Now, Mr. President, without saying more, I am prepared to vote against the motion to strike out the proviso. Is it not astonishing that in the Senate it should be objected to that the originators of an enterprise like this, if they should do more work for the Government than the $50,000 calls for, should be paid the excess by the Government? Is not the laborer worthy of his hire even if he does labor for the Government, and even if he originates the field of his labor in tracks which you never dreamed of occupying until within a very few months?

Mr. WILSON. I take it, Mr. President, that we are all interested in having this telegraph line built, and I suppose we are willing that the Government should make a reasonable contribution toward its construction, but in giving this aid we are desirous to protect the Government as far as possible. It happens that whenever such questions are presented there are different parties in the country, and some men propose to do what is required to be done cheaper than others; and there is an opinion in the country that such measures are sometimes carried through Congress under corrupt influences. My experience here teaches me that there is very little of corruption in any of these measures that go through Congress; but it is plain to any man who has been here that Congress is often overreached by able and sagacious business men that know more about these matters than we do. I think that when any proposition of this kind comes before us we should give the subject a fair consideration and we should endeavor to protect the Government in all respects.

A few years ago we all desired the construction of a telegraph to the Pacific; it had the sentiment of the whole country in its favor. The Senate passed a bill granting the company certain privileges and a certain amount of money. The bill went to the House of Representatives, and a practical business man of that House took the matter into consideration; his committee referred it to him. It was represented that it would cost $750,000 to construct a telegraph line to the Pacific ocean. He went into an examination of the subject and demonstrated that it would cost less than four hundred thousand dollars, and he had an amendment made to that bill which saved money to the Government. The line has been built, I understand, for less than four hundred thousand dollars; and its business is such that its stock is worth one hundred per cent. advance at this time. I am glad they have made money; and I hope the parties who embark in this enterprise will make money. I hope the stock will begood; I care not how many per cent. it advances.

I have made up my mind to vote for this bill; I shall vote for it on general principles, because I believe it will accomplish great results; and as the representative especially of a manufacturing and commercial section of the country, I have nothing else to do but support a bill of this kind if it is well and carefully prepared. We have made several amendments to this bill which I think have improved it, and therefore I shall vote for it.

Mr. TEN EYCK. As I mean to move to strike out the whole of the third section when the bill comes into the Senate, and shall then state in a few words my reasons for so doing, I shall abstain from discussing the matter now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to strike out the proviso to the third section.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I now present, with the leave of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the amendment of which I gave notice yesterday. It is to insert as a new section:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the rate of charges for public or private messages shall not exceed on said line the average usual rates in Europe and America for the same service, or such rates as shall be ascertained and fixed by a convention between the United States, Russia, and Great Britain.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to the amendment with the latter clause. The line goes through an inhospitable region, and a little higher charge may be necessary; but the latter clause allowing the rates to be fixed by a convention of the three Powers saves it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is to go through the territory of the United States, of Great Britain, and of Russia, and the provision is that those three Powers may by convention fix and regulate the rates, so that the company cannot oppress the people of either country.

Mr. BROWN. I really cannot see the force of the amendment which the Senator from Wisconsin has offered. I think it is the veriest sham that was ever put upon a bill. I should like to know what the "usual rates" are. I should like to know from the Senator from Wisconsin how they are to be ascertained. I should like to know how they are to be enforced when they are ascertained. And furthermore, I should like to know how they are going to continue as they now are if we give a monopoly of all the telegraphing in the United States to this one company.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It seems to me so clear that I shall not stop to go into an argument. If we were to authorize the construction of a new railroad and should say that the company in charging its rates of freight and fare should not exceed the usual rates in Europe and America, I think the fact could be ascertained. But lest there might be any difficulty on that subject, lest the company should establish any rates oppressive upon the people either of the United States, Great Britain, or Russia, it is provided that the three countries by a convention can fix the rates and this company has got to comply.

Mr. GRIMES. I think the amendment is in excellent accord with the principle of the bill. It gives to the agents that may be appointed by the British and Russian Governments the power to determine how much this Government shall pay. That is the effect of it.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is the same to all.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not see any such provision in the Russian concession. We do not know what arrangements may be made with this company for the transmission of telegraphic dispatches through British America or through Russia; but so far as we are concerned, this amendment puts the payment that we are to make completely into the hands of men a majority of whom are foreigners.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Does my friend from Iowa think we can fix the rates of charge of a line in Russia or in Great Britain? This line runs through Russia further than it does through the United States and Great Britain both. As a matter of course, therefore, Russia, Great Britain, and the United States should be consulted; and they together by a joint convention should fix the rates of messages over this line that runs through the three countries.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I offered an amendment on Saturday last, which was adopted, requiring that there should be no discrimination by this company against particular newspapers or associated agents of the press, or against other telegraph companies. I now offer an amendment to enforce that provision, to come in immediately after the amendment which was added to the third section on my motion:

And upon proof of any refusal to comply with the provisions of this act, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend all payments that may be due or coming to said parties or their assigns, and any person injured by such non-compliance may sue in any court of the United States having jurisdiction and recover for the damages so sustained.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no objection to that. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri a question in relation to an amendment which he proposed on Saturday, and which I believe was adopted. His amendment, if I recollect aright, made a direction as to whom the answers to messages should be delivered. I desire to suggest that the provision should be that the answers to dispatches should be delivered to such parties or persons as may be directed by the persons sending the dispatches to receive them. Perhaps, however, it would be more proper for me to reserve the matter until the bill comes into the Senate. I shall then offer an amendment such as I have indicated.

Mr. BROWN. I move to amend the bill by striking out after the word "America," in line nine of section one, the words "with such branch lines as may be needed to open communication with the various mining districts and other settlements in said Territories." I desire by this amendment to strike off from this company, which it is proposed here to subsidize so largely, the power of monopolizing all the telegraphing in the Territories of the United States. I have already called attention to the attempt of other telegraph companies to get authority to construct lines to these mining regions and across the northern portion of the continent on the same terms that were originally granted to the Western Telegraph Company that it seems is going to control this overland line. That has been refused by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir.

Mr. BROWN. It has been refused in the shape in which it was presented with a provision for a subsidy. The committee have stricken out all subsidy from all enterprises of that character; but now it is proposed to subsidize a line which shall have authority to construct the same branches, and to give this company the right to cover all the Territories with branches and to monopolize, virtually, all the telegraphing and dispatching of the Government of the United States. If it is absolutely necessary that this line shall be constructed as a circuit around the world, let us confine it to that express business, and not give these extensive additional privileges, because I am frank to say that I am interested as far as possible in breaking up the monopolies of these telegraph companies. It is becoming the worst system in the United States for the transmission of news. It affords us the poorest, the most unreliable of all modes of transmission. It is becoming the most remunerative to its owners and the most undesirable to the public that can possibly be imagined, and all as I believe from the process which is now going on, of consolidating in one or two hands all the telegraph lines of the United States. I, for one, am desirous of distributing and breaking that up as far as possible. I am solicitous, therefore, that this amendment shall be adopted which will deprive them of this right.

Mr. CONNESS. One word as to this amendment. I hope it will not be adopted. The Senator says his object is if this line shall be subsidized by the Government to confine it to dispatches between certain points distant from each other, and not to give the company the right to control and monopolize, as he calls it, the telegraphing in the interior of the country.

Now, sir, let us see. The lines of the overland Telegraph Company who are to enter upon the construction of this line as proposed under this bill, at present extend to Salt Lake only. From the Pacific to Salt Lake it is a California line, a California company. The two lines there meet, and by a division of receipts they arrange for the transmission from the East to the West of telegraph dispatches. It is not proposed under this bill to authorize what is called the Western Company to go to California, and I do not understand that they contemplate going to California. They intend, perhaps, and in all probability will strike off from Salt Lake directly westward to the northern Pacific, to the Territory of Washington, or to the northern part of the State of Oregon, perhaps through Idaho, perhaps through Montana, and thus shorten their line to the Russian Possessions.

Now shall we adopt an amendment which will prevent the company, after passing through Montana or Idaho Territory, from running up or down and connecting themselves with the towns and localities along the route? What monopoly, I pray, is there in a company who propose to build a line across the continent and then to make lateral lines wherever there is business enough to pay for their employment and use? If the Senator desires to prevent an abuse of the use of this privilege and of the use of their lines, let him suggest amendments that will compel the company to receive from all parties in the order in which dispatches are offered such dispatches as are offered and at equal rates to all parties, and let him accompany these amendments with either penal provisions or specific rights to whoever is refused to sue and collect from the parties in management so refusing. Let us have safeguards of that kind if necessary. I apprehend the parties who desire the passage of this bill will not object to that. I am in favor of such provisions.

But there is another bill that has been referred to here in the discussion of this measure. It is a bill that authorizes a company connected with what is called the Independent line of telegraph to build a line to the Pacific. I believe that it was introduced by the honorable Senator who now fills the chair, [Mr. POMEROY,] and referred to the Committee on Commerce, and reported back. I am in favor of that bill. Let it be passed. They say, in a communication laid on Senators' desks this morning, that they are able and willing to build the line to the Pacific if you give them the right of way. Very well; give them the right of way: you will certainly not offer them more than they ask for; but when you propose giving them the right of way, are you going to amend their act so as to deprive them of the right of building lateral lines where they shall choose to build them, or where the business of the country demands their being built? Certainly not. But we are told that you propose to subsidize the line proposed by the bill under consideration; and those people are willing to build a line without subsidy. Now, let me see whether the cases are parallel. I undertake to say that they are not. The company whose circular I hold in my hand propose simply to build an independent line to the Pacific. There they stop. Do they propose building a line through Russia? Do they propose connecting with the British or Russian lines? Certainly not. Do they say they have any concession from either of those Governments, or any right to make any such connections? Certainly not. If they had I would as freely vote for and advocate the passage of a bill to authorize them to enjoy these privileges and rights as to any other party. But the privileges that they ask for I, for one, am willing to concede without restriction upon them as to collateral lines. Why shall we propose a restriction or vote to impose a restriction upon this company as to lateral lines? If they start off from Salt Lake or that vicinity through Utah or Idaho to the Pacific ocean, we wish in California to have the privilege of letting them run a line to our State, so as to give us the benefit of all their extensive ramifications by their system of telegraphing.

I make these remarks to show that I think there is no proper room for jealousy as between these companies or between the privileges demanded by either of them. I hope that this measure will pass without a restriction of the kind now proposed, and that then we shall take up the other bill and pass that too. Let them send intelligence wherever they will and establish the means for its communication. I do not entirely agree with my friend from Missouri, that the telegraph is the most unsafe and unreliable means of communication. I know that it is attended with great difficulties; but without it where should we be to-day? If it were possible that anything should happen that would deprive us of the means of communication by telegraph to-day it would come upon the world like midnight. We do not know and cannot estimate what the loss would be until we should again experience it and lapse into our former condition.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to call the attention of my honorable friend from Missouri to one clause of this bill which I think relieves it of the odiousness of that feature which he ascribes to it. It will be seen that all these branches contemplated are in the unsettled portion of the country and are to connect with the mining districts and such settlements as it may be desirable to connect with, almost entirely now an uninhabited portion of the country. Now, I assume that it is desirable that such communication should be made, that somebody should make it. This is the only company that propose to do it. What is the objection to their having permission to do it? It may be said that you grant them the privilege and they will complete the lines when they please. The bill came to us originally in that form, but if my friend will look at the last clause of this section he will see that a contingency of that sort is provided against; that unless all the branches contemplated by this bill are constructed within five years the power to construct them is null and void; so that they cannot cover over that whole territory against everybody. If they do not perform what is contemplated by this bill within five years, then their right to do it ceases forever. Now, I take it it would be a boon to the American people if they would do it within five years; and as nobody else proposes to do it, why should there be objection to their doing it? I do not see, therefore, the importance of the proposition.

Mr. GRIMES. There is another argument against this proposition of the Senator from Missouri. I understand it to be a fact—I have it from those who know—that if a dispatch is sent over any other line than the Western line or the American line which is connected with it, to Salt Lake, and it reaches the commencement of the Pacific line, it will not be sent thence to California. You cannot send a dispatch through over the Independent line, or in sending a dispatch from the Pacific, it will not be sent over the Independent line, although that may be the only branch that will reach you wherever you may be. If that is the method in which this Western Union Company conduct business, and you do not allow them to build these various lines through the Territories, the result will be virtually to cut off all these Territories from telegraphic communication, because it will be impossible for them to have communication with the outside world, except over the lines of this Pacific or Western Telegraph Company. I think, therefore, the Senator from Missouri will do a great injury to the people of these Territories if, in consequence of the refusal of this Western Union Telegraph Company to transmit dispatches coming over other lines, he should deprive the people of all opportunity to telegraph, which they so much desire.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended. The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY.) The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to except an amendment which was adopted on the motion of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. Brown,] relative to the persons to whom answers to dispatches shall be delivered.

The other amendments were concurred in.

The excepted amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "public" in line fifteen of section four insert:

And to any other telegraph company upon payment of the regular charges for transmission of dispatches, and all such dispatches shall be transmitted in the order of their reception, and the answers thereto shall be delivered to said companies for transmission over their lines to the office whence the original message was sent.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last clause, beginning "and the answers," and inserting "and the answers to said dispatches shall be delivered to such parties as may be directed by the sender."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I now move to strike out the whole of the third section which relates to the subsidy, in accordance with the notice I gave when we were upon the proviso, and as it is thoroughly understood it is hardly worth while that it should be read by the clerk again. It is the section which appropriates $50,000 a year for ten years, with an additional payment for service rendered the Government in the transmission of messages, and providing for keeping an account if that service shall exceed the sum of $50,000 a year.

I make the motion and will submit an observation or two, for two purposes: one is that I have a little personal feeling about this matter; it is rather a matter of personal interest to put myself right on this question; and the other is a much more important one, to save if I can the Treasury from a needless subsidy.

It has been said by Senators in speaking on this subject that those who have opposed this bill in some of its features are opposed to the bill itself, and I had the vanity to suppose that the Senator from Michigan alluded to me this morning when he expressed his surprise that a Senator from a commercial State should oppose the bill, though he was not surprised at Senators from the Northwest doing so. Sir, I do not oppose this bill; I am a warm, enthusiastic friend of the bill. No man can glory more than I do in the credit and renown which this country and this Government will gain by being instrumental in establishing so great and magnificent a work as this line of intercommunication which is to surround the globe. Sir, I have been an ardent friend of every species of public improvement from the time I could understand what that meant. It is one of the cardinal principles and doctrines of my creed. But the question is not here whether this work is to be built or not; the question is, how is it to be built, and under what circumstances? and that is the sole question.

I shall not take up the time of the Senate in recapitulating the ability and strength and power and exclusive privileges which have been conferred upon the gentlemen comprising this company; that has been so fully ventilated before the Senate as to attract the eyes of all men in this country to their power, their influence, and their interest. But the question is whether the Government of the United States shall give a subsidy of $50,000 a year certainly for ten years, and perhaps $50,000 a year in addition, under the provisions of this bill.

I admit that the Government should pay like an individual for the service which is performed for it. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Howe] seemed to express some surprise that Congress should be indisposed to pay in behalf of the Government for the labor and service that might be rendered for it by this company. I do not occupy that position here. He asks whether, if the transmission of the Government messages should amount to more than $50,000 a year, the Government ought not to pay for transmitting them. I say certainly it ought, standing alone as a single question; but why should the Government pay $50,000 if messages are transmitted for it amounting to only $1,000 or $5,000 in a year? By that rule, the Senator's logic does not hold good. But he says this subsidy is to encourage this great national project. Does it need this encouragement? He asked, with tones of surprise and rather of indignation, shall this Government be so mean as to withhold a helping hand to aid in this great project? Why, sir, if I understand the general provisions of this bill, the Government is not to withhold its hand; neither is Congress close, mean, or stingy in the assistance it proposes to give to this company in the construction of this work. I need but simply recapitulate that we give them the use of a quarter section of land for every fifteen miles along the route of these telegraph lines, several thousand miles in length, with the wood and timber necessary for their purposes. We authorize the Secretary of the Navy to detail a national vessel for the purpose of making the surveys and soundings, and carrying the very material with which this line is to be constructed. We also put at the disposal of this company a part of the Army of the country to protect them in this work, and to protect the work after it is completed. I think, then, the Government is not parsimonious, the Government is not close, the Government does not throw difficulties in the way of the accomplishment of this great undertaking.

The Senator from Wisconsin asked why we should not act with the liberality of the Governments of Russia and Great Britain. Sir, if we refuse this subsidy of $500,000 we shall then, under this bill, afford this company much greater advantages and privileges than have been conferred on them either by the Russian or the British Government. I beg leave to refer for one moment to these papers which have been called contracts. They may, according to the faith of kings, amount to contracts, although I have heard it said you should not put your trust in princes. What does the Government of Russia undertake to do by its officer, Lieutenant General of Engineers Melnikoff? It gives no portion of the army to maintain the work in its erection or to secure it after it is erected. It details no portion of its navy for the purpose of soundings, surveys, or carrying materials thousands of miles. It gives no subsidy; not a dollar. It, however, enjoins it upon the company that they shall employ Russians for the purpose of protecting the work, and it insists upon it, too, that they shall be married men, men of families, who are to be taken with their families and established along the line in a district of country that never had any settlements, for the purpose of increasing its power and populating the district of country through which the line shall pass, having an eye to the increase of its strength and its power, and the extension of its population in that section of country. And

"According to the opinion of the same officer, acting as governor general of Eastern Siberia, all workmen, and a portion of the servants on duty along the projected telegraph line, should be Russian subjects; and as many as possible ought to be married men, with their families. This will likewise be important to the company in an economical point of view, as well as in regard to its relations with the Russian Government."

Then, again, it requires by an express stipulation that the Government of Russia shall not in any way be liable to pay these men who are thus taken for the purpose of guarding and protecting this line, if I read it aright. Then, again, we give here a free, uninterrupted, and unrestricted privilege for all time. By this Russian contract it is stipulated that the work shall be commenced, and five years allowed to establish the telegraph, and thirty-three years for exclusive privilege:

"The term solicited by the company, viz: five years in which to establish the telegraph, and thirty-three years for exclusive privilege of the same, can be granted under condition that if, in the course of the first two years, no beginning should be made, or if, after the expiration of five years, the whole line should not be achieved and put in operation, then the privilege is to cease."

You will observe that by this boasted contract of the Russian Government which is held up in such flaming contrast to the proposition we now make in our bill, this company are restricted in their exclusive use and privilege of this line to the period of thirty-three years, whereas this monopoly which is now sought to be conferred on this company is to last for all time, and it is to have power to run out its lines to mineral lands in all directions, like fingers running from a man's arm.

Sir, I think that with what Congress now proposes to do under this bill if we shall not grant the subsidy of $50,000 we may compare the liberality of our Government fairly and favorably with the conduct of the Russian and British Governments. The British Government give no subsidy, as will be found by an investigation of this contract or privilege which the secretary of the Duke of Newcastle has conferred upon the gentleman who has been so distinguished in his efforts to procure the concessions from these different Governments.

The Senator from Wisconsin, who, I am sorry to see, is not here, called this a mere pittance on our part. Well, sir, in view of what we undertake to do it is no pittance. He says who will undertake to do it for less? Without going to anybody else, I say this company will do it for less; and I am authorized in so saying because I know that they first asked, when they introduced their bill, only $40,000 a year instead of $50,000; and that would be a saving of $50,000 in ten years, which is no small matter in these times, when we are racking our brain for the purpose of getting money to carry on this war. They will not only do it for $40,000, but they will do it and can afford to do it without a dollar of subsidy, and ought to do it under the great advantages we offer them for the purpose of enabling them to carry out this work and to have the sole control of a corporation whose capital has risen within the short period of fifteen months, if I am correctly informed, from $3,000,000 to $12,000,000, and, as I believe, it will be worth, if this bill should be passed through both Houses of Congress, the snug little sum of $20,000,000. Oh, but, says the Senator from California, [Mr. Conness,] in reply to an objection raised by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. Brown,] that another project of a similar kind cannot receive the fostering hand of Congress, he is perfectly willing to vote for that bill; he is perfectly willing to grant the right of way to the new line which it is proposed to start from the Missouri river and run to San Francisco. He says that bill has been reported, as he believes, without any largess or subsidy being offered on the part of Congress.

When that bill was introduced by yourself, sir, [Mr. POMEROY in the chair,] into this Senate, it proposed that Congress should extend to the United States Telegraph Company, in addition to granting them the right of way, a subsidy of $20,000 a year. I may mention the fact, because it appears upon the records of the Senate that one bill, this huge bill, was reported back from the Committee on Commerce, of which I happen to be an humble member, with the subsidy of $50,000 allowed, and the subsidy of $20,000 asked for in the other case was stricken out; from which I feel myself justified in saying that honorable influences, (not corrupt but honorable influences,) the weight of character of men of ability, and skill, and wealth, and their persuasions and their arguments, have been able to satisfy the committee and the Senate that a subsidy should be allowed in the one case and not granted in the other. I myself am not able to see the distinction between the two.

Now, sir, having just made this plain, unvarnished statement of the facts of the case as they stand before us on this bill, I submit most respectfully that at this time, a time of war, when we are in a death-struggle to maintain our armies in the face of the enemy, and when we are undergoing such a trial as no nation under heaven did through its public agents and officers to keep the public Treasury in a position to meet the public demands and to defray the expenses of our Army and our Navy, we should not be hasty in pressing this subsidy of $500,000, when, according to my humble judgment, and I think the facts of the case will sustain me, this telegraph line can be built without any detriment to the persons interested in it, without the grant of a single dollar for that purpose. With these comments I trust I have discharged my duty and have done with the discussion of this matter.

Mr. MORRILL. My honorable friend has stated one fact or alluded to a fact which renders it necessary that I should say a word. It is true the record discloses what he states, that one bill comes from the Committee on Commerce with a subsidy, and another bill, proposing a subsidy, with that subsidy denied; but I think my honorable friend undertakes to draw an inference from it which would be prejudicial to the favor of the Senate toward this bill for that reason; and he forgot to say what he will remember when I repeat it, that there was an obvious and distinct reason why the subsidy was denied in the case referred to, and the reason is as patent on the records of the Senate as the fact referred to. It will be remembered by the Senate that some two or three years ago the Congress of the United States granted a subsidy of $40,000 a year, I think, for the construction of a line from the Missouri river to San Francisco. Having one subsidized line, I think the Senate will understand why the committee should come to the conclusion that it was hardly worth while for the Government to subsidize another line in the same direction and on almost the same route. I hope that is an answer to any inference which might be drawn from the fact alluded to by my honorable friend from New Jersey.

While I am up I want to say another word about the estimate which is put upon the value of this enterprise by my honorable friend from New Jersey. He says it gives a snug little fortune of $20,000,000 to somebody. If it shall so turn out I shall never weep over it. If we secure the enterprise it will never be a matter of regret to me that the enterprising men who engaged in it and gave it to the country and to the world for all time have made fortunes, if you please, out of it; but that is a speculation, that is a thing to be tried; that is a thing there are no facts to demonstrate. At the present moment it is all speculation. The fact may be so eventually, or it may not.

Whenever any propositions come up for railroads, telegraphs, or what not, somebody who has got a counter-project, or somebody who does not believe in the thing itself, rises and says, "Now only give that thing to me and I will do the public great credit and make a very good thing out of it myself." Have we forgotten what a struggle it was to get a horse railroad chartered along Pennsylvania avenue between Georgetown and the Capitol? When one party proposed it some one who did not want him to have it would come in and offer to make a great deal better terms for the public, and we were told that in it there were immense fortunes for many people. Well, we granted a charter; the enterprise went forward; everybody admits it is a great blessing to the city; the public has been accommodated, and besides that it is said those parties have made money. I hope they have; I may venture to say they have; but what is the result? You are having railroads all over the city; you have got the thing started; the people see the utility of it, and now we are making railroads on streets parallel to it and at right angles to it, and when that is done what is to become of the fortunes of these men? They will not lose, I hope; but that which is a monopoly will be rendered entirely powerless and entirely harmless, and will be only a benefaction forever to the people in the power Congress has over all such subjects to allow competition whenever competition is demanded. Whenever there are others equally enterprising who will undertake similar enterprises the dividends of the existing companies will to a great extent disappear. I think this is a sufficient answer to what has been said by my honorable friend on that point.

It is said that we propose to give this company $500,000, $50,000 a year for ten years, if they will go forward with this enterprise. What do we secure to ourselves in the mean time? We secure to ourselves over this telegraph the opportunity for all the Departments of this Government, executive and legislative, the Navy and the War Departments, to have free intercourse with all sections of the eastern world. Is that nothing? If the value of that intercourse shall be $50,000 a year it will turn out that we do not give the company anything. But in the advance of a great enterprise of this kind, a subsidy is of value inasmuch as it gives credit and character to it and enables the parties to go forward. I submit whether we should stand here and make an argument as to our making a penny more or less by giving this subsidy if we are satisfied that the subsidy will stimulate the enterprise and enable these men to accomplish the result. Suppose the cost of our governmental intercommunication with the other parts of the world comes to a little less than $50,000 each year, to $30,000 or $40,000, who will ever regret that?

Mr. TEN EYCK. I rise just as the Senator from Maine did, simply to correct a statement. The Senator says that I did not state all that applied to the difference between this line and the other one to which I referred. He says that the reason why a subsidy is allowed in the one case and not in the other is that this is on a new route and requires a subsidy, while the other is on a line already occupied and therefore not entitled to a subsidy; and he seemed to say to me, although he did not use the quotation, "Mark how plain a tale shall put him down." Now, Mr. President, the fact turns out to be, if I am not incorrectly informed, that the Senator is mistaken in relation to that matter; that the new line proposed to be established by the bill which you, sir, [Mr. POMEROY in the chair,] introduced in the Senate was not over a beaten track, but through an unoccupied territory, and a portion of it the very territory which it is sought to cover by the additional provisions to be given to this Western Telegraph Company to extend their lateral lines to the mineral lands. By the second section of that bill it was provided:

"That the said United States Telegraph Company, under the direction of the President of the United States, is hereby authorized to erect a line of telegraph from Fort Hall, by Walla-Walla and the Dalles and San Francisco to Portland, in the State of Oregon, and from Fort Hall to Bannock and Virginia City, in the Territory of Idaho, with the same privileges as to the right of way, and so forth, as is provided in the first section of this act; the United States to have priority in the use of said lines of telegraph to Oregon and Idaho, and for such use the United States Telegraph Company shall receive for the term of ten years from the time of its completion, annually, the sum of $20,000, which shall be in full payment for all messages transmitted."

That was through a new and unexplored country. This company asked this subsidy of $20,000 to be given to them as an encouragement, for which they undertook to transmit all Government messages. That was stricken out, but the subsidy was retained in this bill, and with this distinction: as the bill stood originally—it is not so now—$50,000 were to be given for the transmission of all messages, unless they should amount to more than $100,000, and then payments for the excess of that $100,000; but now, by the provisions of the bill as it has been amended, we are required to pay $50,000 a year for ten years whether we do business over the amount of $100,000 or not, and to pay for all the excess, if any, over $100,000. I can myself see a very material difference between the two, and much less reason, in my judgment, for the allowance of the subsidy in the case of the Great Western Telegraph Company than in the case to which I have referred.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will pardon me, both Senators are mistaken as to the original proposition. The original proposition was to pay the same sum to the new company as was paid to the old. That was the original proposition, which we rejected, and then they came in with another proposition.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Why not keep an account and let the Government pay for all messages that it transmits?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Fifty thousand dollars is the amount we agree to pay this company for the use annually of this line when it is built. When built, it will connect us with all Europe, all Asia, with the lines that are building with Australasia, with the East Indies, and all the civilized world and the semi-civilized world. Suppose there are three hundred working days in a year, and that the dispatches which would be sent on an average would cost three dollars apiece, which is a low estimate, and $50,000 would be at the rate of about fifty or sixty messages per day between this Government and all our ministers in Europe, all our consuls and consular agents in Europe, in Asia, in East India, and in Australasia, all the orders that are to be issued by the Navy Department to our vessels, and the messages that will be received from those vessels at every landing in the whole world. In my judgment, men never made so great a mistake in the world as when they suppose that the use of this line to this Government will not amount to this sum on this very low estimate upon these messages of three dollars apiece for a single message. It is more likely to be more than $100,000 than anything else, in my opinion. We are not agreeing to pay any subsidy, but simply agreeing that we will pay this amount for the use of this telegraphic communication.

Mr. CONNESS. Let me say to the Senator what he cannot be aware of, which strengthens his position much, that his estimate of three dollars a message will not do at all. They charge now, from Chicago to San Francisco, forty-five cents a word, and a message of ten words to that place from this city costs between six and seven dollars, and it is the cheapest telegraphing in proportion to the distance in the world.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, by the amendment which was adopted some time ago to prevent this telegraph company through this country from oppressing either the public or private individuals, it is provided that the Government of the United States and Russia can at any time by a convention between them put down the rates to just what they think is right, because it is a great international affair.

Mr. President, I introduced this petition in behalf of Mr. Collins, and it was referred to the Committee on Commerce. It is said here that the men who are interested in this work, the Western Telegraph Company, have made themselves wealthy in consequence of the building and connection of these various lines. I grant it; there is no doubt of it; but it is a wealth which has grown out of a new creation. They pressed for an opportunity to build this telegraph line when men thought it was a humbug and could never be sustained; but by their perseverance, and energy, and industry they have achieved for this country and for the world a new creation of wealth. If they are rich enough to build this line now through the country where it is proposed to be built, through that portion of Russia, of the British possessions, and a portion of the United States now almost entirely uninhabited except by Indians, I rejoice at the fact that the company is rich and able to carry through the enterprise, and if it should succeed in the creation of still additional wealth to them, to that I have no objection, provided while they are accomplishing wealth for themselves they are accomplishing a blessing to us and to mankind.

Senators have spoken of our granting land to this company. We grant them the use of forty acres of land every fifteen miles for a station. If they build the line and have their stations in these uninhabited regions of our Territories, by giving them the use of this land we confer a greater benefit upon ourselves than we do upon them. The fact that they shall maintain a station at every fifteen miles is a blessing to us in point of wealth, in developing the value of these very Territories through which the line passes.

Senators object that we are to employ vessels in surveys along the coast to aid this enterprise. That is the very business in which we are now employing some of our vessels, in making coast surveys, and taking the soundings, and understanding the geography of the whole earth.

Mr. GRIMES. But our naval vessels do not carry telegraph wire.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I say so far as this is concerned it is not doing any injury to us.

Mr. President, I do not wish to take up any time. What I desire is that we may come to a vote on this bill, and I shall now give way, although there were some two or three other considerations which have been thrown out in the course of the debate which I thought of noticing, but I shall forbear to do so.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I desire to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question. This bill is to take the balance of the session, as I understand.

Mr. CHANDLER. Oh, no, sir; we shall be through with it in a very short time.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I ask the friends of the bill whether the project will be interfered with by postponing it until the next session.

Mr. CHANDLER. That will postpone it forever.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. We propose to come to a vote now.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. In my opinion we have just commenced the discussion of this question. I move that this bill be postponed until the first Monday, in December next, in order that we may get rid of it and go to the general business of the country.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, and Ten Eyck—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Chandler, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Harris, Hicks, Howe, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Powell, Richardson, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, Willey, and Wilson—27.

ABSENT—Messrs. Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Ramsey, Riddle, and Wright—8.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment moved by the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. TEN EYCK,] to strike out the third section of the bill.

Mr. GRIMES called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the advocates of this measure have constantly endeavored to confound the idea of the necessity of a great continental telegraph with the idea of the necessity for this subsidy. There has been no evidence adduced before the Senate that this subsidy is necessary in order to enable this company or its assigns to construct this telegraph. On the contrary all the evidence we have had here to-day has gone directly to show that it is one of the wealthiest associations of men in the nation, that it has made that wealth out of similar enterprises constructed in the same manner, and that therefore the enterprises themselves are the most profitable known in the country; that this amounts really to a monopoly of the transmission of all messages not only over the route through Russia, but also across through California; that its stock has gone up, I believe one Senator stated, from $3,000,000 to $12,000,000, and the probabilities are that it will be put up to $20,000,000 if this bill be passed as it now stands. And yet, sir, in the face of these facts, we are called upon at this time, when the nation is being taxed almost to the verge of resistance, to vote another $500,000 out of the Treasury as a subsidy to this company, and when we ask why, we are retorted with the question, Why not? Why will you not aid this great enterprise? Why will you not give assistance to this great enterprise that is going to connect the world in a telegraphic circle? I say it becomes them to show that there is a necessity for this donation, for it is virtually a donation from the public Treasury.

But furthermore I desire to call the attention of the Senate to another fact, that the operation of this subsidy, so to speak, commits the Government to the use of this line as its telegraphic agent, and in so far prevents all competition against it. That is one of the worst features connected with it. It has a tendency to discourage all other constructions of the same kind that might compete with it successfully across the plains to California and Oregon, and through the mineral regions of the interior Territories.

It has been said, in reply to one of the suggestions that has been made here, that the committee which has reported this bill and reported it with a substitute in it refused to report another bill for a line to go across another part of the country with subsidies, that it was because they would not bring in a rival line. When it is known that this is owned by the Western Telegraph Company, as has been shown by the paper which was read here by the Senator from California, and when the committee which reports this bill for their benefit, giving them these subsidies, refuses to report a bill for a rival company with the same subsidy, I ask if it is not a discrimination against them? So far from inviting competition the whole tendency of this legislation is to monopolize and to center in a single hand the telegraphing of the nation, and giving them the exclusive privilege of telegraphing to these mineral lands which they refuse to others.

Sir, I, for one, am not content to vote for this bill in its present shape. I have no objection to giving to this company or to any other company a right of way through the public domain for telegraphic purposes, and to give them, if necessary, a certain amount of public lands for stations; but I will not voluntarily throw $500,000 into their coffers when there is no earthly need for so doing. I trust that the amendment moved by the Senator from New Jersey will prevail, and that we will at least, in our haste to heap benefits upon this company, save to the Government $500,000 that are needed now for our Army.

Mr. POMEROY. I would not have said a word on this bill but for the remarks that were made by the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Maine in reference to the bill which I had the honor of introducing, which has been before the Committee on Commerce, and reported upon favorably by them with an amendment. The remark has been made that the subsidy was stricken out of that bill because it proposed to build a line over a route that had already been built upon under the patronage of the Government, and for which the Government had paid $60,000 a year. So far from that being true, there is not a word of truth in it. By the bill which I introduced, and which I hold in my hand, the United States Telegraph Company ask for the right of way to build a telegraph line from the Missouri river to the city of San Francisco, in the State of California, on such route as they might select to connect with the lines now constructed. For this purpose the company ask the use of such unoccupied land of the United States as might be necessary for the right of way and for stations, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres for every fifteen miles. The company ask for the use of such unoccupied land as may be necessary for the right of way and materials, and for the establishing of stations along the line for repairs. They ask for no subsidy, for no money.

In the second section of that bill the company propose to build, under the direction of the President of the United States, a telegraph line from this main line to California up to Oregon by the way of Fort Hall to Walla-Walla and also to Bannock and Virginia Cities in Idaho, and for that purpose they ask a subsidy. They never asked, nor was there any provision in the bill giving them a subsidy for building a line where we had already a line constructed, but only in those unoccupied Territories where we had no line.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will pardon me for interrupting him for a single moment, I wish to call his attention to the original bill that he introduced. He is under a misapprehension on this subject. The first section of the first bill introduced by him contained this clause:

And said telegraph company shall receive annually for doing the Government business as is now or may be hereafter paid to the lines constructed under the act of Congress of June 16, 1860.

They asked in their original bill the same subsidy that is paid to this other line for a telegraph to San Francisco.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator is aware that another bill which I hold in my hand was introduced by myself as a substitute for that, and upon that bill we never asked any subsidy at all. The bill which I hold in my hand was introduced by me as a substitute for that bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is true.

Mr. POMEROY. Upon this bill we never asked any subsidy for a line over a road already built upon, but only in that portion of the country where we had no line, in Idaho, Oregon, and those western Territories, and I say the subsidy was stricken out of this bill when asked for that portion of the line to cover territory unoccupied by telegraph companies. I do not complain of it particularly. I simply desire that the statement of the fact shall be before the Senate, as it shows that the committee have given a subsidy to one company for building over the very same route that the subsidy was stricken out for another company; that is all. But, sir, this company will be very glad to have this bill passed without any subsidy. They will be very willing and very glad to accept of the bill without the subsidy of $20,000, and they will undertake to build the line without the subsidy. I only say that if we give a subsidy to any line over unoccupied territory, there is no reason why it should not be given to this United States Telegraph Company as well as to any other. They do not ask it, and the bill does not provide for it over any portion of territory where we already have a line.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the amendment of Mr. TEN Eyck, resulted—yeas 21, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Carlile, Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Lane of Kansas, Pomeroy, Powell, Ramsey, Sausbury, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, and Willey—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Dixon, Doolittle, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Howe, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilkinson—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Davis, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Richardson, Riddle, Sprague, Wilson, and Wright—12.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move to lay the bill and the amendments on the table. It has been killed in the Senate, and we might as well get rid of it.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope not. I hope the Senator will withdraw his motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill is good for nothing now.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. If the motion is withdrawn I shall renew it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. On that I ask for the yeas and nays. ["Oh, no!"] I will withdraw the call.

The motion was not agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. HOWARD. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 36, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Carlile, Clark, Collamer, Conness, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Harris, Hicks, Howe, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Powell, Richardson, Sausbury, Sherman, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, Willey, and Wilson—36.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Howard, and Lane of Indiana—3.

ABSENT—Messrs. Davis, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Ramsey, Riddle, Sprague, and Wright—10.

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bill and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (No. 542) to regulate the pay of paymasters and military storekeepers of ordnance;

A joint resolution (No. 102) for the relief of Captain M. M. Hawes; and

A joint resolution (No. 107) for the relief of Major Morris S. Miller, of the quartermaster's department.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolutions, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (No. 527) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1865—to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (No. 542) to regulate the pay of paymasters and military storekeepers of ordnance—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A joint resolution (No. 101) to provide for the publication of a full Army Register—to the Committee on Printing.

A joint resolution (No. 102) for the relief of Captain M. M. Hawes—to the Committee on Claims.

A joint resolution (No. 107) for the relief of Major Morris S. Miller, of the quartermaster's department—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

EXAMINATION OF ARMY OFFICERS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate (No. 85) to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army, and, on motion of Mr. WILSON, they were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

EDUCATION IN WASHINGTON COUNTY.

Mr. GRIMES. At an early part of the session, the Senate passed a bill (No. 26) to provide for the public instruction of youth in the county of Washington and District of Columbia. The House of Representatives have passed the bill with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, substantially the same in every particular as the original bill, except that they have incorporated into it the clause which the Senate struck out on motion of the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. JOHNSON,] allowing to the commissioners or trustees four dollars per day. Under the instructions of the Senate given to us at the time the bill was under consideration, the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom the amendment of the House of Representatives was referred, have directed me to report that they recommend that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives, with an amendment striking out that clause. I therefore make that motion.

The Secretary read the amendment proposed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, which was to strike out the following clause:

8. Each commissioner shall be entitled to receive four dollars per day for every day he shall attend a meeting of the board, and not absent himself without permission, and four dollars per day for every day he shall serve on a committee; and all disbursements shall be made through the treasurer of the school fund on the draft of the president and clerk of said board, drawn by order of said board.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on concurring in the amendment of the House of Representatives as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 329) supplementary to the several acts for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and other purposes; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was recommended the bill (S. No. 286) to prohibit the discharge of persons from liability to military duty by reason of the payment of money, reported it without amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 192) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1865.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (No. 121) for the relief of Lieutenant William P. Richner, seventy-seventh regiment Ohio volunteer infantry;

A bill (No. 543) to increase the efficacy of the medical corps of the Army; and

A joint resolution (No. 103) for the relief of Mary Kellogg.

REPEAL OF FUGITIVE SLAVE LAWS.

Mr. SUMNER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 512) to repeal the fugitive slave act of 1850, and all acts and parts of acts for the rendition of fugitive slaves.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, I suppose every Senator desires an early adjournment if possible. It has been hoped that we should be able to adjourn by the first part, or at the furthest by the middle of next week, and of course there are a great many bills of importance that ought to be considered in the mean time. I think when the session is approaching its close that each class of business should have to some extent its turn, if I may so express myself. The interest represented by the Senator from Massachusetts, I think in all reason, has had enough of the time of this session. For some months during the first part of the session scarcely a bill was considered at all that did not have some connection with the colored race. The very measure that the Senator now asks to be considered by the Senate has once been considered, I think has occupied nearly one week of the time of the Senate, and the judgment of the Senate upon the different questions has been distinctly pronounced to the effect that the Senate was willing to repeal the law of 1850, but unwilling to repeal the law of 1793. Is it just to the other interests of the country, is it just to the soldiers in the field, is it just to the farmers at home that everything relating to their interests shall give way for the consideration of this bill which has once been considered by the Senate at great length?

If Senators think that this race demands the attention of the body to the exclusion of every other interest of the country, then let us say at once that the Senator from Massachusetts shall have all the balance of the session for his particular measure. His Freedmen's Bureau bill has been pressed upon the Senate, and I supposed when he was calling for the attention of the Senate that it was to press the immediate consideration of that bill. It has been partly debated, and I can see that it is but fair to give the Senator the opportunity to close the discussion upon that bill, and to come to a vote. I should not oppose it, because to some extent the Senate has considered it; and I am in favor, when we consider a bill, of prosecuting that examination until we come to a result.

But now the Senator lays that bill aside, knowing it has some claim upon the Senate, and that it can be claimed as soon as this is disposed of, with a view of taking up this bill, which in my judgment has no claim upon the Senate. Of what practical consideration is the bill that the Senator now proposes to take up? Will the Senator say to the Senate that there is a single fugitive slave now being returned? Will the Senator say that any law upon that subject is now being enforced, or that there has, under the fugitive slave law of 1850 or 1793, been a single slave returned to his master within the last six months? I undertake to say, from my observation and reading, that not a single slave has been returned upon the demand of a claimant since this Congress met, and probably there would not be one within the coming year. The condition of the country precludes it. I find no fault with the Administration for not executing these laws in the present condition of the country. It is practically impossible to do it; but the fact that the laws are for the time being a dead letter upon the statute-book is a reason why the Senator shall not crowd out other business, why the Senate need not prolong the session to take up a bill of no pressing practical importance. The bill that the Senate passed is before the House of Representatives. I am not aware that it has received the consideration of the House. The Senator cannot say that upon any vote of the House that body has declined to concur in the views expressed by the Senate, so far as I have observed the action of the House. Then may we not well wait until the House shall consider our bill, which was sent to that body, as I understand, before this bill came to this body? Am I wrong in that?

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator is wrong. Our bill has never been finally acted upon.

Mr. HENDRICKS. In this body?

Mr. SUMNER. In this body.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then, Mr. President, I shall not object to the Senator calling up the Senate bill. I was absent necessarily for a few days during the session, and I understood from the reading of the proceedings of Congress that that bill had been finally disposed of, and had gone to the House of Representatives. But if I am wrong in that, then we ought to take up that bill. The Senate has expressed its views upon the contested questions involved in it, and we know just where we stand upon it, and can certainly come to a vote at a very early hour. But if we have got to go over the whole subject, then this bill must occupy a very considerable portion of this week. Then will come up the Senator's bureau bill for the benefit of the freedmen, or, as the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WILLEY] says, for the purpose of reenslaving the colored people who have become free by the fortunes of war; and thus all the time that Senators in their mind have allowed for the continuance of the session has to be taken up by the peculiar measures of the Senator from Massachusetts.

I have not pressed, before this time, an objection to the consideration of these questions. If the Senator's party can well stand the exclusion of every other business for the consideration of that which relates to the colored people, I think I can try and endure it. I must confess that there are some subjects that would be more gratifying to my tastes; but in a political point of view I shall try to endure it. But I think now, as we have all come to the conclusion that we shall adjourn during the early part of next week, we ought to take up such measures as are important for the machinery of the Government, for the benefit of the Army, for the benefit of the Navy, for the benefit of the civil Departments of the Government, pass them through, and let us go home.

The merits of every other question that the Senator has peculiarly in charge have been considered. He cannot say that the Senate has refused to consider his bills when he has urged them. The Senator has so much determination of purpose about him that it cannot be avoided that his bills shall be considered. Sometimes I have agreed to consider them rather than fight his determined demand. Being zealous in his cause of course is a merit, if his cause is right, which I do not choose to discuss just now; but in view of the fact that we have a bill on this subject to a very considerable extent matured according to the judgment of the Senate, and in view of the further fact that this question has no practical importance, there being no slaves returned to bondage, I insist that the Senate ought not to take up that bill.

Mr. HOWARD. The bill which the Senator from Massachusetts desires to have taken up has passed the House of Representatives. The effect of it, as I understand, is to repeal the fugitive slave act of 1793, and also the fugitive slave act of 1850. The House of Representatives have considered this subject of sufficient importance to justify them in spending a considerable time in the discussion of it, and in finally passing this bill; and yet, sir, we are blessed with the superior judgment of the Senator from Indiana who informs us that this bill is not worthy of our consideration at this time. That seems to be his opinion; and in order to convince the rest of us that it is thus unworthy he spends considerable time in making a very interesting speech to us. I think differently. I think it is high time that the Senate of the United States should take this subject under their consideration and should pass upon the great questions which have so long agitated the people of the United States connected with the rendition of fugitive slaves. I do not say, I will not pretend, that it is the greatest or the most weighty measure that can be presented to our consideration; but I say this, that it is worthy of our immediate consideration and attention, and I hope the Senate will take it up, especially as the House of Representatives have seen fit to send it to us for our consideration.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, this is a very practical question indeed. The motion, I believe, is to take up for consideration the bill which proposes to repeal the several fugitive slave acts.

[At this point Mr. MORGAN, by unanimous consent, reported a bill for the repeal of the commutation clause, to be found in another portion of the proceedings.]

Mr. DOOLITTLE. With the leave of the Senator from Delaware I desire to make a motion. I believe the Senate perfectly understands the bill just reported from the Committee on Military Affairs by the Senator from New York repealing the commutation clause, and as it is not necessary to enter into a discussion upon it, I presume we can take it up now and vote upon it.

Mr. SUMNER. There is another question pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Then, with the leave of the Senator from Delaware, I will move to amend the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts by dividing it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not in order.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. What is the motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To postpone all prior orders and take up the bill indicated by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will move that that motion lie upon the table for the purpose of taking up the bill I have indicated.

Mr. WILSON. I hope there will not be an effort made to antagonize these two bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such a motion is not in order.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I was about to remark that the motion, as I understood, was to take up for consideration a bill from the House of Representatives to repeal the several fugitive slave acts. Of course, under a motion of this kind we cannot enter into a general discussion as to the propriety of the repeal; but it is allowable, I believe, to assign some reasons briefly why the bill should not be taken up for consideration, and I think there are various reasons.

The first reason I shall assign why this bill should not be taken up for consideration is the fact that no practical good can result from it. Everybody in this country who knows anything knows that the interest of no persons in any of the States can be affected by it, except persons residing in three or four border States. It is known to everybody that there is not a slave in any of those States who is not perfectly free to go where he pleases. The military power of this Government is now extended over those States, and at every cross-roads there is one of these sentinels of modern freedom stationed to see that if a negro wants to escape from his master he can escape. No one, I apprehend, has an idea that if a negro was to escape to the delightful garden of Massachusetts, or New England, or any of the free States, that he could possibly under any circumstances be recaptured, notwithstanding the existence of the fugitive slave act. What earthly good then can result to the slave from taking up this bill for consideration and occupying the time of the Senate with it? I presume it is perfectly allowable to discuss it in this shape, because three fourths of all the labors of this body during the present session have been devoted to the consideration of the interests of the negro to the exclusion of the real interests of the white man.

Then, sir, if it were true that there was a slave in any of these border States that could be recaptured if he was to run away, this bill should not be taken up for consideration to repeal the act, because his escape and the prevention of his recapture would be an injury to the slave. What has this modern philanthropy done for the negro slaves? Taken them from happy and comfortable homes, reduced them to want and starvation, and brought them down to the grave by hundreds and thousands. And now, sir, wherever they have an opportunity to return they are returning in flocks, as I have been informed by gentlemen acquainted with the subject.

If the Senate of the United States take this bill up for consideration it must be simply for purpose of agitation, simply for the purpose of making their legislation during this session a little more symmetrical by showing that the paramount interests which they have at heart are the supposed interests of the negro race. Are we to be kept here during the entire month of July to consider questions of this character and to act upon bills of this nature? Is it to be supposed that a bill which ignores all the lessons of the past, which repudiates all the examples of the past, is to be passed through this Senate in a moment or in a day? Is it supposed that if you take it up for consideration there will not be discussion upon it? Have we become so much wiser than our fathers who enacted the fugitive slave act of 1793, that we who believe they acted wisely for the good both of the white and black races are to be expected to sit here quietly and allow the repeal of that law without discussing its merits? If gentlemen so suppose they are very much mistaken. Sir, we should be untrue to the men of the past, to the men who shaped our institutions, the men who made the Constitution of the country and afterwards put that Constitution into operation, if we were to allow without a protest the wisecracks of the present day to declare that their acts were founded in injustice and wrong. When I use that term I do not apply it to any member of this body, because that would not only be discourteous but it is what I do not mean. I speak of this sickly sentimentality and its advocates in the country.

But, Mr. President, it is hardly worth while for me to detain the Senate. I presume their minds are made up and they will act according to their own judgment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is now four o'clock. There is no sort of possibility or probability in the course of human events that this bill can be acted on to-day; to-morrow we shall have up other questions of actual pressing importance that must be acted upon; and at this late hour in the day it seems to me entirely unnecessary to take it up and go into a discussion which will not come to any result. Therefore, as there is some business in executive session which is necessary to be done, or proper to be done at least, I will move that we go into executive session.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope not. I hope that the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill which has come from the House of Representatives, to sweep from the statute-book all statutes or parts of statutes for the rendition of fugitive slaves. I know of nobody who proposes to discuss it, unless it is the Senator from Wisconsin himself, if he proposes to make a plea for slave-hunting. I know of no person here on our side who proposes to undertake any such plea, to occupy the time of the Senate in any way for or against it. All that I ask is a vote.

Mr. DAVIS obtained the floor.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The Senator from Massachusetts puts a question to me, and says he does not—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. DAVIS. I have merely a remark to make, and I will give way in a moment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I hope the Senator will allow me to answer the present question.

Mr. DAVIS. I will make my remark first. I tell the Senator from Massachusetts that I have, as I said some days ago, the sequel of the story of slavery in his State to tell, and I expect to tell it upon this bill. I have no doubt it will be very edifying to the honorable Senator. Probably he is not a very good historian. I recollect that sometime during the last session when the proposition was made in the Senate to employ Indians in this war, I adverted to the manner in which such a proposition had been received in the British Parliament, and to the very indignant and eloquent defense of that measure by Colonel Barré. The honorable Senator depreciated Colonel Barré very much by saying that that was the only speech that he had ever made, and that he took a similar cognomen to single-speech Hamilton.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I rise to a question of order, to know if, on a motion to go into executive session, the history of Massachusetts is in order?

Mr. DAVIS. I am not giving the history of Massachusetts.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Well, the history of Colonel Barré.

Mr. SUMNER. My history.

Mr. DAVIS. I am just stating—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois insist on his point of order?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will not insist upon it after calling the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to it.

Mr. DAVIS. I should have been through by this time if I had not been interrupted.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator is giving us an interesting account of Colonel Barré, and I hope he will be allowed to go on.

Mr. DAVIS. I shall be through in one moment. Colonel Barré was a frequent and most eloquent debater in the British Parliament during our revolutionary troubles. Lord North himself, at the instance of George III, tendered to him the position of Secretary of War, and he had the principle and the firmness to resist it. Now, I am going to refresh the Senator's knowledge of the history of his own State when this measure comes up.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well, sir.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, on this motion to go into executive session the honorable Senator appeals personally to me, saying that he presumes there is to be no discussion on this question, unless his friend from Wisconsin wants to make a "plea for slave-hunting." Sir, the Senator from Wisconsin bows to the Senator from Massachusetts. He is learned, learned beyond comparison. I sometimes almost fear that he is so learned he has lost all practical sense. When the Senator from Delaware expressly declares to the Senate that this question must be discussed and shall be discussed, that it cannot pass in an hour nor in a day, and when the Senator from Kentucky, with whom he ought certainly to be somewhat acquainted, and to have some practical sense of his powers of endurance when he comes to discuss this question of repealing the fugitive slave law, I think the honorable Senator from Massachusetts does great injustice in turning upon me and asking if I want to make a "plea for slave-hunting," and that there will be no speaking unless it is by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin. Sir, I have more practical knowledge of the state of affairs in this body, it seems to me, than the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, although I confess I have not one half the learning on these subjects.

Now, Mr. President, this is the state of affairs: it is now, as I have stated, four o'clock in the afternoon; the Senator from Delaware distinctly advises us that if this matter is taken up he is going to discuss it; others around him are to discuss it; the Senator from Kentucky says if it is taken up he shall discuss it; and I say to my honorable friend from Massachusetts that there are some gentlemen upon our side of the Chamber, although I am not one among them, who may desire to say something upon it. So far as my own personal convictions are concerned, I am of the opinion that upon the Constitution as it originally stood, independent of the construction made by courts and others, it did not belong to Congress at all to pass any laws upon this subject; but there are a great many gentlemen on this side of the Chamber who believe that under the Constitution as it stands, and by the decisions of the courts as they are made, they are under obligations and the obligations of their oaths, that there should be some kind of law to enforce that provision of the Constitution of the United States. Does the Senator from Massachusetts as a friend of those gentlemen, associated with them politically, desire to press them to the point of either voting what upon their oaths they have sworn they will not do, or to break with him? I think it is too late in the day, to-day at least, to begin the discussion of this question, and I therefore move that we now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SUMNER. The speech of the Senator belongs to the class of what may be called dilatory motions, or a speech to sustain a dilatory motion. He announces to us that there is to be an opposition to this bill, and mentions several Senators who menace speeches. If those speeches are to come, I say let us hear them and be done with them, because that bill from the House must be passed by Congress during this session. The Senator wishes to have it postponed; he wishes to set aside what the House has done; and he thinks that those who press the bill which now has the sanction of the House want practical sense. Sir, permit me to say to that Senator it is himself who wants practical sense. He fails to see the requirements of his country at this hour; he fails to see what is due to the civilization of the age; and in that respect he shows a want of practical sense in the highest degree. Sir, I do not wish to say anything personal to that Senator; but when he makes the suggestion that any one on this floor wants practical sense, I throw it back upon him when he stands up here to arrest a bill that has already passed the House of Representatives to sweep from the statute-book of the land a system of legislation which at this moment is an infamy. If there is anything which now brings upon our cause in foreign lands discredit, and makes it a burden to our friends, it is this very act which at this moment receives indirectly the support of the Senator from Wisconsin; and yet he rises here to taunt us for the want of practical sense. Sir, when he seeks to uphold even indirectly this act he wants practical patriotism as well as practical sense.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The bill which has just been reported by the Senator from New York, which is a continuation of the bill we had under discussion yesterday relative to drafting soldiers into the Army, is a practical measure, and will undoubtedly be called up at the very earliest moment. I think it must come up to-morrow morning at least; at all events it ought to come up; for if there be one practical thing which this country now demands, it is that we take care of our Army which is fighting the battles of our country. When the word comes to us, though it is not spoken on official authority, but comes from the mouths of wounded and bleeding men who are coming to us by hundreds telling us of our friends our brothers and our sons who are fighting this battle for the country, practical sense says to every Senator that to take care of this Army, to fill up this Army, to sustain the Army is the practical question.

The Senator charges me with opposition to his measure. He says that I desire to postpone it for the session, or to prevent all action upon it. I have not said any such thing nor done any such thing; but I say if we do not wish to waste the rest of this day in a discussion which will come to no result let this measure go by, and let us take up some measure which has practical importance before the body.

Mr. HALE. I am against taking up both these motions. I am against taking up the fugitive slave bill, and I am against going into executive session, and the reason is this: during the whole of this session I believe I have had but one single day to the interests of the Navy. There are several very important bills relating to the Navy on the Calendar, and I have received urgent and pressing letters from the Secretary of the Navy to call the attention of the Senate to them. I gave notice a day or two since that to-morrow at one o'clock I should ask the indulgence of the Senate to devote that day to the consideration of our naval affairs. I appreciate, I hope as highly as the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, what is due to the Army; but, sir, what would your Army be without a navy? Is it not the Navy that has been the right arm of the nation in all this war? Its demands are pressing, and it is suffering from the modesty of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate. I have overcome it so far that to-morrow I shall urge against Army bills, against fugitive slave bills, and against all other bills in the world that the Senate shall give some attention to the consideration of those bills which are from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SUMNER. We can finish this to-night.

Mr. HALE. You may finish it at any time; but to-morrow I shall, in season and out of season, every time I get the floor, urge upon the Senate what I think is due to the Navy.

Mr. POWELL. I am opposed to all the motions indicated. I have been trying for months to get up a bill to secure the freedom of elections to the people of this once free but now enslaved country; and I now notify the Senate that every time I can get the floor, in the morning hour or after the morning hour has expired, to the end of this session, I intend to move to take up that bill. All I want is, if the Senate will take it up, to vote upon it without saying one word upon it. I do not believe I shall ever get the floor when anybody else wants it for the purpose of taking up a bill; I am confident of that fact; but if they ever take up a bill I shall instantly move that that bill and all prior orders be postponed for the purpose of taking up my bill. I shall do it in the morning hour and every other time I can get. I tried—and I thought I was entitled to the floor before the Senator from Massachusetts made his motion, but I was so unfortunate as not to be recognized—to make the motion this evening. I think the Senate owe it to themselves to take up this bill, which has been debated some four days, and vote upon it. I do not see what good armies or navies are going to do us if our people have no freedom of elections; and I do know that in many parts of the country they have not had it. I hope that all these motions will be voted down, and then—I know it is not in order now—I shall move to postpone everything in order to take up the bill that I have indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope not.

Mr. HALE. I want to say in a single word why I am not willing to go into executive session. It is this: I am not ready to proceed with the consideration of the unfinished business which was under consideration in executive session when we adjourned yesterday.

Mr. WILSON. We have got but very little business in executive session to attend to, and I hope we shall take up the measure indicated by my colleague.

The motion was not agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 14, noes 20.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SUMNER. I suggest to the Senator to take the yeas and nays on my proposition.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am afraid the proposition will carry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the call for the yeas and nays withdrawn?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONNESS. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Is it in order to move to adjourn?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair it is.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then I move that the Senate adjourn. ["No!" "No!"] I withdraw the motion.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is manifest that we can accomplish but very little in ten minutes, and I therefore move that the Senate now take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope not. I hope we shall take the yeas and nays on the question now pending before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Illinois that the Senate yesterday ordered a recess to-day from half past four until seven o'clock.

Mr. TRUMBULL. But may we not take it before? By a mere vote of the Senate we fixed upon half past four o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion may be put.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask if it is in order while the call for the yeas and nays is pending on another question.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We have not commenced the call.

Mr. CONNESS. I know that. I ask that question of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, on reflection, is of opinion that the motion is not in order. A motion to take a recess is not like a motion to adjourn. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I want to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that I presume there will be no objection to his taking up the Senate bill which has been to a very large extent matured according to the judgment of the Senate, and I think that is all at this stage of the session he ought to ask of the Senate. The Senate has decided upon the motion of the Senator from Ohio to repeal the law of 1850 but not the act of 1793. That is the judgment of the Senate. The House of Representatives sends to us a bill repealing both laws. That brings up the whole discussion, and before we reach the point to which the Senate has arrived upon the other bill much of valuable time has to be occupied. Can the Senator from Massachusetts say that Senators after a full debate have given a vote which they are ready to take back? To say that is not respectful to the Senate. He has no right to presume that after a full discussion the Senate is going to take back a decision made a week ago. Then it is due to the Senate, in my judgment, for the Senator to insist upon the completion of the bill which he insisted the Senate should consider a week or two ago. I suggest to the Senator as a fair thing to the Senate, as fair to the rest of us, as due to the body in view of the approach of the adjournment, that we take up the bill which he has already demanded the attention of the Senate upon; and to that I presume there will be no hostility; but to take up this new bill, to go through with the discussion again, I think to that proposition he will find hostility all the time.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 25, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Howard, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Willey—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Collamer, Foster, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, McDougall, and Wright—7.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion prevails; the bill is before the Senate in Committee of the Whole, and will be read.

Mr. POWELL. I move to postpone the pending and all prior orders for the purpose of taking up Senate bill No. 37.

Mr. SUMNER. I rise to a question of order, whether that motion of the Senator is in order until the motion that has already been acted on by the Senate has been stated from the Chair and the bill read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion is in order to postpone it and take up something else.

Mr. SUMNER. But as I understand, the Senate ordered the taking up of this bill, and the Chair directed the Secretary to read the bill. My point of order is, can there be any interruption to the reading of the bill? Must not that be finished?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is not well taken; that before the bill is read the motion may be made.

Mr. POWELL. I ask for the yeas and nays on my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, but before concluding it was interrupted by

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time having arrived at which the Senate ordered a recess, it becomes necessary for the Chair to interrupt the call of the roll and to announce that the Senate will now take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Before the Chair makes the announcement, I wish to inquire whether there is a special order for to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is: the business relating to the District of Columbia.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator knows perfectly well that the unfinished business takes precedence.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is the very question I desire the Chair to decide, whether the order made for to-night does not exclude everything else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will decide that question of order when it arises.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to a question of order, if any business can be interposed during the call of the roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has announced the recess.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask unanimous consent—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is not in session.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven o'clock p. m.

LIMITATION OF DEBATE.

Mr. WADE. I wish to give notice that I shall move the following as an additional rule of the Senate on Thursday next:

Resolved, That during the remainder of the present session of Congress no Senator shall speak more than once on any one question before the Senate, nor shall such speech exceed ten minutes, without leave of the Senate expressly given, and when such leave is asked it shall be decided by the Senate without debate, and it shall be the duty of the President to see that this rule is strictly enforced.

SUSPENSION OF 26TH RULE.

Mr. DIXON. I offer the following resolution, not for the purpose of action now:

Resolved, That the 26th rule of the Senate be suspended during the present session of Congress, except so much thereof as provides that "a motion to suspend or concur in a joint resolution of the House to suspend the 16th and 17th joint rules or either of them shall always be in order, be immediately considered, and be decided without debate."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 255.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate had under consideration a motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. POWELL] to take up Senate bill No. 37, upon which the yeas and nays were being taken when the recess was announced.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to suspend all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the bill I have indicated.

Mr. POMEROY. Must not the call be proceeded with? I submit whether that motion is in order while the call is being proceeded with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion can only be entertained by unanimous consent, the Senate being in the execution of the order for the call of the yeas and nays. If there be no objection, the motion of the Senator from Iowa will be entertained.

Mr. HOWARD. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the call will proceed.

Mr. POWELL. If the Senator from Iowa wishes to proceed with District business I will withdraw the call for the yeas and nays, if I have the power to do so.

Mr. BROWN. What are the yeas and nays on The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. POWELL. On my motion to take up the bill to prevent military interference with elections; but I will withdraw the call in order to allow the Senator from Iowa to proceed with the District of Columbia business.

Mr. HOWARD. I understood that we were taking the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SUMNER. Oh, no; I beg your pardon; it was the motion of the Senator from Kentucky. Let me explain to my friend. My motion had been carried, and the Secretary at the desk was about reading the bill when the Senator from Kentucky interposed another motion to proceed with another bill, and on that he asked for the yeas and nays; and if that is withdrawn, I take it, it leaves the question of the fugitive slave bill as the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would leave that before the Senate.

Mr. SUMNER. It would leave that bill before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Iowa is to postpone all prior business and proceed with the bill indicated by him.

Mr. SUMNER. So I understand.

Mr. WILKINSON. What was the unfinished business?

Mr. GRIMES. The motion of the Senator from Kentucky to take up the bill in regard to military interference with elections. The Senator from Kentucky has withdrawn that motion, and now I suppose it is proper for me to make a motion to suspend all prior orders.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the call for the yeas and nays can be withdrawn. The Chair hears none. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Kentucky as withdrawing his motion at the same time?

Mr. POWELL. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question will be on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. SUMNER. On that I wish merely to remark that I am aware the Senator from Iowa has come here to-night prepared to proceed with several bills in regard to which he has let us know in advance his purpose, and I know the importance of some of them at least to this District. I do not wish to interfere with his arrangements, although he will understand that I cannot let slip the opportunity of pressing the bill under consideration except with great reluctance and with the understanding that it shall be proceeded with at the earliest possible moment; if possible, that it shall be taken up again this evening.

Mr. POWELL. I wish to make one single remark. The Senator from Massachusetts spoke of having an understanding that we should take up his bill next. I wish it to be understood that we are no parties to anything of that kind. This evening was set apart for the Senator from Iowa. He gave notice yesterday that he desired to call up the business relating to the District of Columbia this evening. I do not wish to encroach upon his time, and with that view I withdrew my motion on which I had called for the yeas and nays.

GUARDIAN SOCIETY.

The motion of Mr. GRIMES was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 255) granting certain privileges to the Guardian Society of the District of Columbia. It proposes to grant the use and occupancy of all that part of reservation numbered seventeen, in the city of Washington, lying west of Second street and east of the easterly line of New Jersey avenue, in perpetuity to the Guardian Society of the District of Columbia, a corporation duly established by act of Congress approved July 1, 1862; but those premises are to be used and occupied exclusively for the proper and legitimate purposes and objects of said Guardian Society; and the Guardian Society are within three years from and after the approval of this act to expend in the erection of buildings upon the premises, suitable for a house of industry and a widows' and orphans' home, the sum of $20,000 or more.

All permanent buildings and structures upon the premises are to be erected and made in accordance with plans and specifications approved in writing and subscribed by the Commissioner of Public Buildings.

The rates of expenses which are or shall hereafter be adopted by the Guardian Society, or the trustees thereof, for the support and maintenance of the several classes of persons described in the eleventh section of their act of incorporation, are to be approved in writing and subscribed by a majority of the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

So much of the fixtures and materials in the temporary military erections in the city of Washington, being no longer in use and needful for military purposes, are granted to the Guardian Society, subject to the approval and upon the order of the Secretary of War, for such temporary erections upon the grounds as may be needful while permanent buildings and fences are being erected.

The Committee on the District of Columbia reported the bill with amendments. The first amendment was in section one, lines six and seven, to strike out the words "in perpetuity," and to insert, "for the period of thirty-three years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was at the end of the first section to insert "otherwise the said use be forfeited to the United States;" so that it will read:

And provided further, That said Guardian Society shall, within three years from and after the approval of this act, expend in the erection of buildings upon said premises, suitable for a house of industry and a widows' and orphans' home, the sum of $20,000, or more, otherwise the said use be forfeited to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the fourth section of the bill, as follows:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That so much of the fixtures and materials in the temporary military erections in the city of Washington, being no longer in use and needful for military purposes, are hereby granted to said Guardian Society, subject to the approval and upon the order of the Secretary of War, for such temporary erections upon said grounds as may be needful while permanent buildings and fences are being erected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; and the amendments were concurred in and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

ORPHANS' COURT PROCEDESSES.

On motion of Mr. GRIMES, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 434) to authorize the bailiff of the orphans' court, in the county of Washington and District of Columbia, to serve processes issued by said court, and for other purposes. It provides that the bailiff of the orphans' court, in the county of Washington and District of Columbia, or such person as may be deputed by the register of wills in the county, shall have authority to serve all processes issued by the court, and shall be entitled to a fee of fifty cents for serving citations, and a fee of one dollar for serving attachments and making returns of the same to the court; and there is to be paid to the register of wills for the county, for recording wills and other instruments, fifteen cents per folio of one hundred words.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD.

On motion of Mr. GRIMES, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 522) to amend the charter of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company. It provides that the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company shall have the right to construct a horse railway on any public highway in the county of Washington, commencing at the present terminus of either of their roads, first having obtained the consent of the levy court therefor; and may charge a fare not exceeding ten cents for each and every passenger conveyed upon any road constructed in the county of Washington outside of the limits of the cities of Washington and Georgetown; but nothing herein contained is to be construed so as to prevent Congress from regulating the fare on either of the roads, or altering or amending the original charter of the company, or this amendment thereto, according to the provisions of the original charter.

The Committee on the District of Columbia reported the bill with amendments. The amendments were in line four, to strike out the words "construct a" and to insert "extend their;" in line six, after the word "roads," to insert "extending north from Seventh and Fourteenth streets, and from the Capitol square to Maryland avenue, and extending north from the eastern extremity of that avenue;" and in line eight to strike out the words "a fare not exceeding ten cents," and to insert "an additional fare of five cents for every three miles on each branch so extended;" so that the bill will read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company shall have the right to extend their horse railway on any public highway in the county of Washington, commencing at the present terminus of either of their roads, extending north from Seventh and Fourteenth streets, and from the Capitol square to Maryland avenue, and extending north from the eastern extremity of that avenue, first having obtained the consent of the levy court therefor; and may charge an additional fare of five cents for every three miles on each branch so extended for each and every passenger conveyed upon any road constructed in said county of Washington outside of the limits of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, &c.

The amendments were agreed to.

COLLECTION OF DIRECT TAX.

Mr. GRIMES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 321) to authorize the corporation of Washington to levy and collect the direct tax imposed by the act approved August 5, 1861; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GRIMES. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the bill now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to authorize the corporation of the city of Washington to assess and collect a tax not exceeding the rate of fifteen cents on every $100 of the value of all real and personal property in the city, and on any and all subjects of taxation as made and returned by the board of assessors of the city, to enable the corporation to pay to the Government of the United States the tax imposed by the act approved August 5, 1861. Any surplus that may accrue from the imposition of this tax is to be deposited and applied to the use of the general fund of the city of Washington.

Mr. GRIMES. Perhaps I ought to say in apology for asking the Senate to consider a bill that has not been under the consideration of any committee of the Senate, that this bill was brought to me by the committee appointed by the city authorities to attend to the District of Columbia business since the Senate convened in the morning. They also brought with them the report made by the committee on finance of one branch of the city authorities, and a resolution instructing the committee to attempt to procure the passage of the bill. It only provides that the city authorities may have power to levy and collect money enough to discharge the direct tax that was levied by Congress upon the different States and Territories and the District by the act of 1861, and if there shall be any surplus over and above that collected under this bill it shall go into the common treasury of the city.

Mr. HALE. I should like to know where is the necessity for this bill. The Government has provided its own machinery for collecting the taxes assessed by it in all other cities, and where is the necessity of devolving on the city of Washington the authority to collect this United States tax? Why can they not collect it as they do in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and other cities?

Mr. GRIMES. I think in every State in the Union, probably, the State has assumed the direct tax. It is much cheaper to the States to collect the tax themselves through their own regular tax-gatherers than it is to have any United States officials appointed for that purpose. This is simply to authorize the city authorities of the city of Washington to do what is done in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Iowa, and elsewhere. They have not paid this tax. It is due from them to the Government. As the amount they are now authorized to levy and collect is limited, this bill gives them authority to levy an additional tax in order to discharge their obligations to the Federal Government. I think the bill ought to pass, and I have the authority of the city council who have passed resolutions and instructed their committee to apply to Congress to procure its passage.

Mr. POWELL. If I understood the reading of the bill from the desk, I think it authorizes the city authorities to levy this tax upon the land.

Mr. MORRILL. Oh, no; "all subjects of taxation."

Mr. POWELL. Then I have no objection to it. I thought it was only upon the land.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD.

On motion of Mr. GRIMES, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 495) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the charter of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company." The Committee on the District of Columbia reported the bill with various amendments. The first amendment was in section one, line eleven, after the word "shall" to insert the words "be permitted;" so that the section will read:

That from and after the passage of this act the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company shall, during all sessions of Congress, run one car each way every two minutes between the hours of ten o'clock in the morning and six o'clock in the afternoon on their main line of railway from the eastern front of the Capitol and from Seventeenth street, passing between said points at a rate of speed not exceeding seven and not less than five miles per hour: Provided, That on Sundays the said company shall be permitted to run cars at the same intervals of time as prescribed in the original law for the other days of the week.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to strike out the second section, as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said railroad company shall keep in good repair and in clean condition the flagstones or crosswalks leading to, upon, and over their tracks at the crossings of the several streets which intersect their railroad, removing therefrom snow and ice, as well as mud, dirt, or other annoyance; and shall further, whenever necessary to render such crossings dry and convenient, raise or elevate the same sufficiently for that purpose, and shall adjust the adjoining pavement so as to make it convenient for carriages to pass said crossings.

Mr. GRIMES. I am authorized by a majority of the Committee on the District of Columbia to say that their views have undergone a change in regard to the propriety of striking out that section since the bill was reported to the Senate. If it remains the provisions of this bill will stand uniform with the provisions of the other bills that have been passed. It simply requires the company to keep the walks at the intersections of the streets clean, so that a person can go from the sidewalks to the car without getting muddy. I therefore hope that the Senate will not concur in the recommendation of the committee to strike out that section.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was to strike out the fifth section, as follows:

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the route of said railroad from the east front of the Capitol square to Pennsylvania avenue east shall be in lieu of the route prescribed by the act of incorporation as follows, viz: commencing at the west front of the Capitol square, and running thence in a northeasterly direction across the public space to the intersection of B street with New Jersey avenue, at which point one branch of the road shall go down New Jersey avenue to the south side of C street, where it shall terminate, while the main road shall pass along B street to Capitol street north, thence along that street to A street north, thence along A street north to First street east, thence along First street east to Pennsylvania avenue east, then intersecting with the road as it now runs. And the track now running through the eastern park of the Capitol and along A street south shall be taken up and discontinued by the 1st day of May, 1865; and when such change is being made in said route, and after the same shall be completed, the cars required by this act to be run between Seventeenth street and the east front of the Capitol shall run from Seventeenth street to the aforesaid intersection of Delaware avenue and A street north.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I am not in favor of that change of the route of the road.

Mr. GRIMES. The committee propose to strike out the section and let the route stand as it is.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the sixth section, as follows:

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of said company, within twenty days from and after the passage of this act, to have prepared tickets for passage on their cars, and to keep them at their office for sale by the package of twenty-five, or over, at the rate of twenty-five for the dollar, each of which tickets shall entitle the holder to one passage in any car of the company for any distance upon their main line of railway, or upon either of the branches thereof or between the termini of either of the said branches to any point upon said railway or branches.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me a very idle and very foolish thing to require this company to make such a report as is required by the fourth section of this bill. I never saw such a report, and never heard of such a report being made by a railroad or any other kind of company. It requires them to make a report upon thirty-one different items, showing among other things the "number and cost of cars"—you might as well have said of each car—the "number of horses or mules used in the service of the road and cost;" "cost of harnesses and other appointments;" "cost of tools and fixtures, including furniture of offices," and so on. I will ask the Senator from Iowa what is the object of that section.

Mr. GRIMES. This is a House bill; it was sent to us from the other branch of Congress; and I understand that fourth section is a transcript of the provision of the Revised Statutes of New York. I cannot say that it is so, for I have never examined the subject, but I understand that to be the fact.

Mr. SHERMAN. They are also required to report the amount of salaries paid to officers, the amount paid to employes, the amount paid for reconstruction of and repairs to track, the amount paid for taxes, &c. It seems to me it is perfectly idle, a piece of folly, to require a little corporation like this, a street railroad, to make such a report. This is an unreasonable requirement. They are required now by their charter to make a detailed report of all that is material. I move to strike out the fourth section of the bill.

Mr. GRIMES. It is very possible that the advantages of making such a detailed report may not be perceived at this time, but the experience of other States, I think, has demonstrated the propriety of having such reports made. We have the entire legislation on the subject of this company. We have reserved the power to change, alter, modify, or repeal their charter, and if such a report as is required by this bill shall be properly made to us it may enlighten the understanding of future Congresses as to what their duty may be. It can be of no particular harm to the company, for they are required to show nothing other than what their books, if properly kept, will show; and I think, even if it be in relation to a small company here, it is well for us to set a good example to the other States in their legislation in regard to corporations of this description. I understand, however, that in this case the example was set to us by the State of New York, and this section was introduced by a gentleman from New York, a member of the Committee for the District of Columbia in the House of Representatives, and who, I understand, is rather intimately connected with these railroads.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator really thinks it is worth while for this corporation to make such a report as is here indicated I have no objection.

Mr. GRIMES. I can say furthermore that the president of this company was before us with the bill as it now stands, and he interposed not the slightest objection to this section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio withdraw his motion?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg leave to offer an amendment to come in at the end of the first section:

And provided further, That there shall be no exclusion of any person from any car on account of color.

I will merely make one remark. Congress has already adopted this proviso with regard to the two other railroads in the District, one running through F street, and the other between here and Alexandria. It ought to make the roads equal in this respect if there were no other reason in favor of the provision; but I borrow an idea from my friend the Senator from Iowa, who has just told the Senate that it is important in bills here that we should set a good example to the whole country; and I think in this provision we shall set a good example to every city throughout the country where there are horse railroads.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I saw an illustration the other day of this "no exclusion from the cars on account of color." It is not often that I ride in them; but it happened the other morning in coming to the Senate I took a seat in one of them. The car was very much crowded. Stopping at a crossing some ladies came into the car. I got up and gave my seat to a lady. Half a dozen other gentlemen got up and gave their seats to ladies. But in one corner sat one of these beautiful free men of African descent, the only negro in the car, too dignified to get up and give his seat to a white lady. That is one of the beautiful advantages resulting from this doctrine of "no exclusion on account of color," a practical illustration of their fitness to ride in cars with white people. I think such an example ought certainly to influence the Senate to vote against any exclusion on account of color.

Mr. WILLEY. Is it in order to amend the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) It is in order.

Mr. WILLEY. I do not know that what I desire to propose is proper as an amendment to the amendment or not. I propose to strike out the proviso to that section as it now stands entirely. It reads:

Provided, That on Sundays the said company shall be permitted to run cars at the same intervals of time as prescribed in the original law for the other days of the week.

If it is proper to move as an amendment to the amendment to strike out that proviso I will make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator that that is not now in order, as it is not properly an amendment to the amendment moved by the Senator from Massachusetts. The question will first be taken on the amendment moved by the Senator from Massachusetts, after which the amendment suggested by the Senator will be in order as an independent proposition.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I suggest to the Chair that the motion made by the Senator from West Virginia is in order, but the vote would have to be taken first on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts and then on the motion to strike out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the amendment suggested by the Senator from West Virginia does not affect in any way the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, the question will first be taken on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I had occasion to express my views on this subject to the Senate some time ago, and I do not intend to allude to them again. They are now legislating in respect to a corporation already in existence, that corporation having constructed its work by the expenditure of its money. There is reserved in the original act of incorporation the right to amend, but of course the results that were contemplated by that provision are such as will make the work a more successful one and will not materially take away from the value of the property that has been invested in it.

The Senator from Massachusetts says that this provision is to be found in the charters of the other two companies within this District, and therefore we ought to make them all equal. When persons took stock in the new companies they knew of this provision and they invested their money with a view to it; but the men who have invested in this corporation and whose money is now in the rails, cars, and horses did not do it with the view and expectation of legislation on the part of Congress that would depreciate the value of the property. I think there is no question that this legislation will make this property of less value; and I do not think it ought to be adopted upon general principles. I do not think in amending a charter that we ought materially to depreciate the investments men have made upon the faith of former legislation.

Mr. SUMNER. I will simply remark that I think the value of the stock cannot be affected at all; but even suppose it were the fact, the Senator will see that it will only be on an equality with the other roads.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am told that we have clogged the other roads so that substantially the persons who proposed to build them will not now build them. That is the trouble with all these roads. It seems to me we ought to encourage the building of as many roads in Washington as possible by granting them liberal charters. Every one is willing to pay five cents to go anywhere. We ought to encourage them by liberal charters, without inserting in them provisions that will excite public clamor or public hostility. This thing of tinkering constantly with these little charters, simply because somebody is dissatisfied and has not had his way about it, is one of the most disgusting kinds of legislation. If the people who have embarked in this enterprise make money out of it they are entitled to it; if they suffer losses we never pass appropriations to make them good; and therefore when we pass a charter, although we reserve the power to change it at our pleasure, we do it for the public good. It is not for the purpose of restraining them, limiting them, or depriving them of that which they believe to be their property, or of embarrassing them in their operations, but simply that we may have it in our power to control them, prevent them doing any great public wrong. Therefore I am and always have been opposed to any change or modification of charters unless a company attempts to do that which is not fairly justified or within the purview of its powers. I think, therefore, that all these provisions, especially the fourth section of this bill, requiring a report upon thirty-one different items, and this amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, all tend to embarrass the owners of this property. I think the amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. SUMNER. I agree substantially with what the Senator has said; but he very aptly remarks that we are to consult the public good. Now, I submit the public good is consulted by removing all restrictions from the use of the road. If the Senator wants more passengers why impose a restriction?

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is the very question; is there any restriction in the charter?

Mr. SUMNER. No; but practically they make a restriction. We know that, for we have had this question up before.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The company will not make a restriction against their interest. That is the question made by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not know that. Human prejudice is very powerful, the Senator knows well, and they act according to the prejudices of this place. I do not wish, however, to be betrayed into any discussion on that question. It is perfectly understood.

Mr. WILLEY. I shall vote against this amendment, and I desire to state very succinctly the grounds. This is a matter that we cannot regulate by law, practically. It is a matter to be regulated by the interests of the company, the convenience of the people, and especially the tastes of the people.

But, sir, that is not the principal ground upon which I shall vote against this amendment. There was an inquiry introduced in the earlier part of the session on this very topic, and it was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The committee after due deliberation reported that the law as it now stands does not make any distinction against persons on account of their color; that they have the same right under the original charter of the company to go into any car as white persons; that there was no distinction in their right to ride in the cars and enjoy all the privileges of that mode of passage and to all the remedies for refusal. Senators deliberately decided that such was the true interpretation of the original charter; and now after a vote of the Senate, after a decision of the question, upon examination in the full form by reference to a committee and report and discussion and vote, why is it necessary to be tacking on to bills an amendment that simply amounts to nothing at all, a provision that has been decided by the Senate not to be necessary? Upon that ground, that the Senate may not stultify itself, I shall vote against this amendment.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from West Virginia forgets that after the report of the committee to which he refers the Senate did fasten upon a bill this very provision, and therefore, according to the assertion of the Senator, did stultify itself. I presume the Senator voted against the proposition, for he would not have acted naturally if he had not; and I presume he will now vote against this proposition, for he would not act naturally if he did not.

But the Senator argues that now in point of law colored persons may enter into any car. He knows that in point of fact they are excluded. It is not enough to say they have a remedy at law. They are poor; they are humble; they have not the means to obtain it; and it belongs to us, as Senators, it belongs to the Senator from West Virginia who has the privilege of a seat on this floor, and who from his own observation must know that they are excluded from the cars, when, as he says, in point of law they ought not to be excluded—I say it belongs to us all, and it belongs to that Senator especially, to aid in securing to them their rights. Those rights cannot be effectually secured to them except by such a provision as I now move.

Mr. WILLEY. I do not know whether I am acting more "naturally" in voting against a proposition of this character: I do not know that I have any "natural" inclination to ride in cars with negroes. I suppose that is the "natural" inclination of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts. If it is, he has a perfect privilege, as this Senate has decided, to indulge the inclination of his nature under the law as it now exists. There is nothing in the world to prevent it. He may follow out his natural instincts in that respect and I can follow mine under the law as it now is. He can ride with negroes if he sees proper; so may I; but if I see proper not to do so I shall follow my natural instincts while he follows his.

Mr. WILSON. I shall vote for this amendment, and my own observation in these cars convinces me that justice, not to say decency, requires that I should do so. Some weeks ago I rode to the Capitol in one of these cars. On the front part of the car, standing with the driver, were, I think, five clergymen of the Methodist Episcopal church, dressed like gentlemen and behaving like gentlemen. These clergymen were riding with the driver on the front platform, and inside the car were two drunken loafers conducting and behaving themselves so badly that the conductor threatened to turn them out. I thought that sight was a fair illustration of this exclusion of colored persons from the railway cars. These were men of intelligence and of character, riding on the outside of the car, and a couple of ragged, drunken loafers inside, cursing and swearing, and the conductor threatening to turn them out of the car. You may often see in these cars every sort of person beside you, and well dressed colored people, women too, and on cold and rainy days, thrust out on the front platform with the driver.

We are told that this company has no right to make this distinction. We do not believe they have any such right; but still, in defiance of the law and in defiance of decency, they persevere in this practice. I rode down with some members of the Senate last night in a car, and out on the front part with the driver were respectable, well-dressed colored persons, of both sexes. I shall therefore vote for this amendment, and let this company understand that they are acting not only in defiance of their charter, but in defiance of the will of Congress.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I recollect some years ago when southern influences prevailed in this Chamber, and the legislation of the country was in favor of slavery, and what is called the slave power dominated here, that they sometimes passed laws and put into them provisions that were offensive, for the very purpose, as it seemed to me, of offending the people of the North who did not believe in the divinity of slavery or in the propriety of its spread. I recollect the fugitive slave law of 1850 seemed to have been drawn in that spirit, as if it was drawn by a person not simply to secure the return of slaves who escaped from their masters, but to make it as odious as it was possible to make it to every anti-slavery man in the country. I thought that that legislation was wicked; that it was calculated to alienate one portion of the people from another, to alienate different sections of the country, and produce bad feeling. I believe it did have that effect. I recollect that one of the provisions of that odious law, as I regarded it, was that it should be the duty of every man to assist in catching fugitive slaves, imposing it as a duty on every man to hunt after slaves and return them to their masters—the imposition of an act upon an anti-slavery man which the slave-masters would not do in the South. Slave-masters would not be guilty of going out and hunting after runaway negroes; and yet that law had that odious feature in it, making it the duty of every man in a free State, who wanted to have nothing to do with slavery, to be active and vigilant in catching the runaway negroes. There was no efficacy in that provision. Although the law said it should be the duty of every man to aid in recapturing slaves, no penalty was attached to the requirement; if a man did not exert himself to catch a runaway slave he was subjected to no penalties, and the provision could only have been inserted in the law because it was distasteful to the anti-slavery men of the country.

Now, sir, another party is in power. I am glad that a party is in power which does not believe in the divinity of slavery. But, sir, let us not fall into the same error that the advocates of slavery fell into. It is admitted here by the Senator who moves this amendment that the law now is that there can be no distinction as to color in regard to passengers. It is admitted that the law now is that this company has no authority to exclude a person on account of color. The Senator from Massachusetts admits that to be the law.

Mr. SUMNER. I think so.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then why do you want to repeat it? So as to make it offensive to somebody? So as to make it distasteful to somebody?

Mr. SUMNER. Because in point of fact—

Mr. TRUMBULL. Because they will not obey the law. Will they obey it any more when you put it into the charter? Does that alter it?

Mr. SUMNER. Yes.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Not at all in a legal point of view. Need I say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the legal rights of the colored man are no greater when this provision is adopted than if it is left out? He has his same remedy with the provision out as he has with it in. Why put it there? It is offensive to some persons, offensive to a great many. I myself have seen within ten days the very state of things stated here to-night by the Senator from Delaware. I was in one of the cars which was tolerably full, and among others sat a negro upon one of the seats. A number of ladies came in. I for one got up and gave my seat to a lady; but that negro sat there and held his seat when man after man got up and gave their seats to the ladies that came in. I am not complaining that that was so. He had just as good a right to retain his seat as anybody else, just as good a right, I admit, as the Senator from Massachusetts—

Mr. SUMNER. Why refer to it?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I refer to it so that you may know that negroes do ride in the cars. It may have been agreeable to the tastes of the Senator from Massachusetts, he may have liked to see it; but I confess I should have preferred to see the negro give his seat to some of those ladies. It may have suited him better that he should not; he had a right to retain his seat and he did retain it.

This provision proposed to be put into this bill can only be put in because it is distasteful to somebody to enact it into a law. I am willing to go for any measure that can accomplish good; but the right of the negro to ride in the cars upon this city railroad is not affected in the least by the provision offered by the Senator from Massachusetts; and he knows it, he admits it. His right is as perfect and complete without it as with it, just as complete as was the right of the slave-owner to reclaim his slave without putting in the law that odious feature declaring it to be the duty of the Senator from Massachusetts and myself to aid and be vigilant in recapturing the negro slave who was escaping from his master. That did not give any additional strength to that law; it was an odious feature; it ought never to have been inserted in it. This provision can give no additional right to the negro. It is not to remove a restriction.

Sir, the country is being misled by these provisions. Senators speak of them as removing a restriction. I want it to be known that there is no restriction; I want it to be understood by the Senate and the country that under the law as it is the negro has the same right to ride in these cars as the white man, and this amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts has no binding efficacy whatever; it is only out of the abundance of his zeal to put upon the law a provision without a meaning that he offers it here and presses it time and again upon the Senate. I call upon the Senator from Massachusetts to tell me any right secured to the colored man by this provision that he does not have without it. I deny that there is any.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois in former days was a sincere, intelligent, devoted supporter of the Wilmot Proviso. As I understand that proviso it was simply a prohibition of slavery in the Territories. Now, I know not whether the Senator held, as I did, that even without that proviso, by a strict interpretation of the Constitution, slavery could not go into the Territories. I presume he did; most of us did; for myself, I held it resolutely and sincerely. I always regarded the Wilmot Proviso, if the Constitution were properly interpreted, as mere surplusage, as a mere work of supererogation; and yet I never hesitated, in season and out of season, to vindicate it; and I believe the Senator never hesitated in season and out of season to do the same. I remember that my earliest admiration of that Senator was founded on his brave and able vindication of that very prohibition of slavery in the Territories. He was not then deterred from supporting a humane provision because without it, according to his interpretation of the Constitution, slavery could not enter the Territories. Nor was he deterred because the provision might be offensive to certain persons of weak nerves. No, sir; bravely he maintained the principle that slavery must be prohibited. And on the same principle (if I may pass from great things to things which are smaller, I admit, but yet which are not small) I insist that this proviso also should be adopted.

Our experience shows that even if the law is as the Senator from Illinois now expounds it, it is not so accepted by this railroad corporation. The Senator knows as well as I do that colored persons are daily excluded from the cars. Some of the victims of this outrage will compare in respectability of conduct with any whom I now have the honor of addressing. My colleague alluded to colored clergymen that he saw thrust out only the other day. We know of an officer of the United States, wearing the national uniform, thrust out, and the Senator from Illinois will allow all these things to be done and not interfere to prohibit it. He tells us that it is contrary to law, and yet he allows it to proceed under the very eyes of the Senate. Sir, I insist that the Senate when such abuses occur shall show that it has power and is willing to exercise it on the side of justice.

But the Senator reminds us that in old times the fugitive slave act was passed here and made especially offensive, and he pleads with us now not to imitate that bad example by introducing anything that may be offensive. I do not like the comparison of the Senator. Does he not know well that everything introduced into the fugitive slave bill was in the interest of slavery and contrary to every sentiment of humanity, and that it was intended to give offense? The proposition now moved is just in the opposite sense; it is to sustain the principles of humanity, to uphold human rights and human equality, and with no purpose of offense. The illustration of the Senator, therefore, is entirely out of place. True it is that in those old days we were offended, and it was a part of the hardships to which we were exposed. As in the days which preceded our Revolution the British officers said they would cram the stamps down the throats of the American people, so in the same malignant spirit slavery was in those days crammed down the throats of the Senate and of the country. There was nothing but brutality then. Slavery is bad in all its features, but one of its odious features is the revolting insensibility to every sentiment of delicacy and humanity which it created in its supporters.

But, sir, the Senator from Illinois knows very well that it is in a very different spirit that propositions like the present are now brought forward. It is always in the interest of human rights; and I need not say to that Senator, so far as I am concerned, with no other purpose except that which is apparent in the proposition itself; with no idea of offending any human being; on the contrary, with a desire to avoid offense to every person if I possibly can. Sir, it is in that spirit that I wish to do my duty on this floor. I would never give offense to any one here if I knew how to avoid it, and I never would give offense to any one abroad if I knew how to avoid it, while I faithfully discharged my public duty.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I shall occupy but a moment. It will be observed that the Senator from Massachusetts has not met the view which I suggested. He does not profess to meet the point of my statement, which was that his proposition does not alter the law at all. He does not contend that it alters the law, that the colored person will have any right under his amendment if it shall be adopted which he has not without that amendment. But he says his amendments are offered in the interests of freedom. Sir, I do not pretend to impugn the Senator's motives. He is zealous in the cause of freedom. He has reason to be so. I am glad that he is so. It is a holy cause; it is entitled to the zeal of us all. But even in a good cause, and in a holy cause, if you can accomplish your object without doing anything that shall excite the hostility or enmity of those who disagree with you, that is surely the better way to do it. Let us win if we can these devotees of slavery. If there is a prejudice here in regard to color let us not make angry those who have that prejudice unless we can gain something to freedom by it. That is the point. Inasmuch as there is no restriction to be removed by the amendment, no object to be accomplished by it, inasmuch as the right of the colored person is the same with or without it, I would not insist upon it, and I shall therefore with the view which I entertain vote against it for the reason that it is wholly inoperative and does not alter in the least the right of the colored person.

Mr. WILSON. I certainly have no objection to the Senator from Illinois voting against this amendment; but I do object to his argument made in support of his vote. That Senator rises and reminds the Senate of the manner in which the slave-masters conducted themselves during the years when they were pressing their aggressive policy on the country, and he then turns round and charges some of us with pursuing the same offensive course. I do not like the comparison, and I do not thank him for making it. It is a strange thing to hear that Senator, in this Chamber, make such an odious comparison. For thirty years the legislation of the country was controlled by the men who are now in rebellion, and by word and by deed they offended the sentiments of our common humanity; and now the Senator from Illinois rises in his place to-night and refers to their words and their acts, and then makes a comparison—a comparison which, if there is anything in it, is a censure of some of us who believe it right always to protect and defend the helpless.

The Senator tells us that the colored people have a legal right to ride in these cars now. We know it; nobody doubts it; but this company into which we breathed the breath of life outrages the rights of twenty-five thousand colored people in this District in our presence in defiance of our opinions. They may act according to their prejudices; and I would not offend their prejudices unless it were necessary to protect the rights of others. I tell the Senator from Illinois that I care far more for the rights of the humblest black child that treads the soil of the District of Columbia than I do for the prejudices of this corporation and its friends and patrons. The rights of the humblest colored man in the capital of this Christian nation are dearer to me than the commendations or the thanks of all persons in the city of Washington who sanction this violation of the rights of a race. I give this vote not to offend this corporation, not to offend anybody in the District of Columbia, but to protect the rights of the poor and the lowly, trodden under the heel of power. In giving this vote I must confess that I do not like to be compared to the bold, arrogant, domineering slave-masters who ruled this country for thirty years and are now endeavoring to destroy it, men whose every voice and every vote was ever against human rights, against liberal legislation, and against their country.

I have seen the time, and so have you, sir, [Mr. POMEROY in the chair,] for you were then a citizen of my State, when railroad corporations undertook to have what we called a Jim Crow car, and to put colored men into it, and to exclude them from riding in other cars. The aroused and enlightened public sentiment of our State righted that wrong. You and I, sir, have seen the time when colored children were attempted to be excluded from some of the common schools, where they had as much right by law as your child or mine. They appealed to the courts and appealed to the Legislature, and the Legislature vindicated their rights, and those rights are now acknowledged and undisputed. We had to fight that battle, and we had the same caution then against encountering the prejudices of certain persons. Sir, I do not desire to go against prejudices; certainly I do not desire to do it when I have to encounter the current of public sentiment as we have here in this case, and generally have in the country on this and kindred questions, but rights are to be protected and defended. I trust we shall protect rights, if we do it over prejudices and over interests, until every man in this country is fully protected in all the rights that belong to beings made in the image of God. Let the free man of this race be permitted to run the race of life, to make of himself all that God intended he should make when He breathed into him the breath of life.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] has told us very truly of the changes that have been going on in the condition of colored persons in his own section of the country and in others, so that they have finally got that they are now permitted to enjoy the advantages of education in common schools and to be transported in railroad cars as white people are. Now, Mr. President, so far as this railroad is concerned that is now under consideration they have all these advantages. It is not denied that a colored man can ride in the cars; he has the same legal right to ride in one of these cars in the District of Columbia that he has to ride in a car in Massachusetts. So says the chairman of our Judiciary Committee, [Mr. TRUMBULL;] so says the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. JOHNSON;] so says the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. WILLEY;] such was the unanimous decision of the Committee on the District of Columbia. Now, what does the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] propose to do? Reëact simply what is already the law; what he himself admits to be the law?

Mr. SUMNER. Which is drawn into doubt by the conduct of the corporation.

Mr. GRIMES. Is drawn into doubt by the conduct of nobody, so far as I know. I can tell the Senator that I have seen colored men riding in colored cars, and I have seen them riding in cars devoted ostensibly to white people, and I have ridden in each with them.

Mr. FOSTER. I rode up to-night beside a black woman in a white car.

Mr. GRIMES. It depends very much on the character of the conductors. I have been insulted by some of these conductors myself. The company is unfortunate sometimes in selecting a brute as a conductor. But now I want to know this: are we, every time that there shall be a bill introduced into the Senate in relation to the Georgetown and Washington Railroad Company, to have this amendment repeated, and must we reëact every session such a provision as this?

Mr. SUMNER. Just do it now. This is the last one, as I understand. We have done it in regard to the F street road; we have done it in regard to the road between here and Alexandria. It only remains to do it on this line, and then the work will be finished. The Senator need not be afraid; do not be anxious.

Mr. GRIMES. If it is here now, as it is admitted that it is, if such is the law to-night, what is the necessity for repeating it? At the time we passed the bill in relation to the Alexandria railroad and the F street road, it may have been important to include such a provision, because the other provisions of those bills may not have entitled colored men to ride. I do not remember at this moment what were the provisions of either of those bills, but it may be possible that in order to confer this privilege on colored people it was necessary to adopt the amendment which the Senator from Massachusetts proposed to those bills. But the Senator does not claim that it is necessary to do it now to give any legal validity to the rights of colored men; and if it is necessary to-day to repeat what is already in the law, why will it not be necessary to do it every time any bill shall come up in relation to this subject?

Mr. SUMNER. The simple answer to the Senator is, that their rights now, in the absence of any express provision, are merely a matter of inference, a deduction from what I regard as unquestionable principles of law; but it seems that this corporation chooses to outrage the community and the Senate, which has so often declared its opinion on this question of law, by the exclusion of colored persons. I know that there are cars in which colored persons are admitted; and the Senator from Connecticut announces that he had the satisfaction of riding in one of them to-night.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say the "satisfaction." [Laughter.]

Mr. SUMNER. Very well, he did so; it was in that way that he came to the Senate to-night. But then one example does not prove a rule, the Senator from Iowa knows very well; "one rose does not make a summer;" and we all know that there are cars from which they are excluded, and the Senator must be too familiar with the feelings and the sentiments of that oppressed race in this District not to know that they feel it keenly. Several of them have called upon me to explain the grievance as they feel it. I have told them that they might have a legal remedy; they have said that it was vain for them to attempt to get it; some of them had not the means to employ lawyers; and the Senator knows very well that a legal remedy is indefinitely postponed.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to have the Senator answer me one question. Suppose we pass this amendment, and put it into the law, and the company goes on and does exactly as it has been doing, excluding these men, what are these colored men going to do? Have they not got to go to law then? Will they not be compelled to enforce their rights in court? Will they not be compelled to employ lawyers? If that be so, what advantage will it be to them to adopt this amendment under the present condition of things?

Mr. SUMNER. I will answer right there. Because the company will not dare to continue this outrage in the face and eyes of a positive provision of statute. That is the answer.

Mr. GRIMES. It is just as positive now as it will be after this amendment shall be adopted. There is not any man within the sound of my voice who doubts the perfect right of these colored men to ride in the cars. As to whether the company outrages the public sentiment of the people of this District, that is a question about which there probably would be a diversity of sentiment. But so far as it affects the rights of the colored men, everybody admits that there is no necessity for any such provision. Now let me tell the Senate how I think the colored men are more outraged than in any other way; and that is by the interference of white men with the cars devoted to the exclusive use of colored people. I do not believe that the colored people are desirous—I speak now of the most intelligent and of the best of them—I do not believe that at this time, situated as they are, mixed up and mingled, as the most intelligent and best educated and worthiest of them are, with the contrabands and those who have recently been freed, they think it is to their interest that they should be indiscriminately permitted to ride in these cars; but they should be permitted to occupy undisturbed the cars which the company have dedicated to their use, and that right they are not permitted to enjoy which they ought to be permitted to enjoy, and the company ought, I think, to exclude entirely white people from these cars and not force the colored people out of the cars that are set apart for them.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, there is nothing so important in legislation as symmetry. I always like to see the symmetry of legislation preserved. The other day there was a bill before the Senate to establish a Freedmen's Bureau; I offered an amendment to that bill, the words of which were the words of the Constitution, which is the charter of the liberties of the people of this country. Objection was raised to my amendment by those representing the majority in this body, that it was simply a reaffirmance of that which already existed in the Constitution, and they voted it down because it was useless legislation. They said that the people of this country had the right already to be free in their persons and property, and free from arrest without due process of law, and that my amendment, therefore, was useless. It was further said that if the President of the United States, or those intrusted with the administration of affairs, violated those constitutional rights now, they would violate them after we affirmed them by law. I asked the Senate, notwithstanding that was true, to reaffirm them; and I find my own argument repeated here to-night. I held then that if the Senate of the United States affirmed them by act of Congress, it would be a notification to the President that he must not infract those rights in the future. It was all treated as naught; my amendment was voted down. Now, sir, let there be a little consistency in legislation. We are told by the Senators who favor this amendment to this charter that the negroes have a right to ride in the cars already, and yet some of them say, "Place it in the charter over again." "It is there already," they say; but still they insist that it shall go in the charter again; and we shall see, I am apprehensive, a beautiful specimen of consistency in this Chamber by voting down a reaffirmance of the rights of white men and reaffirming in this charter what they say are the rights of negroes. Poor, helpless, and despised inferior race of white men, you have very little interest in this Government; you are not worth consideration in the legislation of the country; but let your superior, Sambo's interests come in question, and you will find the most tender solicitude in his behalf. It is good sometimes to stir up men's pure minds by way of remembrance; and I have referred to the action of the Senate the other day in reference to my amendment which they voted down upon the very ground that the rights which it sought to affirm were secured already by national charter, by the Constitution, that they may see the consistency of their action when they vote now to reaffirm what they say is the right of the negro already. What a pity it is there is not somebody to lamplblack white men so that their rights could be secured.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I did not design to say another word on this question and would not except for the fact that it seems to be assumed by many Senators that it cannot be that a railroad company can make a regulation like that which has been adopted by this corporation. I understand this corporation to have decided, and carried out that decision, to provide cars for white persons and other cars for colored persons. I understand Senators to say that a regulation of that kind is not consistent with the charter; that such a regulation cannot legally be made. In that opinion I am unable to concur. I think it is such a regulation as a corporation may make, and I think the power to make such a regulation is very fully sustained by numerous decisions of courts of high respectability. How freight shall be carried, how passengers shall be carried, upon what terms, and in what cars, and upon what trains, must be decided by the corporation itself. Of course the power to make these regulations is limited by the public interest; a corporation must make its police regulations in accordance with what is fairly the public interest and the public wants. The courts of course would decide, when any one regulation becomes involved, whether that regulation is fairly within the powers of the corporation in view of the public interest. In some localities I can conceive that a company cannot well make a regulation of this sort; where there are but very few colored persons, never enough to fill a car, it would be very difficult there to make a regulation of the kind, assigning some cars to colored persons and the rest to white persons; but in the city of Washington it is very different; the negro population here is very large. The negro population, contrabands and all, I suppose is nearly as large now as the white population; and it is very convenient for the company to provide a set of cars for the colored people and another set of cars for the white people. Who shall complain of this? Let the cars that are given to the colored people, as is now the regulation, be exclusively for them without the right on the part of the white people to crowd them out; and on the other hand let the white people have their cars for their own exclusive accommodation. Shall a white man or white lady complain that they are not allowed to ride in the colored people's cars, that they are not allowed to exclude the colored people by crowding them from their own cars? Everybody would say that a white person would not make that complaint. On the other hand, then, shall the colored person complain that he is not allowed to crowd white men and white women out of the cars that according to a reasonable regulation have been assigned to the white people? I have no doubt that the courts would hold that in the District of Columbia, in view of the character of the population in this city, such a regulation is a wise one and within the scope of the power given to the corporation by the charter. Is not this a good regulation for the colored people? If there are cars given to the colored people sufficient for their accommodation, they ought to be content. None but an impudent negro, after that, would wish to crowd into the white men's car. A sensitive negro, such as has been described by the Senator from Massachusetts, well dressed and behaving himself well, with gentlemanly feelings, would want to be among his own people, would not want to come into a car where he was not desired. It seems to me this regulation is a proper one and such as under the law the corporation might establish. I do not desire to occupy any time about this, but would like to have a vote once more on it and see what is the view of the Senate.

Mr. SUMNER. The argument of the Senator from Indiana is a complete answer to the Senator from Illinois and to the Senator from Iowa. Both of those Senators have very ably insisted that the proposition now introduced is unnecessary. The Senator from Indiana shows that in his opinion it is necessary. According to his able statement, in the absence of any such amendment as that I now propose the colored people here in Washington will have no right in the cars. That is the argument of the able Senator from Indiana. He, in my opinion, is not correct in law; but then I give it only as my opinion; other Senators may give it as their opinion: the opinion of the Senator from Indiana is entitled to as much consideration as that of any of us; therefore there is a doubt on the question; it is to meet that doubt and to place the rights of these people beyond all question that I make this proposition.

Mr. POWELL. I had not intended to say a word upon this subject; but it strikes me that the legislation now proposed is most singular. I do not suppose there is a Senator in this Chamber who does not know that persons without regard to color have a legal right to ride in the coaches of this railway company. Why then the necessity of the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts? He might just as well propose to put into the bill that persons shall not be excluded because they are white, or because they are yellow, because they are Indians as because they are black. I have listened to the Senator a great deal on this subject of the negro; and the speech he has made to-night discloses to me one fact, and that is that he is not so very specially regardful of the interests of the poor negro, and I will state the reason by and by why I think so.

I was about to remark that the law as it now stands provides for all classes of people; but I agree with the Senator from Indiana that it is within the power, and I believe it to be the duty, of the managers of this railway to set apart certain cars for the accommodation of certain classes of people. For instance, I believe it would be perfectly legitimate for this railway company to set apart and dedicate certain cars for the use of ladies, and gentlemen who escort ladies, and to keep gentlemen who have no ladies in charge from those cars. I think it would be perfectly proper for them to set apart certain cars for colored persons and keep white men from them. The company are not compelled to let every man ride in every railway coach. All that the company as common carriers by law are bound to do is to furnish accommodations on their line to those who present themselves as travelers. Every one of us, I dare say, has often been met on attempting to enter a particular coach on a railway train, by some official who says "You cannot enter here, sir, unless you have ladies in charge," and if you have no ladies with you you are shown into another coach. What man of sense ever complained of that regulation? But gentlemen say they have seen rowdies and ruffians, drunkards and loafers inside of these cars, while a negro was on the outside. The conductor of such a car, if he had done his duty, should have put such people out of the car. Drunken loafers ought not to be permitted to ride in the cars where orderly and sober well-behaved people are. Every man is bound to behave himself when he enters a public vehicle. I think it would be wise and proper for this corporation to set apart cars for different classes of persons. If they choose to do it, I can see no harm in it to anybody, but it would be really an accommodation for all. But, sir, it is proposed to provide that they shall not exclude a man from a car because he is black. It would be just as sensible to put in an amendment that there shall be no privileges denied to a man because he is white. I think the remarks which have been made by the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Iowa fully meet the case.

But, sir, the Senator from Massachusetts tells us that his object is to prevent a down-trodden race from being oppressed. I suppose every man in the Senate Chamber understands the motive of the Senator from Massachusetts. He told us a moment ago that some of these persons came to him and advised him about this matter, and he said to them that the courts were open, and they told him they were too poor to prosecute lawsuits. Now, sir, if the Senator is such a vehement friend of this down-trodden race, as he is a lawyer, why did he not undertake their case, and propose to argue it for them before the courts? That would have indicated that he really felt for the negro. No, sir, he does not do that, but he comes here and tries to put amendments on bills that give the negroes not a whit more privilege than they have now. The Senator shows his devotion to this down-trodden race here and only in words. Really if a down-trodden man of my race came to me with such a case and I had made half the clamor for my race that the Senator has made for the negro, I would have said to him, "My dear sir, I will see that you have redress in the courts; my profession is that of the law; and without fee or reward, except that consciousness which a man always feels in rendering a good action, I will advocate your rights, I will prosecute your case." If the Senator had done that he could have an adjudication of the courts on the question, which would have settled the right. He does not do that, however, and he comes here with his amendments.

Sir, we here all understand this matter. We are all politicians or have been. The Senator's staple is this fanatical idea. He wants this little hobby to ride through Massachusetts on, and to feed a fanatical flame there. He can fool nobody here with this kind of thing. Take the negro out of the Senator's vocabulary, and rich as it is it would be exceedingly barren. Take that staple from him and he would have nothing for the next canvass. I hope he will retire with the laurels he has won in this field. He has assisted bad men in other quarters to bring about a revolution that has drenched the whole land in blood, and clothed millions of our people in mourning. He ought to be satisfied with the results of his labors without still trying to fan the flame further. When one of those down-trodden persons of whom the Senator speaks with such sympathy is encroached upon in his rights, let him tell him that he will be his champion in the courts without any reward if he has not the means to pay. That would look as if he was in earnest.

Suppose you put this amendment in the bill, and a negro after that should be excluded; as the Senator from Iowa says, he would have to go to the courts. Why does not the Senator from Massachusetts the next time one of his Ethiopian friends comes to complain to him on this subject that he has been wronged and outraged, volunteer to bring an action in the courts and teach this heartless corporation that they must treat these persons properly, and not deny them any of their legal rights?

The Senator seems to think that it is an exceedingly gratification and satisfaction to have the privilege of riding in a car with a negro. He spoke of the remark of my friend from Connecticut as if it was a matter of exceeding satisfaction that he had been riding in a railway coach with a negro this evening. Why, sir, to-day I have ridden between the Capitol and Eighth street three different times, and one car had three negroes in, and another had two negroes, and the third had one; but I did not feel any great satisfaction in it. I felt no very great repugnance about it. The negroes behaved themselves; I did not molest them, and they did not molest me. I am willing, however, to do one thing, and as I suppose the Senator from Massachusetts has accomplished all he desires—he has made a display here to gratify the fanatical feeling of his constituents at home—I am willing to provide that he shall not be excluded from associating with the negroes in railway cars or elsewhere. I thought at one time of moving such an amendment, but on reflection I came to the conclusion that it would look as if it were personal, and therefore I shall not offer it; but if the Senator from Massachusetts will draw up an amendment providing that this railroad company shall pass no rule or regulation that will prohibit him from riding in the cars set apart for colored persons, I will vote for it with a great deal of pleasure, if it will afford him any satisfaction; but I do not think he ought to require other people to have negroes thrust in on them, provided the railroad company chooses to set apart other cars for them.

I have never made any fuss about this matter. When I take my place in a public conveyance, I abide the rules and regulations of the company. If they have certain coaches into which I cannot enter because I have not a lady with me, I say nothing about it. I go to the place assigned to me, and there I try to behave myself as becomes a modest gentleman. If they adopt such a regulation here, and have cars marked "For colored people," I should not put my foot in them, and I never have done so, because I should feel as if I were poaching on the manor of the negro. If they had a car marked "Exclusively for ladies and gentlemen accompanying them," I would not put my foot in it unless I was escorting a lady. I am satisfied to take that coach which the company has set apart for me. I think that is all you ought to require of any of these companies, and if as common carriers they do not do their duty, every person aggrieved has his right of action against them.

I think the Senate ought to vote down this amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. I suppose he has derived all the benefit from it that he wanted. He has indicated to his fanatical brethren, those people who meet in free-love societies, the old ladies, and the sensation preachers, and those who live on fanaticism, that he has offered it. As he has accomplished that purpose, let us now legislate as becomes sensible Senators, and let us make a law that excludes nobody and that mentions nobody in particular. The Senator might just as well, if a bill were pending to fix a penalty for an infraction of the laws of the United States, propose to amend it by saying that nobody should be excluded from the penalty unless he were a white man, or a black man, or a red man. It would be just as sensible. I want the laws general. I am not in favor of legislating exclusively for one man over another. If I were to do it, I confess that the pride I have in my race, believing them to be superior to the black race, would induce me to legislate in favor of my own race and color; but this bill as it now stands gives preference to none, and I see no reason why we should take up the time of the Senate eternally with squabbling over the Senator's amendments introducing the negro into every wood-pile that comes along.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Colamer, Conness, Dixon, Foot, Howard, Morgan, Pomeroy, Sumner, Wade, and Wilson—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Davis, Foster, Grimes, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Powell, Riddle, Sautsbury, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Willey—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Doolittle, Fessenden, Hale, Harding, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Hicks, Howe, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Ramsey, Richardson, Sprague, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Wright—19.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLEY. I move to amend the first section of the bill by striking out the following proviso:

Provided, That on Sundays the said company shall be permitted to run cars at the same intervals of time as prescribed in the original law for the other days of the week.

I suppose, sir, it is hardly necessary to have such a provision in the bill even for those who desire to have the cars running on the Sabbath day. I noticed that on the last Sabbath the cars were running on the road quite regularly all day. It is apparent, therefore, that there must be no authority to prohibit them from running now under the laws as they exist. The bill as it came from the House of Representatives made it obligatory on the company to do so, whether they desire to do so or not. The Senate committee reported an amendment giving the company the privilege of running the cars on the Sabbath day if they see proper to do so. Now, I hope that if the company run the cars on the Sabbath day they will do so of their own mere motion, without the authority of Congress. There seems to me to be no public necessity, that is no national necessity or very general necessity, for the service of these cars on the Sabbath day. They carry no mails; they render no service to the Government. If they are of any use on the Sabbath day they are simply of private utility.

I believe that this provision is against the Christian sentiment of the city; I believe it is against the Christian sentiment of the country. I know it is directly in the face of the express word of God. And inasmuch as the cars may run upon the Sabbath day without any legislation, without any sanction direct or indirect on the part of Congress, I do not wish to see the Senate of the United States placing themselves in a position that will be in direct violation of the plain mandates of the Scriptures, and, as I think, will be contrary to the Christian sentiment of the country, and will, in point of fact, accomplish no result whatever. The cars now run without permission of Congress; they run without any mandate of the law. Why, then, should we do a thing so unnecessary and to me so abhorrent to the spirit of the age, to Christianity, to the Bible, and I believe to the Christian sentiment of the city?

Mr. GRIMES. The bill as it was passed by the House of Representatives contained the word "required" in this proviso where the word "permitted" now stands; in other words, the company was required to run the cars on Sunday. The Committee on the District of Columbia proposed to strike out the word "required" and to substitute therefor the word "permitted," and that amendment has been agreed to. I think the Senator from West Virginia is mistaken in supposing that the company has the authority to run cars on Sunday unless by some permission granted by Congress or else in consequence of some change that has recently been made in a city ordinance. I am not very well informed upon the subject, but I have understood that when the company was organized it desired and sought an occasion to run the cars on Sunday, but was restrained by the city authorities from doing so. They commenced running last Sunday in anticipation of the passage of this law, after the bill was passed by the House of Representatives; and it may be possible that the city authorities have changed their ordinance on the subject within a short time; but I know that the president of the company told me at the commencement of the winter that the reason he did not run the cars on Sunday was because he was restrained by the city authorities.

While I am up I will state the reasons for this permission. By another bill which we have passed we have authorized this company to construct a suburban railroad running out as far as the limits of the District of Columbia extend. If this city grows, as every man who is familiar with the country around us and with the condition of public affairs, I think, expects that it must continue to grow, a large population will in a short time gather out on the lines of the various railroads. They will be removed from church. It is exceedingly desirable that they should have some facilities for getting to church. It is even found necessary, I believe, in what some people call the puritanical city of Boston, to run the cars on Sunday to enable the population to go to church. I am told that is the reason which is assigned. It was thought by those who secured the passage of this bill in the other House, as I understand, that as the population extended it would be desirable that the people should have the facilities of coming to the town, to get into it and out of it.

I confess for myself that I am not one of those who would exclude the working man of the city from the privilege of getting into a street car and going out where he can see green fields and green trees on the Sabbath day. I believe that a large portion of the community might worship their Maker quite as acceptably in positions of that kind—in recreations, if you see fit to call them so, relaxations I would call them from the labors of the week—as they would be being cooped up here on the hot pavements of the city. As a sanitary measure I should be willing to permit this company, if they believe it to be their interest and the community demand it, to run their cars on Sunday.

Mr. JOHNSON. A portion of the argument mentioned by the honorable member from West Virginia, if well founded, would with me and with the Senate no doubt be conclusive; and that is that such a permission as we propose to give to this company is against the law of God. I do not exactly know what part of the law of God as revealed to us the honorable member refers to. He has cited no particular passage either from the Old or the New Testament. But one thing I know, or at least I think I know, that it is the duty of every man to go to church and worship God according to his own conscience; and if in the particular locality in which he happens to be he cannot get to church without extraneous help, there ought to be some mode in which he would be able to get to church. My friend from West Virginia, I presume, has lived in the country a great part of his life, as I have during a portion of mine; and in the part of Maryland where I lived perhaps the churches were more numerous than in the portion of Virginia where he lived; but in Maryland in the country the churches are sometimes five, six, or seven miles away from the residence of a great many of the worshippers, and they get to church by calling upon their grooms to bring out their horses, harness them, put them in their coaches, and making their drivers drive them to church. That, I suppose, is not against the law of God; and yet the coachman is made to labor in one sense on the Sabbath; the beasts are made to labor on the Sabbath; everybody who is concerned in enabling the party to get to church labors on the Sabbath; but I never heard it intimated by anybody, not even by a clergyman, that there was anything inconsistent with any prohibition or any principle to be found in the Old or New Testament in a practice of this description; on the contrary, I have always seen that the clergyman liked to have his church as full as he could get it, without reference to the manner in which the people got there.

Now, in this city, which was called in former times, and is still, a city of magnificent distances, the churches are almost as far apart as they are in the country; and if the weather is very hot or very cold, if it rains or if it snows, no man or woman can get to church without some extraneous aid; to walk might be impossible. I submit, therefore, that my friend from West Virginia is perhaps placing too literal an interpretation upon some text in Scripture, perhaps inconsistent with the spirit. It is difficult for us to understand always these scriptural injunctions. We may catch and comprehend their general spirit, and make our conduct conform to such spirit, but a literal construction of many of the injunctions which are to be found in the Old and New Testaments, as I am sure everybody will admit, would be inconsistent with the purpose which the Maker of the world intended to effect; and, with the Senator from Iowa, (although I am perhaps just as much religiously inclined as he is,) I confess that I do not believe—and I hope that my want of belief is justifiable—there is any scriptural injunction which compels the laboring man, who sweats his twelve or fourteen hours a day at hard work to support his wife and his children, from being with his wife and his children permitted to go out where he can breathe the free and wholesome air of heaven unaffected by the noise and the dirt, and where he can worship his God in that tabernacle which He has furnished—the earth and the sky which covers the earth—forgetting the cares of the week, meditating upon the duties which he owes to his Maker, and determining as far as he may be able to resist the temptations which the life of the week presents. And it is not only good for his health in that particular, his moral and his religious health, it is good for his physical condition. I speak, Mr. President, perhaps with some experience, although not a laboring man in one sense, but in another sense in past years a very hard and incessant laboring man. I have found when Saturday night came, and I had the promise of a Sunday with the privilege of going out unaffected by the cares of office and the engagements of my profession, I was the better physically as well as morally. If it can be done without violating any of the injunctions of Scripture, as I think it can with due deference to the more complete knowledge that my friend from West Virginia may have on the subject, I want that the laboring men of this city who are far apart from each other may be afforded an opportunity of enjoying social intercourse with each other if they think proper to be in the city on Sunday; and they cannot do it in a city of these distances without some such aid as this; and I want them to be permitted to enjoy the pleasures of the country, the green fields of which the honorable member from Iowa has spoken, the silence which is found to reign there, an opportunity to turn their thoughts inward and to vow that thereafter, if they have failed in the past, they will devote themselves to the duty which they owe to their fellow-men and to their God.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I did not have the privilege of hearing the theological part of the argument of the Senator from Maryland; it seemed to be addressed to my friend from West Virginia, and I do not know what impression or what conviction it worked on his mind. The physical part of the argument seemed to be addressed to this side of the House, and I heard as much of that as I could. Now, Mr. President, it was poetical also. The "green fields" I think have done their full share in the argument for the legislation that is asked for, and the "meditation" that is induced in these Sunday rides and the inward contemplation "turning the thoughts inward" I think would have been more in conformity to the truth if the Senator had said it was devoted to turning lager beer, instead of thoughts, inwardly [laughter] on that day.

But, Mr. President, I will tell you just exactly where I think this matter ought to be left. It ought to be with the people of this city. We are the legislators for the District of Columbia, and I understand that the cars are or have been heretofore restrained from running on Sunday by the regulations of the city authorities. Am I right?

Mr. GRIMES. I have applied to the mayor since this debate to learn what the facts are in regard to it. He tells me that he decided that some old ordinance which declared that vehicles should not be permitted to run on the Sabbath for hire included the cars.

Mr. HALE. The same authority which made that ordinance can repeal it, and if that city ordinance is in force the railroad cars refrain from running on Sunday in Washington because the city authorities, the representatives of that class who go out on Sunday into the green fields for such reflection as the Senator from Maryland has so poetically set forth, have determined that it is improper and inexpedient.

Sir, I appeal now to my New England friends, men who, if they have no religion, have some pretense to it, [laughter,] and I ask them how they will stand at home if they go home and say that the city of Washington, outside of the Puritan influences of New England, with only such grace as they could attain to under the teachings they had had, had prohibited the cars from running on Sunday, and the Puritans of New England had come here and compelled them to allow traveling upon their railroads on Sunday. For one, I am not willing to occupy that position. I am willing to leave this matter where it has been left, and where I think it ought to be, and that is, with the city authorities.

Mr. President, while I am up let me say that I think our whole legislative action in regard to this District is wrong. We treat it more like a conquered province than like a community of freemen entitled to the privileges of the American Constitution; and one of the special objects of partisan plunder for every Administration that comes into power here is to bestow the local offices of this city upon their own favorites. We upset the judiciary here since we have been in power and established a new set of judges, and where did they come from? The gentlemen who were appointed were warm personal and political friends of mine, men whom I highly esteem, Judge Olin, of Troy, New York, Judge Carter, of Ohio, &c. The President went to Ohio and New York to get judges for the District of Columbia. There are no gentlemen in the world whom I esteem higher than I do them; but if I had been present—I was not; I was absent from sickness—I should have voted against their confirmation, because I thought it was based upon a wrong principle; and so it has been throughout. The President came here and brought his marshal for the District from Illinois, and a pretty bird he proved, too; and the Vice President brought with him a Navy agent, a very respectable gentleman; and so it is constantly. Why not act on the principle that the city of Washington is composed of men that understand their own interests, and certainly on these local matters?

For that reason I am for striking out this proviso; and, sir, I thank the Senator from West Virginia for the speech that he has made. I think it is the first speech I ever heard made in the many that I have heard in the Senate by a man who openly, boldly, without equivocation or apology, recognized the law of God and the obligations of Christian morality as binding upon him in his legislative capacity. We may have all felt it very deeply and keenly, but we have been so modest and so sensitive upon it that I declare the avowal of the Senator from West Virginia is the first time I ever recollect to have heard on the floor of the Senate the declaration of the obligation of the law of God and of Christian morality as binding upon a man in his legislative capacity. I hope, sir, that the proviso will be stricken out.

Mr. WILLEY. Mr. President, I am exceedingly indebted to my friend from New Hampshire for answering the poetical part of the argument of the honorable Senator from Maryland; but the honorable Senator from Maryland seemed to question whether my recollection of the good Book was not a little at fault, and he seemed to think that it might be hard to find within it any express injunction requiring us to observe the Sabbath day. Well, sir, it has been a good while since I learned my catechism, and the honorable Senator from Maryland, with the distinction of years upon his head, has been longer away from it, I suppose, than I have. And yet, sir, I trusted that even down to the utmost span of man's life, to threescore years and ten, no one in this Christian country would ever forget the lesson his mother taught him when he repeated after her, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," and not merely that general injunction, but specifying that no man-servant or maid-servant, or any person or thing within the control of the individual, should be allowed to labor on that day.

But then it is necessary in the estimation of the honorable Senator that we should have these cars on the streets upon the Sabbath day in order to get to church. That is to say, in order to obey one injunction of the Scriptures, hardly as plainly taught, I think, in the Bible, we are required to ignore another; in order to get to church we must have two horses and a railroad car, with a driver and a conductor, rattling along the public highway; and not only that, but so eager seems the honorable Senator, as well as my friend from Iowa, to go to church on the Sabbath day, that they must go every five minutes in the day from sunrise to sundown, for that is the requisition of this bill.

Mr. GRIMES. Not "requisition;" the Senator uses a wrong word.

Mr. WILLEY. The bill requires the cars to run as often on Sunday as is prescribed in the original law for the other days of the week.

Mr. GRIMES. Not "requisition;" they are permitted to do that.

Mr. WILLEY. If the Senator will modify this proviso so that the cars shall only run about church hours, I shall make no objection to it. If he will modify it so as to keep from the cars persons who have no church-going propensities whatever I shall not object.

Mr. GRIMES. Perhaps the Senator would want it modified so as to have the people go to his particular church. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLEY. No, sir; I should be very glad if the honorable Senator would attend any church at all, no matter what. [Laughter.] But, Mr. President, it is seen, it is apparent, it is evident that the object of keeping these cars on the streets has no reference whatever to the accommodation of people going to church, and that the practical result of keeping them upon the streets on the Sabbath day will be to encourage vice, to encourage dissipation, to encourage drunkenness, to encourage the support of the lager beer saloons, as has been intimated here to-night, without accomplishing any practical benefit, for there is no transportation on that day of parties to their business or anything of that kind; it is simply for pleasure; and nine tenths of those who use them will seek their pleasure, not in those intellectual, poetical, sublimated enjoyments so beautifully described by the honorable Senator from Maryland, by going to the end of the railroad and then seeking the shade of the forest where they may be alone, but in places of dissipation and vice and carousal and folly. I hope it will be left to the proper authorities of this city to determine whether they shall have these cars running or not. I hope at any rate that the Congress of the United States will not give even a quasi assent or authority to what it seems to me is a palpable violation of the spirit of Christianity as well as the very letter of the Bible.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, there are two very good documents which have been referred to in this debate, the Constitution of the United States and the Bible, which I think it is hardly necessary to refer to in a debate arising in this body. We have so persistently and continuously violated the former, the Constitution, that if its authors were alive they certainly would not suppose we had much regard for it, and I do not apprehend that we shall respect the Author of the Bible by simply striking out this proviso.

Mr. FOSTER. I shall vote for striking out this proviso, having, I hope, as much regard for the interests of the laboring men as those who insist that to have it in will be a benefit to them. Why, sir, look at the very large class of laboring men connected with these cars. There is a driver and a conductor on each car. There are a large number of persons employed at the stables where the horses are kept to attend to them, and at various points along the road where there are elevations of the surface, where it is necessary to have additional power, there are men or boys stationed with additional horses to put them on. Under these circumstances we see that there are, to speak within bounds, some hundreds of men and boys connected with these cars. The number may possibly reach even to a thousand. I do not know how many there are, but certainly a very large number.

Now, sir, ought we not to have some reference to letting these men have a Sunday, a day of rest? Why are they not entitled to one day's rest in a week as well as other men? If we allow these cars to run, the consequence is that not one of these men, not one of these boys can have any more Sunday than the heathen have. They work on from early morning until late at night, for almost by daylight some of these cars begin to run and they run until after midnight, and this without intermission day or night continuously. Now, sir, I say that as legislators it is our duty to do something for the benefit of these men, to give them at least one day's rest in seven, and we ought not out of any fanciful regard to somebody else to say that we will compel these men to go on and labor without repose and without rest.

It may be said we do not compel them to do it; but do we not, sir? These men are employed by this corporation, and it is not going to employ two sets of hands. If they are employed they will have to labor day after day without intermission. But even if that were not so, and other men were employed on Sunday, who would those other men be? Laboring men; men who have labored six days at some other employment, and they would have no Sabbath. So it comes to the same thing. The amount of it is that we compel hundreds of men to labor without interruption for some fancied good to somebody else.

A word also in regard to the animals ought not, I think, to be entirely superfluous. "The merciful man is merciful to his beast." Why ought the poor animals that drag these cars be compelled to labor without one day, one night of rest? I say it is but fair, it is but liberal, it is but just to allow these men and these animals one day's rest in seven. More can be accomplished, as it is believed, by men and by animals, even men and animals who labor, by giving them their appropriate rest. The Sabbath, although a divine institution, is made for man, and man can accomplish most by observing it—most of all kinds of labor. We gain nothing in mental or in physical labor by going on incessantly—we lose by it. It is a merciful institution that we rest at least one seventh of the time. I trust, Mr. President, that the proviso will be stricken out.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, this bill came to the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate with a provision requiring the corporation to run the cars on the Sabbath. It has been modified by the committee so as to permit them to run on the Sabbath. Now it is said that this is a breach of the law of God, that it violates the commandment requiring us to regard the Sabbath day. Suppose we carry that principle a little further: shall we carry it so far as to say that all locomotion on Sunday is a violation of the law of God? May not a man walk for any other purpose or in any other direction than to a church? If he may walk to a church, may he not ride to a church, and if he may ride, how? May he not ride as well in a car as in a carriage? Sir, is all locomotion or travel either on foot or in carriages absolutely a violation of the law of God for any other purpose than to go to church, and will anybody hold that his heavenly Father may not be as well worshipped in traveling in some other direction than to church? I suppose that in the abstract we would none of us adopt such a conclusion. It is lawful, I suppose, according to the good Book, to go to church on foot or in a carriage, or otherwise, as may be most convenient; and I do not know any dogma any where now of the Christian church which prohibits persons from all sorts of innocent exercise in the open air on the Sabbath, either riding or walking.

Now, how is it with this mode of communication, so common in the large cities? The street cars have become now almost the universal mode of traveling for the great bulk of the people in the cities. My honorable friend from New Hampshire starts the question that some of us may find that we are extremely unpopular when we go North and are told that we have voted to permit the people of Washington to run these cars on the Sabbath. Puritan New England, he thinks, will be reproached by an example of that sort. Does not my honorable friend know that the cars run very constantly in the city of Boston on the Sabbath day? I happened to spend a Sabbath there a short time since, and it was the busiest day almost, so far as the cars were concerned, that I saw; but there was perfect order; there were less carriages, less hacks, less coaches, but a thousand fold more people enjoying the Sabbath, going to church and coming from it in that way than I had noticed before. It is tolerated there; so it is in the city of Portland, and in the city of New York, and in the city of Brooklyn; so that I do not see any danger of violating the public sense by what we propose to permit, not require, here.

My honorable friend from New Hampshire suggests the propriety of leaving this matter to the corporationists in the District. How will that work? This road extends from Georgetown on the west beyond the navy-yard, running through, I believe, the limits of three municipal jurisdictions. Suppose the people of Georgetown say, "You may run the cars on the Sabbath," and on the east end the people say the same thing, but the people of Washington say "No;" how then? You must have a concurrent vote of the three jurisdictions; so that there seems to be a necessity for Congress to settle the question. I suggest, therefore, that a reference to the people of these cities is not quite practicable. The committee did not suppose they were doing more than following what has come to be very common now in almost all the cities. The Christian sense of the most Christian communities in the land has come to believe that there is no more harm in people riding in street cars on the Sabbath than riding in the public or private coaches, which are of course unrestricted. I shall therefore vote with the committee to retain the clause in the bill.

Mr. CONNESS. I believe the Senator from Maine is not right when he implies that you may ride in a carriage here on the Sabbath day. You cannot do that under the city ordinances, I believe, except it be to attend a funeral. Being in want of a carriage one day I made that discovery.

Mr. MORRILL. I hardly know what the ordinances are. I know what the fact is.

Mr. CONNESS. I suppose the ordinances are about as irregularly observed as the streets are cleansed. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. I think it is too late in the day to enforce pious practices, such as those recommended by the honorable Senator from New Hampshire. I had the privilege of sitting directly under the Senator while he was exhorting the Senate, and I was very glad to find that he had such a degree of regard and respect for the Scriptures, and for the acknowledgment of the Deity. I did not, however, see the appositeness of his argument. I see no rule proper to be observed violated by permitting these vehicles (I will call them such) to be run on the Sabbath day or on Sunday. I hope it will be ordered to be done by this bill. I think it would be a step backwards to have it otherwise. They are certainly the most acceptable part of the city's accommodations, if I am competent to judge. I hope the amendment will not be sustained.

Mr. WILLEY called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Collamer, Dixon, Foot, Foster, Hale, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Willey, and Wilson—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Carlile, Conness, Cowan, Grimes, Johnson, Morrill, Powell, Riddle, Sherman, Sumner, Trumbull, and Wade—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Chandler, Davis, Doolittle, Fessenden, Harding, Harlan, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Nesmith, Richardson, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Wright—20.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to strike out the fourth section of the bill which requires the company annually on and after January, 1865, to make a return embracing a very large number of items.

Mr. GRIMES. I will inform the Senator that all the items set forth in that section were thoroughly examined by the president and superintendent of the company, and are entirely satisfactory to them, and the committee see no reason why they should not render this account.

Mr. JOHNSON. The honorable member says it is entirely satisfactory to the company. Does he know that positively?

Mr. GRIMES. The president and superintendent of the company were before the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senate can judge whether it is a compulsory satisfaction or a satisfaction independent of any compulsion. There are thirty-five items which are made the subjects of this report. One of them—it is but an example—the seventeenth, is "cost of tools and fixtures, including furniture of offices;" and another, the twenty-eighth, is "amount paid for reconstruction of and repairs to track, turnouts, and other structures;" and another, the twenty-sixth, "amount paid to employes, with the number each of clerks, conductors, drivers, station-keepers, and laborers." What is all that for? I never knew such an exaction to be made of any company. I do not see any good to come from it. I move to strike out the section.

Mr. GRIMES. I trust that will not be done; no public interest will be promoted by it.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, "Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?"

Mr. BUCKALEW. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment striking out the clause permitting the cars to run on Sunday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be excepted.

The other amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on concurring in the amendment excepted at the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania, the amendment striking out the proviso relative to running the cars on Sunday.

Mr. HALE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Dixon, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Hale, Harlan, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Willey, and Wilson—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Conness, Cowan, Grimes, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Morrill, Powell, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sumner, Trumbull, and Wade—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Carlile, Chandler, Collamer, Davis, Fessenden, Harding, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Howard, Howe, McDougall, Nesmith, Richardson, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Wright—19.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SUMNER. I now move again the amendment which I offered in committee:

Provided, That there shall be no exclusion of any person from any car on account of color.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 17, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Conness, Dixon, Foot, Hale, Harlan, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Sumner, Wade, and Wilson—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Doolittle, Foster, Grimes, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Powell, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Willey—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Collamer, Davis, Fessenden, Harding, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Howard, McDougall, Nesmith, Richardson, Wilkinson, and Wright—16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read the third time. The bill was read the third time.

Mr. SAULSBURY called for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill, and they were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I intend to vote against this bill simply on account of the amendment just adopted.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 23, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Dixon, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, and Wilson—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Hale, Lane of Indiana, Powell, Riddle, and Saulsbury—8.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Collamer, Conness, Davis, Fessenden, Harding, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Howard, McDougall, Nesmith, Richardson, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Wright—18.

So the bill was passed.

HOURLY MEETING.

Mr. DIXON submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That, until otherwise ordered, the daily hour of meeting of the Senate shall be eleven o'clock a. m.

BILL RECOMMENDED.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to recommit to the Committee on Pensions the bill (H. R. No. 314) for the relief of Harriet and Emily W. Morris, unmarried sisters of the late Commodore Henry W. Morris, with the report in the case. I understand that the parties wish to present additional evidence.

The motion was agreed to.

LEVY COURT.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, the bill (S. No. 115) for the proper organization of the levy court of the county of Washington, in the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert the following:

That the first clause of the third section of the act of Congress entitled "An act to define the powers and duties of the levy court of the county of Washington, District of Columbia, in regard to roads and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows: "That the said court shall have the care and charge of and the exclusive jurisdiction over all the public roads and bridges in said county, except such roads and bridges as belong to and are under the care of the United States, and except such roads and bridges as shall have been or may hereafter be specially provided for by Congress. And the said court shall have power and it shall be their duty."

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the tenth section of the said act be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the words "thirty-first" and inserting the word "thirtieth."

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That all cemeteries in the District of Columbia, outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, the owners of which sell lots or burial rights therein indiscriminately to those applying therefor, shall be assessed and taxed as other property in the same parts of the said District: Provided, however, That all lots in said cemeteries, when actually sold for burial purposes, and any cemetery held and owned by a religious society, having a regular and known place of worship, shall be exempt from taxation.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That hereafter the said court shall have power, and it shall be their duty, to appoint the county surveyor of said county of Washington, to define his duties, from time to time, to fix his compensation, and to remove him whenever they shall deem it proper so to do.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the collector of taxes for said county whenever the owner or keeper of any dog or dogs shall neglect or refuse to pay the tax thereon to kill or cause to be killed every and all such dogs.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the time specified by the act of February 21, 1863, within which certain roads in said county shall be surveyed, platted, and recorded is hereby extended to three years from the 1st day of July, 1865.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the said court shall have power to issue, classify, and tax licenses for taverns, hotels, and restaurants, and for retailing goods, wares, and merchandise in said county, in proportion to the amount of business the person applying for a license is likely to do. The maximum sum to be charged for any one license not to exceed $250, and the minimum to be so charged not to be less than two dollars.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer this amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the notice required to be given by the eighth section of the act of which this is an amendment need not be given when all the parties interested are agreed; and all roads laid out under such agreement without such notice being given are hereby declared lawful highways.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed. Its title was amended to read: A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to define the powers and duties of the levy court of the county of Washington, District of Columbia."

POTOMAC FERRY COMPANY.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, the bill (S. No. 298) to incorporate the Potomac Ferry Company was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to create and constitute Henry D. Cooke, John B. Hutchinson, H. C. Fahnestock, Thomas Clyde, and William B. Hatch, and their associates and successors, or a majority of them, a body politic and corporate by the name and style of "The Potomac Ferry Company." The capital stock is not to be less than $100,000 nor more than $500,000, to be divided into shares of $100 each. The company is to establish and run a line or lines of vessels, propelled by steam or other power, between the cities of Alexandria and Washington, and other ports in the State of Virginia, on the Potomac river, Chesapeake bay, or the tributaries of the same. The affairs of the company are to be managed by such officers as the stockholders in general meeting shall elect, and such agents as may be appointed by the board of directors. The persons named, or a majority of them, may call a meeting of the stockholders for the purpose of organizing the company at such a time and place as they may determine upon, after advertising the time and place of such meeting for ten days in one or more newspapers published in the city of Washington. The officers of the company once elected are to hold their offices until their successors are chosen. Each stockholder is to be individually liable for all claims against the company to the amount of the stock held by him at the time such claims accrue.

Mr. HALE. It seems to me that if this bill is to pass it is defective in several particulars. It is defective in not giving to any future Congress the right to repeal, amend, or alter this act as the public good may require; and it has another very objectionable feature in it, to my mind, which is that the officers when once elected hold their places in perpetuity, and no provision is made for any annual or periodical meeting of the corporation. But I have a more solid objection, though I think either of these is bad enough. I do not see any necessity for incorporating a mere coasting company. It is called a ferry company, but it is not a ferry company. It is a mere company to transport passengers and freight from Washington to Alexandria. There is no earthly necessity for any such act of incorporation, and it is not proper to grant one. I hope the bill will not pass; it certainly should not pass until it is materially amended. We are going vastly too far in creating corporations. There is no necessity for any act of incorporation to enable these men to run packets from here to Alexandria or any other place in the world. It is not common, I think, in Maine or anywhere else to incorporate coasters. I think it is better to leave this matter of freighting where it belongs, to private enterprise.

Mr. DIXON. I suggest to the Senator from Maine to let the bill be laid aside for the present, as there is opposition to it, for the purpose of bringing up other business reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORRILL. If I were to give way now it would be forever. I think the bill may be open to the objection that there is no provision in it that Congress may amend or repeal it. I have no objection to a section of that kind being added. In my State these corporations are very common indeed. There are several that I could name, from Kennebec to Boston, from Portland to Boston, from Penobscot to Boston, and from Penobscot along the coast. I do not think there is anything unusual in this bill. It is simply associating men together to do what an individual could hardly be expected to do. The power of association, the right of association by corporate act, is one of the most common things in the country, certainly in the North. All that it is the act of associating individuals together to act by the power of association as an individual man might act. I cannot for my life conceive how any harm is to come of it. There is no extraordinary power to be exercised by it. It is simply to run vessels up and down the Potomac river and Chesapeake bay. The bill is pretty well guarded, for it will be seen that it provides that each stockholder shall be individually liable for all claims against the corporation up to the amount of stock held by him at the time the claims arise. I think if the Senator from New Hampshire will examine this bill carefully he will see that it is in conformity with bills of this character, and that it is not open to any particular objection. I have no objection to its being amended in the particular he suggests by reserving to Congress the power to alter and amend it, if there is any doubt about that.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend the bill by adding as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That Congress may at any time hereafter alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. In the sixth section, after the word "same," in the sixth line, I move to strike out all the rest of the section. The words to be stricken out are, "to the amount of the stock held by him at the time such claims accrue," so as to make the clause read, "and each stockholder in said company shall be individually liable for all claims against the same."

Mr. MORRILL. That is manifestly improper. Men should not be held after the transfer of their stock for debts that did not accrue while they were members of the company.

Mr. HALE. I will modify the amendment, then, and move to strike out the words "to the amount of the stock held by him."

Mr. SHERMAN. Put it at twice or three times the amount of stock held by him.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Maine says that this bill is simply to give corporate privileges to individuals to enable them to do business more conveniently than they could without an act of incorporation. If that is so I think they should be individually liable, just as if they did not have an act of incorporation. I move to strike out the words "to the amount of the stock held by him."

The amendment was agreed to.

INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. DIXON. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 167) to incorporate an insurance company in the city of Washington.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. That is a long bill; it will be impossible to complete it to-night. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Kansas withdraw that motion to enable me to say a word?

Mr. POMEROY. I withdraw it.

Mr. HALE. I understand this is a pretty long bill, and it may take some time. By adjourning with it up, it will be the special order at one o'clock to-morrow. I want not to be embarrassed by any such proceeding as that. I move to lay the bill aside for the purpose of taking up Senate bill No. 292, to provide for the efficiency of the Navy.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope that the Senate will not take up that bill, but will proceed with the consideration of the bill to repeal the fugitive slave act.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate adjourn. The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 21, 1864.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. J. I. FERRIE.

On motion of Mr. FARNSWORTH, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 6th instant, a list of United States steam vessels suitable for carrying the mails to and from foreign ports, &c.; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

MILITARY BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent this day has been assigned to the consideration of reports from the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAY OF SOLDIERS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back sundry petitions relating to the increase of pay of soldiers in the Army of the United States. The subject having been disposed of by legislation on the subject, I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petitions, and that the same be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY REGISTER.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a joint resolution to provide for the publication of a full Army Register; which was read a first and second time by its title.

The resolution requires the Secretary of War, in connection with the Army Register for the year 1864, to cause to be printed and published a full roll of all field, line, and staff officers of volunteers who have been in the Army of the United States since the beginning of the present rebellion, showing whether they are yet in the service or have been discharged therefrom, and giving casualties and other explanations proper for such a Register. It also provides that in order to defray, in whole or in part, the expenses of this publication an edition of fifty thousand copies of such enlarged Register shall be published, and may be sold to officers, soldiers, or citizens at a price which shall not more than cover the actual cost of paper, printing, and binding, and shall not in any case exceed one dollar per volume.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMBULANCE CORPS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am directed by the committee to report back the memorials of sundry citizens of New York praying for the establishment of an ambulance corps. A bill in reference to that matter has passed both Houses and become a law, and I therefore move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petitions, and that the same be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

FUEL AND SUBSISTENCE.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the same committee, reported adversely upon a bill and sundry petitions asking that citizens of Washington may be allowed to purchase fuel and subsistence from the commissary and quartermaster's stores in this city; which bill and petitions were laid on the table.

VOLUNTEERS IN THE MEXICAN WAR.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that it do not pass, a bill (H. R. No. 112) to provide for the payment of certain volunteer companies in the service of the United States in the war with Mexico and in the suppression of Indian disturbances in New Mexico; and moved that the same be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

CAPTAIN M. M. HAWES.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the same committee, reported a joint resolution for the relief of Captain M. M. Hawes; which was read a first and second time by its title.

The resolution directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to credit Captain M. M. Hawes, assistant quartermaster, with the sum of $1,050 42 upon his cash account with the Quartermaster General's department, and that Hawes be relieved from any further responsibility for said sum of money, the same being for moneys stolen from him without any negligence or fault upon his part.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CITIZEN PRISONERS.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of citizen prisoners confined in southern prisons; which was laid on the table.

B. C. FERNALD.

Mr. SCHENCK also, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of B. C. Fernald, executor of William Richardson, for the bounty to which said Richardson was entitled; and the same was laid on the table.

PAY OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. SCHENCK also, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of certain officers of the Army for increase of pay; which was laid on the table.

MAIL FACILITIES.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of sundry citizens of Philadelphia for increased mail facilities between Washington and New York; and the same was referred to the select committee on railroads from New York to Washington.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. WHEELER moved that the House insist on its amendments to the Metropolitan railroad bill, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on said bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed Messrs. WHEELER, BLAINE, and PATTERSON the committee of conference on the part of the House.

MARY KELLOGG.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a joint resolution for the relief of Mary Kellogg; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution provides that the name of Spencer Kellogg be entered upon the rolls of the Navy Department with the rank of fourth master, to date from June, 1862, and that Mary Kellogg, his widow, be put upon the pension roll with the pension incident to the rank of her deceased husband, and authorizes and directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle and adjust the accounts of the said Spencer Kellogg as first lieutenant of infantry from the 14th of September, 1861, to the 20th of October, 1861, and his accounts as fourth master in the Navy from the 1st day of August, 1862, to the 25th of September, 1863, the date of the execution of said Kellogg at Richmond, Virginia, by the rebels, and to pay any money due him to his widow.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAY OF TROOPS NOT MUSTERED IN.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of a resolution of the House instructing said committee to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill to pay officers and soldiers in the service who have not been mustered in, and the same was laid on the table.

CHARLES K. DEAN.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of Charles K. Dean for relief, and the same was laid on the table.

EXAMINATION OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with sundry amendments, bill of the Senate No. 85, to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army. The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAY OF PAYMASTERS, ETC.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the same committee, reported a bill to regulate the pay of paymasters and military storekeepers of ordnance, which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that paymasters and military storekeepers of ordnance shall have the rank, pay, and emoluments of a captain of ordnance, but without command.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio how much this bill will increase the pay of storekeepers of ordnance.

Mr. SCHENCK. Very slightly. Paymasters in the Army have the rank of major. These men handle millions of dollars of money, and it is proposed that they shall only rank as captains. They have given bonds, and this will only increase their pay about four dollars a month.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BARDSTOWN TURNPIKE COMPANY.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill for the benefit of the Louisville and Bardstown Turnpike Company; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not desire to raise a question of order upon this bill, but I desire to know what is the amount of this claim. I did not understand that there was any amount stated.

Mr. SCHENCK. The amount of the claim is among the papers and will be found in a moment. It is for two bridges over Salt river and Floyd's fork, which were destroyed by order of General Nelson, then in command of the United States troops in that district.

Mr. HOLMAN. From the reading of the bill there does not seem to be any limitation upon the amount except the discretion of the Quartermaster General.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I raise the question of order that this bill makes an appropriation, and must be first considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask the gentleman from Illinois if he will not withhold that question of order until I can make a brief explanation.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will hear the gentleman's explanation in Committee of the Whole where I can reply to him.

Mr. MALLORY. If the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his question of order until he can hear an explanation, I can assure him that he will have no doubt of its justice and propriety. Perhaps, however, that is the reason why he does not want to hear it.

Mr. SCHENCK. It is certainly a very peculiar case, and one which commends itself especially to the judgment of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the question of order, and the bill is therefore in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

EFFICIENCY OF THE MEDICAL CORPS.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill to increase the efficiency of the medical corps of the Army; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that the medical director of an army in the field consisting of two Army corps or more, or of a medical depot in which there is a United States general hospital having four thousand beds or more, shall have the rank and pay of a colonel of cavalry. Also, that medical directors of United States general hospitals of less than four thousand beds shall have the rank and pay of a lieutenant colonel of cavalry. These appointments to be made, two thirds of them from the surgeons and assistant surgeons of volunteers, and to continue in such rank and receive such pay only while holding such positions.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will state that there are other matters of importance which I desire to report from the Military Committee. I, however, at the request of my colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] will yield to him, hoping that he will not wander off so as to consume too much of the day.

WILLIAM ROLLMAN.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed by the Military Committee to report back the petition of William Rollman, of Baltimore, Maryland, for compensation for property destroyed by United States troops. The committee do not report upon the merits of the case for or against it. They are of the opinion that in the present condition of the country they cannot pay claims of this character. I move that the petition be laid on the table, and the committee discharged from its further consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

BERKS COUNTY ENROLLMENT.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back the petition of citizens of Berks county, Pennsylvania, asking compensation for the enrolling officers and their clerks for their services in that county. The substantive matter of the petition has been attended to to the satisfaction of the petitioners. I move to lay it on the table, and that the committee be discharged from its further consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

ISAAC HALLEN.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed also by the committee to report back the petition of Isaac Hallen, sergeant major of the Fourteenth Illinois cavalry, asking further compensation. I move that it be laid on the table and the committee discharged from its further consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS F. BAYLEY.

Mr. GARFIELD. The committee also instruct me to report back the memorial of Colonel Thomas Bayley, of the United States volunteers, with the recommendation that it be laid on the table and the committee discharged from its further consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLMENT ACT.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed also by the committee to report back the joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Michigan asking an amendment in the enrollment act. The matter of the resolutions having been acted on in the enrollment act, I move that they be laid on the table and the committee discharged from their further consideration.

VOLUNTEERS IN THE MEXICAN WAR.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am also instructed to report adversely upon the petition of Ohio volunteers in the Mexican war, asking for compensation. I move that the papers in the case be laid on the table, and the accompanying report be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

NATHAN S. BRINTON.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am also instructed to report a joint resolution for the relief of Major Nathan S. Brinton, a paymaster. I will state briefly the circumstances on which the resolution is based. This paymaster sailed, under the direction of the Government of the United States, in the steamer Ruth, with $2,600,000 in his possession. The steamer was burned eight miles below Cairo, Illinois. The Secretary of the Treasury sent a special agent to the scene of the disaster; the wreck was carefully examined; all the fragments of notes that could possibly be found were obtained by the means of divers; a guard was placed there until the wreck was thoroughly searched; and finally, to make the destruction complete, the hull was blown up. The testimony is complete and satisfactory, as appears in the papers submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, that the money was actually destroyed. No injury will accrue to the Government by the passage of this resolution, for this money was entirely destroyed.

There were several iron safes on board the steamer when she sank. The money in those safes was not entirely destroyed, but it belonged to other parties. The money which Paymaster Brinton had in his possession was contained in three wooden boxes which were placed upon the cabin deck, and when the steamer was burned they fell through upon the coal and were entirely and completely destroyed.

The evidence on all of these points is clear and satisfactory. This paymaster is charged with the money, and the pending joint resolution is submitted by the Military Committee and asked to be acted on for the purpose of placing the amount destroyed to his credit. A report was made to the War Department on the subject, and approved by the Secretary, relieving this paymaster from all blame.

Mr. LE BLOND. I do not think that this joint resolution ought to pass at this time, and I therefore move that it be laid on the table.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not yield for that motion. If there be any question in regard to the facts I will be glad to answer it.

Mr. BOUTWELL. As I understand the joint resolution, it merely proposes to credit this paymaster with this amount of money which is charged against him, and which it has been proved has been entirely destroyed. If there is no imputation against his honesty I do not see why that should not be done.

Mr. STEVENS. I know that the Department would willingly credit this amount to this paymaster, but they have not the power to do so.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Was not some of this money recovered?

Mr. GARFIELD. Some iron safes were upon the steamer belonging to other parties, and some of their contents were recovered. The money which was in wooden boxes belonged to Brinton. They and their contents were destroyed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Did the court of inquiry, of which Major General Hunter was president, report that this money was destroyed?

Mr. GARFIELD. It did. The report of the special agent also shows that it was destroyed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. What will be the effect?

Mr. GARFIELD. Major Brinton has receipted for and is charged with $2,600,000, and this joint resolution simply proposes to put this amount to his credit, as it has been entirely destroyed.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Has the evidence in the case been reported?

Mr. GARFIELD. It has been fully presented to the committee.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Has it been printed?

Mr. GARFIELD. The report of the court of inquiry has been printed, and in the report of that court, of which Major General Hunter was president, this paymaster is fully relieved from all blame.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Has that been reported to the House?

Mr. GARFIELD. I have just now submitted it.

Mr. SWEAT. At what time does the testimony show that this fire occurred?

Mr. GARFIELD. Before light, on the morning of the 5th of August.

Mr. SWEAT. Does the testimony show that any person or persons were in charge of these boxes when the fire occurred?

Mr. GARFIELD. There was a guard of thirty soldiers over the safes and boxes all the time. Five soldiers were burned.

Mr. HOLMAN. Was Major Brinton on board?

Mr. GARFIELD. He was, and barely escaped with his life. An effort was made to save these boxes, and four or five soldiers were so badly burned that they afterwards died. The fire was not discovered until it had made great headway and burst out through the cabin where the boxes were. The fire enveloped the boxes so rapidly that they could not be got out, and five soldiers lost their lives in the attempt to do so.

Mr. LE BLOND. If my colleague will yield to me, I will make a motion to postpone this bill until the next session.

Mr. GARFIELD. I cannot yield for such a motion.

Mr. LE BLOND. I do it for this reason: the evidence has not been printed, and we do not understand the facts connected with this case fully, as has been disclosed upon the examination made by the military authorities. Under such circumstances we cannot understandingly vote upon the proposition. While we do not wish to kill the bill, we do not wish to vote to cancel that large claim against this individual if it is not proper that it should be done. If it is proper it should be done then we will vote for the bill when the proper time comes, and we have an opportunity to examine it. I think the course I propose would be the prudent and wise one to pursue in this matter. If my colleague will yield to me I will move for a postponement for that reason alone; otherwise I shall move at the proper time to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. GARFIELD. If there was any reasonable doubt of the justness of this case in the mind of any person who has examined it, I would agree to the request of my colleague. But there is not; and I am sure, if my colleague would read the report, all doubt would be removed from his mind. I demand the previous question.

Mr. NOBLE. I desire to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. GARFIELD. There are three other gentlemen asking the same thing, and I cannot yield.

Mr. NOBLE. I appeal to my colleague to allow me to ask a question in reference to the evidence.

Mr. GARFIELD. We have so many other things on hand that I cannot yield.

Mr. NOBLE. We are voting in the dark.

Mr. STEVENS called for tellers on seconding the previous question.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. LE BLOND were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 62.

So the House refused to second the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to postpone the bill until the second Tuesday of December, and that in the mean time the testimony of the court-martial be printed with the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope it will not be postponed. It ought not to be postponed, because in the mean time this charge embarrasses the officer. He has held over him a charge on the books of the Department to the amount of $2,600,000, when the clear statement of the commission sent on by the Department shows that this property was on board at the time of the burning, and was entirely destroyed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. Debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read from Barclay's Digest, page 134.

The Clerk read, as follows:

"The motion to postpone, under the practice, admits of but a very limited debate."

The SPEAKER. The debate must be confined to the propriety of postponing, and must not extend to the merits of the bill.

Mr. WILSON. Will it be in order to move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole House upon the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The motion to postpone takes precedence of a motion to refer.

Mr. WILSON. I propose to make the motion so that the report may be printed, and we may reach the case this session.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be reserved until the motion to postpone is decided.

Mr. STEVENS. On the motion to postpone I have a word to say. Here is a man against whom there is not the least whisper of suspicion, and yet he stands charged on the books of the Department with $2,600,000 on account of an accident or casualty from which he narrowly escaped with his life. The property has all been destroyed and yet it stands charged against him. That embarrasses him and renders it impossible for him to settle his accounts, while it is necessary for him to proceed with his duties, if he remains in the service at all. If he is not entitled to this allowance, say so. If he is entitled to it give him the relief at this time. I trust this great injustice will not be done to this very honest man.

Mr. ARNOLD. I desire simply to say that if we had all had the opportunity which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has had of examining this case, we might have come to the same conclusion. But this is a large sum of money—$2,600,000—and what I desire is that the evidence which has brought the gentleman to the conclusion at which he has arrived shall be printed, so that we may all see it and vote intelligently. I am unwilling to vote to credit any man with $2,600,000 without having an opportunity to examine the evidence. I am, therefore, in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Wilson,] not to postpone this bill until next session, but to refer it to the Committee of the Whole, so that the evidence can be printed and examined, and then we can act upon it at this session.

Mr. STEVENS. If the gentleman will look at the papers in this case he will find that the printing will be a very laborious and voluminous thing. A commission from the War Department has thoroughly examined the case and voluminously reported that there can be no doubt of the destruction of this money, and a military commission has reported that this officer was in no way to blame. What more can anybody want?

Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to postpone and print.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 69, nays 66, not voting 47; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Blair, Bliss, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Chanler, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Finck, Ganson, Grider, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Herrick, Holman, Hotchkiss, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Law, Lazear, Le Blond, Mallory, Marcy, McDowell, McKinney, Middleton, William H. Miller, James R. Morris, Morrison, Nelson, Noble, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Perry, Price, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, Sweet, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stiles, Stuart, Sweat, Thomas, Van Valkenburgh, Wadsworth, Elihu B. Washburne, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, and Windfall—69.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnold, Ashley, Bailly, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Broomall, Cobb, Cole, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Briggs, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Garfield, Gooch, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Knapp, Knox, Loan, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Stevens, Thayer, Upson, William B. Washburn, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, and Windom—66.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Ancona, Blaine, Brandegee, Brooks, Clay, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Dumont, Penton, Frank, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Hall, Charles M. Harris, Higby, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Jenckes, Kasson, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, King, Littlejohn, Long, Longyear, McAllister, Melrose, Morrill, Odell, Orth, Patterson, William H. Randall, Scott, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, Strouse, Tracy, Voorhees, Ward, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—47.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PENDLETON. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to make a report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House (No. 192) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1865. The House will remember that a report was made by this committee some days ago, and that that report was rejected. But the House concurred in all the recommendations of the report so far as action by the House was concerned, except upon one point. The Senate have already receded from their ninety-fourth amendment fixing the salary of the Treasurer of the United States to which the House objected, and have concurred with the action of the House in all other particulars. This report, therefore, recommends no action by the House.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 192) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1865, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from their ninth and ninety-fourth amendment.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the twenty-fifth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the thirty-fourth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the ninetieth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to the amendments recommended by the report of the previous conference committee to the ninety-fifth amendment of the Senate, agreed to by the House.

That the Senate agree to the amendments of the House to the ninety-sixth amendment of the Senate as modified by the recommendation of the previous committee of conference, and agreed to by the House.

JOHN SHERMAN,
GARRETT DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
GEORGE H. PENDLETON, WILLIAM WINDOM,
ORLANDO KELLOGG,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. PENDLETON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIEUTENANT WILLIAM P. RICHNER.

Mr. GARFIELD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, bill of the House No. 121, for the relief of Lieutenant William P. Richner, seventy-seventh regiment Ohio volunteer infantry.

The bill directs the Secretary of War to cause to be paid to William P. Richner the pay and emoluments of a first lieutenant from the 31st of December, 1861, to the 31st of August, 1862.

Mr. GARFIELD. This bill passed the House at the last session, but failed in the Senate for want of time. The case is briefly this: This officer was appointed by the Governor of Ohio on the 31st of December, 1861, as a lieutenant. In consequence of orders from the War Department that any person who had resigned his commission should not be eligible to be mustered in and re-commissioned until such disability was removed, he was not mustered and commissioned until the following August. But he performed his duties, and actually led his company in battle. He continued to discharge the duties of his office until his disabilities were removed, and he was mustered in. The Department acknowledged the justice of the claim, but lacked the power to pay. I referred these papers to the War Department, and received that response. It is a perfectly clear case, and I hope the bill will pass.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States informing the House that he had approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 40) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1865, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 179) concerning lands in the State of California;

An act (H. R. No. 217) to confirm certain duties of land in the State of Michigan;

An act (H. R. No. 227) granting lands to the State of Michigan for the construction of certain wagon roads for military and postal purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 290) for the relief of Rhoda Wolcott, widow of Henry Wolcott;

An act (H. R. No. 356) requiring proof of payment of duties on foreign salt before payment of the allowances provided for by the acts of July 29; 1813, and March 3, 1819;

An act (H. R. No. 486) to amend an act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Idaho, approved March 3, 1863;

An act (H. R. No. 504) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the marine hospital and grounds at Chicago, Illinois, and to purchase a new site and build a new hospital;

An act (H. R. No. 513) to detach the counties of Calhoun and Branch from the western judicial district and annex the same to the eastern district of the State of Michigan;

An act (H. R. No. 521) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of the claims of Peruvian citizens under the convention between the United States and Peru of the 12th of January, 1863," approved June 1, 1864; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 47) for the relief of Rev. W. B. Matchett.

H. C. DEAHNA.

Mr. GARFIELD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a joint resolution to provide for the claim of Colonel Henry Charles De Ahna, for military services; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read. It provides authority to the accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Henry Charles De Ahna, for his services as colonel of infantry, in active service, and that he be considered honorably discharged from the military service.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not desire to raise a question of order upon that bill until I can hear some explanation of it; and I will not until I can hear from the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is a very voluminous report in this case, which I do not desire to detain the House with the reading of, and I will therefore make a brief statement of the facts. This officer has had a very checkered history in connection with the Army, having been once tried by court-martial under General Fremont at St. Louis, and sentenced to be dismissed from the service. But the record of the court having been forwarded to Washington was annulled by the President of the United States as being an illegally organized court, and the sentence being such as he did not approve. He was then ordered back to duty, but by some perverseness by the officer there in command he was ordered back again to Washington. He was again ordered back to duty, but in the mean time his regiment was mustered out of the service, and he was dropped by some indirect means of getting him out of the service. He was then nominated by the President as a brigadier. His case was favorably reported upon by the Military Committee of the Senate, but just about the time his nomination would have been confirmed a telegram was sent by an officer holding a high command in the West, recommending that he be not confirmed, and intimating that there were some very grave things against him. On that intimation he was not confirmed, and it was not until after that that his payment was stopped. Yet he has not been regularly mustered out of service, and possibly ought to be paid down to the present time. But the question is so involved in orders and cross-orders and counter-orders that the committee deemed it best to compromise the matter by reporting in favor of paying him not quite three fifths of the amount that he might possibly be entitled to. It was the unanimous conclusion of the committee that at the very lowest figure he was entitled to the pay of colonel for one year. The resolution is so drawn that the acceptance of that payment by him will waive all his military claims against the Government, and that was considered the best means of adjusting the whole matter.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I ask my colleague whether this officer was not paid up to the time the regiment was mustered out?

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes, and after that.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Was he ever in battle?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know that he was in any battle. He has been paid by the Government and has been recognized as colonel since his regiment was mustered out.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I have a number of cases to report to the House where men have served as volunteer aids or in other capacities in the field, without being mustered in or legally appointed. The committee has directed me to report back all of them adversely. Certainly, if these men who were actually in service in the field are not entitled to pay, this man is entitled to nothing after being discharged and while he was not in the service.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not compel me to go into the whole history of this very unpleasant transaction, which is in every way discreditable to some officers of the Army. I regard him and the committee regards him as a man who has been very grievously wronged, and the least possible recompense that can now be made will be to grant him this claim and settle the question with him.

Mr. NOBLE. Mr. Speaker, I made an application this morning to have an officer who was wounded at the Wilderness, and whose company has been mustered out, continued in his pay until he is able to leave his bed. He is severely wounded, and will not be able to be out of his bed for a long time to come. I was informed that there was no rule by which a man could be kept on the roll after the discharge of his company, and I was referred to a regulation to the effect that when troops are mustered out of service all officers and men, present and absent, who are entitled to be discharged, will be considered as mustered out at one time and place, except prisoners of war, who will be considered as in service until their arrival in a loyal State, with the allowance of time necessary for them to be returned to their respective places of enrollment. This man whom I desired to have kept on the rolls for a few weeks only has been in actual service and has been wounded in the service. As soon as the term of his regiment expires, just about now, his pay stops, and yet he is on his back, and will be for six weeks to come. Now, if that man is not entitled to pay, certainly a man who has not been in the service and is not wounded is not entitled.

MR. GARFIELD. There is a good deal of weight in what my colleague says. I appreciate it, and I agree with him. At the same time the Government has given no pledge to the officer to whom my colleague refers. It has not decided in his case that he is still an officer, as it has decided in the case of this other party. I put this claim on the ground of the obligation which the Government has undertaken in regard to this officer. Whether justly or unjustly taken, the Government is bound to discharge the obligation on which it has entered. I trust the resolution will be passed. I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers on seconding the previous question, and appointed Messrs. GARFIELD and FARNSWORTH.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 49.

So the previous question was not seconded.

MR. WILSON. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

MR. SCHENCK. I hope the report will be printed.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

MR. FARNSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported adversely on the following cases; which were severally laid on the table:

Memorial of citizens of Illinois, praying that hostilities may cease, peace be restored, and a convention of all the States be called;

A bill (H. R. No. 417) regulating the pay of certain officers of the Army of the United States; Memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, praying for an appropriation for the construction of a road from the head of navigation on Willapo river to the mouth of Black river;

Petition of Joseph S. Griffin and sixty others, citizens of Michigan, praying Congress to take measures for the relief of the wives and children of freedmen, &c.;

A bill (H. R. No. 271) to promote the efficiency of chaplains in the Army of the United States, and to define their rank, pay, and emoluments;

Memorial for a military road across the Cascade mountains;

A bill (H. R. No. 362) for the payment of field officers of regiments for the time actually employed in organizing their respective regiments; and Sundry petitions relative to recruiting without authority of law.

MAJOR MORRIS S. MILLER.

MR. FARNSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a joint resolution for the relief of Major Morris S. Miller, of the quartermaster's department; which was read a first and second time.

The resolution was read.

MR. FARNSWORTH. I will explain the joint resolution in a few words. The papers in the case show that some thirty-seven thousand dollars was paid by Major Miller under the express order of the then Secretary of War and the Quartermaster General. This money was paid by this officer, and this resolution will not take anything out of the Treasury. By some decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury, these sums were not credited to Major Miller, and they stand charged against him although he paid them under the order of his superior officer. This legislation is necessary because the accounts of Major Miller cannot be reopened without an act of Congress.

MR. WILSON. Is there anything in the papers which accompany the joint resolution that will show the ground upon which the Comptroller refused to pass this claim?

MR. FARNSWORTH. I think that that is not shown.

MR. WILSON. I think that there ought to be something in the papers to show that.

MR. FARNSWORTH. This resolution simply authorizes the accounting officers of the Treasury to reopen the accounts of Major Miller and credit him with these sums which he paid under the order of the Secretary of War. If he had refused to pay them he would have been subject to a court-martial for disobedience of the orders of his superior officer. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MR. FARNSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAYMENT FOR HORSES.

MR. FARNSWORTH, from the same committee, reported a bill to amend an act to provide for payment for horses and other property destroyed in the military service of the United States, approved March 3, 1849; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read.

MR. FARNSWORTH. The object of this bill is to supply a deficiency in the act of 1849. That act provides for paying for horses lost in battle, or which die afterwards of wounds, or which may have to be abandoned, but there is no provision for the payment for horses surrendered to the enemy under an order of a superior officer. A captain who is commanded by his colonel to surrender loses his horse, and if he disobeys the order he is liable to be court-martialed. A man surrenders his horse by order or command of his superior officer, and yet under the act of 1849 he gets no pay for it; while, if his horse is lost by reason of wounds, he would get pay, or if the Government of the United States should not supply sufficient forage and his horse is lost in consequence, he would get pay. I demand the previous question.

MR. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the demand for a moment.

MR. FARNSWORTH. I will.

MR. KELLOGG, of Michigan. There was a case of a similar kind decided differently by the committee. It referred to the payment of horses of a regiment which surrendered in the State of Missouri by command of their superior officers, and after a very gallant fight too. This bill, as I understand, provides for the payment on the part of the Government of the United States, not now merely, but from the commencement of the war, for horses belonging to officers and privates which were surrendered by command of their superior officers. I know the Department disapproves of any such law as that. I have a letter from one of the officers in the Treasury Department which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The letter was read, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE, December 23, 1862.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the claims of sundry members of the first Illinois cavalry for the alleged loss of their horses and equipage, surrendered by Colonel Mulligan at Lexington, Missouri, which you left with me yesterday. In reply to your inquiry as to the difficulty in the way of settling their claims for horses, stated to have been lost in consequence of said surrender, I have to say that cases for losses accruing by the surrender of commands, or where individual officers or soldiers have been taken prisoner and subsequently their horses taken from them, have been temporarily laid aside in view of some doubt as to whether the law embraced cases of that description, and also for the reason that it was in fact impossible to act on the cases clearly embraced in the law as fast as they were filed in this office.

The law provides compensation for the loss of a horse in battle, or wounded in battle, and which has died or shall die of said wounds, &c., &c., and where said loss is without any fault or negligence on the part of the owner. But it has been doubted whether Congress intended to pay for losses arising from voluntary surrender or where the deprivation of the property resulted from the act of the owner himself or the officer in command.

So far the indemnity has been confined to cases of horses killed in battle, or wounded, and dying in consequence of the wound, except in a few cases of officers disabled by wounds, and of surgeons who under orders were compelled to remain on the field to attend to the wounded and were taken prisoners and thereby lost their horses. It is, perhaps, difficult to draw the line of distinction; but it seems to me that to allow all cases of losses by surrender would be to open the door to claims not meritorious nor within the intent of the law. As a general rule officers and mounted men take the risk of loss of their horses as one of the incidents of the service, the former furnishing their own horses as part of the necessary equipments, and the latter receiving a money allowance of forty cents per day for the use and risk of their horses.

The act of the 3d of March, 1849, assumes the loss in the cases specified therein, and this office has endeavored to construe it strictly, leaving cases otherwise occurring for future legislation if deemed proper by Congress.

If it be understood that officers or men, by permitting themselves to be taken prisoners in an action or without any combat at all, become entitled to reclamation from the Government for the losses sustained, it is not unreasonable to suppose that advantage will be taken of such an inducement which would operate injuriously alike to the service and to the public Treasury.

I have thus briefly stated some of the points involved in these and other cases of like character. I will add that in my late report to the Secretary of the Treasury I have referred to the cases arising under this law as worthy the attention of Congress. They are becoming very numerous, and upon the strictest construction of the act will involve a large amount of money. I respectfully suggest the presentation of the petitions, and a reference to the Committee on Military Affairs, which will thus appropriately bring the matter before Congress. If it be desired to extend the privileges of the law so as to embrace cases of surrender, a short declaratory enactment would accomplish the object and relieve this office from the difficulties above suggested.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. J. ATKINSON,
Auditor.

HON. WILLIAM KELLOGG,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MR. FARNSWORTH. I must resume the floor.

MR. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I hope the resolution will be laid on the table.

MR. FARNSWORTH. This matter addresses itself to the common sense and justice of every man. If a company of privates are ordered by their superior officers to surrender their horses, they should get pay for them as much as they would if they were injured in battle. You need not pay anything to the officers who order the horses to be surrendered, and thus take away all inducement to make such an order. If an inferior officer loses his property in accordance with the order of his superior officer, he ought to be paid. I move the previous question.

MR. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I move to lay the bill on the table.

MR. FARNSWORTH called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The motion was not agreed to.

MR. FARNSWORTH. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

MR. FARNSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by MR. FORNEY, their Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed an act (S. No. 319) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a land warrant to Richard Fitch, of Ohio;

Also, that the Senate had passed, with amendments, a joint resolution (H. R. No. 11) in relation to the claim of Carmack & Ramsey;

In which bills and amendments the concurrence of the House was requested.

VETERINARY SURGEONS.

MR. FARNSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill to regulate the rank, pay, and emoluments of veterinary surgeons of cavalry regiments; which was read a first and second time by its title.

The bill provides that from and after the passage of this bill veterinary surgeons of cavalry regiments shall have the rank, pay, and emoluments of a second lieutenant of cavalry, and that they be appointed and commissioned in the same manner as other commissioned officers of such regiment.

MR. FARNSWORTH moved the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. FARNSWORTH demanded tellers on the passage of the bill.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HOTCHKISS and WHEELER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 32.

Mr. WILSON demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. FARNSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OFFICERS OF INDIAN REGIMENTS.

Mr. FARNSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, joint resolution of the House No. 23, for the relief of the officers of the fourth and fifth Indian regiments, appointed and commissioned by the War Department and mustered out of service without pay. The substitute was read. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to adjudicate and settle the claims of those officers of the fourth and fifth Indian regiments who were commissioned by the War Department and accepted their appointment, for such time as they or either of them were actually performing duty other than as recruiting officers of said regiments, and to pay such claims out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; provided, however, that no compensation shall be allowed but the pay and emoluments incident to the respective rank of the several officers.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I will state that this case was handed to me by my colleague on the Military Committee from Pennsylvania [Mr. McALLISTER] when he left, with the request that I would make the report to the House. It has passed through the Committee on Military Affairs. It is a matter with which I am not personally very familiar. The gentleman stated that it was all right.

The substitute was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the aggregate amount of money appropriated by this bill?

Mr. DAILY. I am very well acquainted with the facts in this case.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I do not dispute the facts. I ask only as to the aggregate amount.

Mr. DAILY. It will be, perhaps, three or four thousand dollars for all the officers.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. The amount seems to be exorbitant for eighty men.

Mr. WILDER. These officers were mustered out of service without pay, and this is a just claim.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FARNSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. FARNSWORTH moved to amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution for the relief of the officers of the fourth and fifth Indian regiments."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to the title was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOSS OF HORSES.

On motion of Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of a resolution referring certain papers relative to the loss of horses by the first Illinois cavalry; and the same was laid on the table.

MAJOR A. SCHWARTZ.

On motion of Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan, the same committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Major A. Schwartz; and the same was laid on the table.

JOSIAH M. CHRISTY.

On motion of Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan, the same committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Josiah M. Christy, sutler to the twenty-eighth regiment Pennsylvania volunteers; and the same was laid on the table.

THOMAS H. MILLER.

On motion of Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan, the same committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Thomas H. Miller to be allowed his pay while serving in the United States Army; and the same was laid on the table.

COMPENSATION OF PAYMASTERS.

On motion of Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan, the same committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of certain paymasters and paymasters' clerks for compensation; and the same was laid on the table.

SUBSTITUTE BROKERS.

On motion of Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan, the same committee was discharged from the further consideration of a resolution instructing the committee to inquire what further legislation is necessary to prevent substitute brokers from purchasing substitutes; and the same was laid on the table.

A. G. ABEL.

On motion of Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of A. G. Abel for his relief; and the same was laid on the table.

PERCENTAGE ON COMMUTATION MONEY.

On motion of Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the resolution of the House instructing the committee to inquire into the expediency of providing a percentage to collectors for receiving commutation money; and the same was laid on the table.

J. M. LANDER.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report a bill for the relief of J. M. Lander, widow of General F. W. Lander, deceased. The case is a very meritorious one, but under the peculiar circumstances I think I should allow it to go to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the papers accompanying, be printed.

The bill was accordingly read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed.

ROCK ISLAND BRIDGES.

On motion of Mr. ODELL, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the resolution of the House instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the expediency of purchasing the bridges at Rock Island; and the same was laid on the table.

JAMES LINDSAY.

Mr. ODELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of James Lindsay, which was read a first and second time. The bill directs the proper accounting officers of the Government to settle with the claimant for three mountain howitzers, caisson, harness, &c., which by order of General Fiske, commanding United States forces, were turned over to the United States; provided that the payment shall not exceed the sum of $874 35.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I desire to hear an explanation of that bill.

Mr. ODELL. The applicant in this case was the colonel of a regiment of Missouri militia which was ordered by the Government into service, prior to which he had purchased and paid for these three mountain howitzers at a cost of about $875. When the regiment went out of service the three guns, caissons, &c., were kept by the Government. The Government has had them in use ever since, and I believe have them now. This is a claim to pay him for the cost of the guns.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Is the cost of the guns shown by competent testimony?

Mr. ODELL. The applicant presented his claim for $1,000. The matter was referred to me by the committee. I asked Mr. Lindsay for evidence in relation to his claim. He furnished the evidence of Mr. Filley, of St. Louis, who, as I am told by gentlemen who know him, is a man whose word is good for any statement he may make, and his evidence was that the claim was a just one; that the claimant purchased the guns for the amount of about eight hundred and seventy-five dollars, and that they have been efficient and useful in the service of the United States. I think the bill ought to pass, and I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ODELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CASSIUS M. CLAY GUARDS.

Mr. ODELL. I have now a report to make to the House somewhat remarkable in its character, and I ask the attention of members to it. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report adversely on the petition of Henry F. Johns and others for relief. This is an application for compensation for a company of gentlemen who organized themselves as the Cassius M. Clay Guards about the time the rebellion broke out. A number of gentlemen who happened to be in the city at that time organized themselves into a company, which was stationed, I believe, at Willard's Hotel, and this application is for the pay of that company. It is due to many of the gentlemen whose names are on this roll to say that they have no part in this matter, and I make this statement so that if the matter should ever come up again its character may be understood. There are on the rolls the names of some gentlemen now members of this House, of others who are now ministers abroad, and others occupying prominent positions all over the country. One gentleman, a member of this House—and as I am asked who he is, I presume he has no objection to my stating it; I refer to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LITTLEJOHN]—has authorized me to say that he had no part in making this application. My judgment and the judgment of the committee is that this is very palpably a job to get compensation for services that were of no value whatever. A majority of these claimants repudiate the matter entirely. I move that the paper be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLMENT LAW.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill to further regulate and provide for the enrolling and calling out the national forces.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read a first time for information.

The bill was read.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I object to the second reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question then is, "Shall the bill be rejected?"

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I propose to submit a brief explanation, to which I desire to call the attention of members of this House before they shall proceed to so decided a vote as that which is now demanded either for or against the rejection of this bill. I understand a proposition to reject the bill at this stage to mean this: that if a bill be of such a character that it is not proper to be entertained, that it is incapable of amendment to put it into a shape so as to render it acceptable, it then becomes necessary to reject it before it comes to a second reading.

What is it that is proposed here to-day? The President of the United States, seeing as he must the necessity for having men and not money only with which to carry on this war against the rebels, and finding the present existing enrollment act does not produce men by a draft, because of the various circumstances attending that enrollment, such as commutation and substitution, and other things which intervene to prevent the procuring of men, has sent to the House a message and communicated a report from the Secretary of War on this subject, inclosing also a letter from the Provost Marshal General, Brigadier General Fry, all recommending a repeal of the commutation clause. It is not necessary to ask to have those papers read, as they have been printed and very generally read. They will be found in Executive Document No. 97 of this session.

It appears from the facts there disclosed that drafting is insufficient to procure men, and as we have to have men they are only to be supplied by making a law more stringent, and at the same time with such provisions as not to make the law distasteful to the people.

Mr. Speaker, I may add to what is communicated by the President a single illustration in a case that has come to the knowledge of the Committee on Military Affairs. In the fourth district of Maryland it was necessary, under the law, to draft one thousand four hundred and sixty-three men. In one of the subdivisions of that district, Frederick City, where their proportion was one hundred and sixty-nine, they exerted themselves and raised one hundred and sixty-nine volunteers by offering inducements to bring in men, thus saving themselves from the draft. They consisted mostly of colored men, obtained from the city of Baltimore. Of the remaining number subject to draft in that district but fifty-one men were secured. The others were able to raise the $300 commutation. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars were received in the way of commutation money, and only fifty-one soldiers were secured for service in the Army; the others, as I have said, having paid commutation money. This is an example of the present law, and under the amendment which we adopted at this session, and which was thought to add to its stringency, and would remove the evils complained of.

Now, sir, while this bill, at first glance, may be considered a most stringent enactment, yet when you come to consider it as a whole, taking one part with another, as a new system to be adopted, there will not be found that hardship which might be supposed.

The first section, following the recommendation of the President, the Secretary of War, and the Provost Marshal General, repeals the commutation clause and provides that no money shall be received in lieu of military service. But if you repeal the commutation clause, and leave it open to persons to get rid of the obligations of military service by furnishing a substitute, those who are able to pay any price for substitutes will run up the market of substitutes so that poor men will be compelled to go themselves because they have lost the protection of the $300 clause.

And here I remark that none are more clamorous to retain it than the very gentlemen on the other side of the House who saw in it, when it was enacted, nothing but oppression, wrong, and injury to the poor man. The truth is that so far as the $300 clause operates it operates to the protection of men of limited means, and therefore I say that if you repeal it and go no further you leave them a right to complain that you run up substitutes in the market so as to make it impossible for them to obtain substitutes and compel them to go.

Seeing the difficulty, the committee go one step further, and in the second section propose to repeal the provision allowing substitutes to be taken. In doing that they make this exception, that a man may furnish a substitute, provided that substitute be of his own family—brother, father, or son—following in this respect the system adopted in a number of foreign countries where they have become au fait in matters of filling up armies by draft.

But there is a reason for this exception. Perhaps gentlemen would prefer, if there are to be no substitutes, there should be no exceptions at all, and that the whole provision allowing substitutes should be repealed. If a man is thrown upon the necessity of bringing in a substitute, if the opportunity is opened to him of obtaining that substitute from any source whatever, there is presented a case where a man of means will have the advantage over others. The committee therefore propose to limit it so that no man, whether a man of means or not, whether rich or poor, shall in any case get rid of furnishing a substitute unless he be one of his own blood. He must answer either by himself or by his family to this obligation of military service which rests upon every good, loyal citizen of the country.

But this would still leave, it may be supposed, some hardship, and much hardship, and therefore the committee proposes two other sections, palliating, removing, or softening down what would otherwise be considered the stringent character of that clause. By the third section it is provided that the draft need not be for the whole three years, but that the President, in his discretion, may make a draft for a less time, provided it shall not be for less than one year. It is claimed by the War Department that they have now under the existing law the right to draft for less time than three years or during the war. But the committee have thought it proper to remove all doubt upon the subject and to define the power of the President, if he has not already that discretion, by conferring that power upon him, provided he does not go below one year.

Having made that provision, they advance to the fourth section, which seems to me to finish out the system of which the first, second, and third sections were only a part, and to make it no grievous hardship upon any loyal citizen to comply with the obligations and duties under this bill. A man is not permitted to commute for $300, and cannot send a substitute except one of his own family. But a draft may be brought down to one year. The committee then go on to provide by section four that whenever the President calls for a draft he may, at the same time that he gives notice of a day when the draft is to take place, notify the people of the country that volunteers will be accepted up to that day in lieu of drafted men, and that those volunteers, according to the character of the call, may be for one or two or three years, and that every township and every election district, every county where not subdivided, shall be permitted to make up its quota by volunteers.

Now, let me ask gentlemen what would be the effect of that provision? Its effect would be to make the whole people of the township or county a sort of mutual aid society, to make every man who has any means interested in having a sufficient number of volunteers obtained in order to fill up the quota of his county or township. Every man, no matter how wealthy or how poor, will be equally interested in having the quota filled up, and as a matter of course it is to the advantage of those who have the least means, because the man of the greatest wealth must see that the full quota is made up, or if not he is liable to be drafted as any other person, and must go himself or send one of his own family. Thus it is that all objection that might be made by men of limited means, because of the cutting off of the commutation, is taken away, and every man in a county or township, or in a ward in a city, as the case may be, is incorporated into a mutual aid society to take care that nobody is drafted.

Then again there is this additional inducement held out, that whatever volunteers are obtained to fill up the quota of a district are credited to the district, and they receive a bounty for volunteering for one year of $100, for two years of $200, and for three years of $300. Thus the Government holds out an inducement to help these men in the mutual aid society. They can offer whatever other inducements they please, and the people of the country have been very liberal in this regard all over the land, and doubtless will be again. They have this bounty offered by the Government as part of a fund to go upon, and they may, if it becomes necessary, add to it, but they must secure volunteering to the full extent of their quota, or the wealthiest man in the community may be required to go and cannot get off.

But it may be asked, what is the necessity for a draft? Simply this: the draft organizes a system and serves as a stimulus on the one side, while the bounty held out furnishes an inducement on the other; and thus whipped forward one way and drawn forward in another, my word for it the people will generally get their township or district or ward out of the scrape by furnishing a sufficient number of volunteers. If they do not, it is admitted that somebody must go, and the provisions of this bill are such that that somebody is just as likely to be the man who considers himself to be at the top of the market as the man in the most humble circumstances.

The two other sections of this bill are designed to remedy defects in the working of the present law. Under the old enrollment act, when a draft was made, they drew fifty per cent. more names from the box than the number required to fill the quota, in order to make up for deficiencies from exemptions. Under a construction given to the present law by the Provost Marshal General they now only draw the exact number they want, and thus have to keep on drawing to fill the places of all who may be exempted, having no margin to go upon. The War Department asks that we shall go back to what the law was a year ago, and the fifth section provides for that.

In regard to the sixth section, I will say that great impositions are sometimes practiced, and there is always a great deal of trouble in computing the traveling expenses of each drafted man to the place of rendezvous. It may be ten dollars, or only fifty cents, or twenty-five cents, and an immense amount of auditing and examination is necessary for these extremely small accounts all over the country. Instead of that, it is proposed that the Government itself shall furnish and pay for the transportation, which can generally be done by railroad, and not trouble these people to pay their own expenses, and then have their accounts audited and settled afterwards. That is a defect in the present law which is sought to be amended.

The main features of this bill will be found, however, in the first four sections which I have attempted to explain to the House, and which I hope are distinctly understood.

Mr. MALLORY. Does the gentleman from Ohio intend to call the previous question?

Mr. SCHENCK. I shall have no objection to the suggestion of any reasonable amendments, and I would not think of calling the previous question or of hurrying this matter at all but for the fact that we are in the last days of the session, and the passage of some bill of this character is of vital importance.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. It is not my design to follow the argument of the gentleman from Ohio in reference to the necessity or propriety of the passage of this bill. I shall confine myself to two material points involved.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have not yielded the floor. I thought the gentleman from Pennsylvania wanted to make some inquiry.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I thought the gentleman was through.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am willing to yield for any suggestion or reasonable amendment.

Mr. COFFROTH. If the gentleman from Ohio will permit me, I would like to ask him a question as to the fourth section of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to know whether I am in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. STEVENS in the chair.) The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has the floor.

Mr. SCHENCK. I inquire of the Chair when I yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Some minutes ago.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have not been off my feet, and was about calling the previous question on concluding. But I said I would yield to any member who desired to ask a question or to make a suggestion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before that the gentleman had stopped, and the Chair did not know whether he intended to begin again.

Mr. SCHENCK. I did not yield the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman stopped.

Mr. SCHENCK. I rounded a period, perhaps. [Laughter.] But I never stopped, and never intended to. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman says he did not intend to yield, he still retains the floor.

Mr. SCHENCK. I did not.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to know whether the gentleman intends to call the previous question on this bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I think that, under the decision of the Speaker, I have the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair supposed that the gentleman from Ohio had concluded his remarks and yielded the floor; but he says that he had only stopped, intending to renew his remarks; and the Chair takes his word for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose the gentleman from Ohio will yield for amendments to the bill. I desire to submit an amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have no disposition to hurry the matter, except on the simple ground of its being a vital matter.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I know it is vital, and hence we should discuss it.

Mr. SCHENCK. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Coffroth] desires to ask me some question about the fourth section.

Mr. BROOKS. I rise to a question of order. If this bill is not before the House, no question can be asked about it, and no amendments offered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No amendments can be proposed, but questions may be asked.

Mr. COFFROTH. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio a single question. The fourth section provides that volunteers shall be accepted in lieu of such drafted men prior to the day appointed for the draft. Suppose A is enrolled and subject to draft, can he at any time prior to the time of the draft being made, put in a substitute who is not his father, brother, or son, and be released?

Mr. SCHENCK. No, sir; but he can assist his neighbors to fill up the quota of the district.

Mr. COFFROTH. Then, as I understand the gentleman from Ohio, no substitutes can be put in, and the only way to escape the draft is by raising the quota of the town or township.

Mr. SCHENCK. That is the idea—to do away with commutation.

Mr. MALLORY. I rise to a question of order. I wish to know in what stage the bill now is?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is to reject the bill.

Mr. MALLORY. May I inquire who made that motion?

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I objected to the bill.

Mr. MALLORY. Then unquestionably the gentleman from Ohio was not entitled to the floor.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to know whether my objection to the bill did not give me the floor in reply to the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would not give the gentleman the floor as long as the gentleman from Ohio said he was only pausing.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. And where does the effect of my objection come in?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio had the floor when I took the chair, and was making his speech without objection. It is too late to object now.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I think I have yielded nothing.

Mr. SCHENCK. Objection was made to the second reading of the bill, and the Speaker then occupying the chair decided that the motion to be put was to reject the bill. I ascertained from him that the motion was debatable, stating that I did not wish so important a motion to be put without some explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the member reporting a bill has the right to the floor upon it, no matter what motion may be made in reference to it.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move the previous question.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask the gentleman to allow me a very few minutes to show why the bill ought to be rejected.

Mr. SCHENCK. You can do that some other time.

Mr. MALLORY. If the motion prevails there will be nothing left to discuss.

Mr. SCHENCK. If the motion prevails, the gentleman will have accomplished his purpose without a speech.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to know whether, if the motion shall not prevail, the bill will be open for amendment?

Mr. SCHENCK. It will. I stated in the outset that I proposed to allow opportunity for amendment, and I insist on my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. STILES demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 75, nays 75, not voting 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Amos, Ancona, Bailly, Augustus C. Baldwin, Bliss, Brooks, James S. Brown, Chanler, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Dawson, Denton, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, English, Finck, Ganson, Grider, Griswold, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Herrick, Hotchkiss, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Knapp, Law, Lazear, Le Blond, Mallory, Marcy, McDowell, McKinney, Middleton, William H. Miller, Daniel Morris, James R. Morris, Morrison, Nelson, Noble, Odell, John O'Neill, Pendleton, Perry, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Ross, Scofield, Scott, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stevens, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Sweet, Wadsworth, Ward, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, and Winfield—75.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Arnold, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Blair, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Broomall, William G. Brown, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Fenton, Frank, Garfield, Gooch, Higby, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburt, Ingersoll, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Knox, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McClurg, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Schenck, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Thayer, Thomas, Tracy, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, and Windom—75.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Brandegee, Clay, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Dumont, Grinnell, Hale, Hall, Charles M. Harris, Holman, Jencks, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, King, Littlejohn, Long, McAllister, McBride, McIndoe, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, Voorhees, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—32.

The SPEAKER voted in the negative.

So the bill was not rejected.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. STEELE, of New York, stated that Mr. KERNAN had paired with Mr. ALLISON.

Mr. McBRIDE stated that he had paired with Mr. HALL.

The bill was then read a second time.

Mr. BLAINE. Is the bill now open for amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, obtained the floor.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment for the purpose of submitting an amendment.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. BLAINE. I move to amend by striking out the first and second sections, and upon that I wish to make a few remarks.

Mr. SCHENCK. Do I understand that I am not entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio did not claim the floor, and the Chair awarded it to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCHENCK. I rose instantly when the vote was announced.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not observe the gentleman, or he would have awarded him the floor as the member reporting the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. The sections which I have moved to strike from the bill are as follows, and I ask the attention of the House while I read them, as I wish every gentleman on this floor to understand their full scope and purport. The bill has been so recently placed on our desks that gentlemen may have neglected to observe its provisions:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That so much of the act entitled "An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, and of the several acts amendatory thereof, as provides for a commutation in money, to be paid by persons enrolled or drafted for military service, in lieu of actually rendering such military service, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and hereafter no payment of money shall be accepted or received by the Government to release any enrolled or drafted man from obligation to perform military duty.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That hereafter no person shall be received or accepted to serve in the Army of the United States as a substitute for any other person liable to military duty and who may have been enrolled or drafted for that purpose, unless such substitute be the father, brother, or son of the person so enrolled or drafted, and for whom he proposes to become such substitute.

This stringent and unprecedented measure is called for, Mr. Speaker, by the Provost Marshal General, upon the assumption that the conscription law as it exists now cannot be made an effective agency in recruiting the ranks of the Army. Upon this point, and it is the really vital point in the controversy, I take issue; and I beg the attention of the House while I review and analyze the facts and figures presented in the letter of the Provost Marshal General upon which the proposed legislation is founded.

The results of the draft in eight districts are given, and they may be very briefly summed up as follows: the total number of men examined was 14,741, of whom 7,016 were exempted under the law for physical disability and other causes. This was about fifty per cent., not higher than the average of exemptions in all cases of draft in this war and in former wars. The number thus left liable to service was 7,725, and this was the total number that could be held if the pending bill should become a law. The actual result was that 2,675 men entered the service in person or by substitute, and 5,050 paid the commutation fee. Thus the Department got something more than one third of all the men liable to service, and in addition received more than a million and a half of dollars in money, which can be applied to the payment of bounties for volunteers. This, then, was the net result of the draft in the eight districts so much complained of. And I presume, sir, the Provost Marshal General exhibited the worst districts from which returns had been made; and in saying this I do not mean to imply any unfairness on the part of that able officer, but simply that he desired and intended to present his case in the strongest possible light.

Now, sir, taking the facts as we find them, I submit, as a matter of common sense and sound judgment, that if the draft is kept running in all the districts of the United States with the precise average result attained in the eight districts referred to more men will be obtained for the Army than could be hoped for under the rigorous law that is now proposed. I do not think there is a sensible man on this floor—and we are all sensible men—who believes that the Government, in the exercise of the most ordinary prudence, would proceed to carry out a compulsory draft of the kind now proposed without taking the precaution to distribute a strong military force to maintain order at the various points where the experience of the past admonishes us that disloyal demonstrations and riotous proceedings might be anticipated. And admitting this much, sir, I ask any gentleman if he presumes that this law would have the effect to produce men in as rapid a ratio as the demand for them would be enhanced by its enforcement? For myself I am free to confess my belief that you would not raise enough additional men to supply the police force that would be required at the headquarters of the conscription districts in certain sections that might be named.

I do not speak in this way, sir, because of any apprehension of disloyal conduct in my own district or State. The sentiment of Maine is loyal to the core, and she has shown her loyalty by complying with patriotic readiness to all demands thus far made upon her for soldiers to recruit the Army, or for sailors to man the Navy. But I might well ask in this connection why a State that has been forward among the foremost in the discharge of every duty should have her citizens subjected to so harsh a measure as that now proposed? At least let us have recreancy alleged, if not proved, before we proceed to impose "pains and penalties" upon communities and States that have never yet failed or faltered in responding to all demands made upon their patriotism and their valor. Do not, I pray you, by any action here proclaim to the world that you have no faith in the loyal people of the United States. Do not allow it to appear, even by implication, that the people need to be goaded and driven into the support of the "people's war"—a war waged for "the rights of the people," and which can only be supported by the willing hearts and the strong arms of the loyal citizens of this country, and which will be supported by them until the object for which the contest was undertaken is fully and finally achieved.

A conscription is a hard thing at best, Mr. Speaker, but the people of this country are patriotically willing to submit to one in this great crisis for the great cause at stake. There is no necessity, however, for making it absolutely merciless and sweeping. I say in my judgment there is no necessity for making it so, even if there were no antecedent question as to the expediency and practicability of the measure. I believe the law as it stands, allowing commutation and substitution, is sufficiently effective if judiciously enforced. It will raise a large number of men by its direct operation, and it will secure a very large amount of money with which to pay bounties to volunteers.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. The gentleman from Maine has forgotten that the law now prohibits the Secretary of War from paying any more $300 bounties.

Mr. BLAINE. No, I am aware of that; but it will be very easy for us to change the law in that respect and give the Secretary the requisite authority, much easier, I think, than you will find it to pass the pending bill. If the two hundred districts in the loyal States were gone through with, arriving at results no better than the average of the eight districts presented by the Provost Marshal General, the result would be the enlistment of nearly seventy thousand men and the securing of $40,000,000 for bounties.

Mr. ODELL. I would call the attention of the gentleman from Maine to the fact that in the draft he gives the result of only the number of men required were placed in the wheel, and not fifty per cent. in addition as provided in the first law enacted; hence there was the greater force in his statement.

The present law now under discussion provides for the addition of fifty per cent. in future drafts.

Mr. BLAINE. Precisely; that fact adds so much to the truth and the strength of what I said, and I am much obliged to the gentleman from New York for the suggestion. His remark brings to my mind a statement which I may as well make in this connection. On the vote taken a few minutes since, on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, "to reject the bill," I voted with the prevailing side in the negative; and I did so because, in my judgment, all the sections, except those which I have moved to strike out, should be passed, especially those sections which allow the drafting of men for one year and authorize anew the addition of fifty per cent. to the number directed to be drawn. And if my motion to amend by striking out the first two sections shall prevail, I shall then cordially support all the remaining provisions of the bill.

As I occupy the floor by the courtesy of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and as I agreed to limit my remarks to fifteen minutes, I have no time to go into a full discussion of the many issues presented by the bill under consideration. I have been able only to glance very hurriedly at one of the main points of the question, and with that I must leave it. Before taking my seat, however, I cannot refrain from asking gentlemen around me whether in their judgment the pending measure, if submitted to the popular vote, would receive the support of even a respectable minority in any district in the loyal States? Just let it be understood that whoever the lot falls on must go, regardless of all business considerations, all private interests, all personal engagements, all family obligations; that the draft is to be sharp, decisive, final, and inexorable, without commutation and without substitution, and my word for it you will create consternation in all the loyal States. Such a conscription was never resorted to but once, even in the French empire under the absolutism of the first Napoleon; and for the Congress of the United States to attempt its enforcement upon their constituents is to ignore the first principles of republican and representative Government.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to call the previous question, but before doing so I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana for a word.

Mr. ASHLEY. I ask the gentleman, before he calls the previous question, to permit me to offer an amendment.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana, who wishes to say a word.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to offer an amendment in the nature of a proviso to the first section of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask to have the amendment read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, however, That before any general draft shall hereafter be made the President of the United States shall, by partial draft, in such States as have not furnished their full quota of men, raise the necessary number of men to equalize the number furnished by the several States, according to their respective quotas, excluding from the computation all such persons as have obtained exemption by the payment of $300, and making the actual number of men furnished the basis of the equalization.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I do not yield for that amendment.

Mr. CHANLER. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. CHANLER. My object in rising to speak to this bill is chiefly to draw the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to the fact that when the present bill, which he seeks now to amend, was before the House a short time since, a strong appeal was made to him to repeal the conscription act, upon the statement that it had been a failure, and that it would continue to be a failure as a means of enrolling and calling out the national forces. The chairman himself now comes forward and acknowledges that it is a failure. Not only does the chairman speak for himself and his committee on this point, but he adds the President and Secretary of War to the number of those who declare the conscription act a failure; and that no doubt may rest on the mind of the country as to the utter failure of this once sovereign remedy for all our losses, we are referred to Executive Document No. 97, on this subject. It is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have the honor to submit for the consideration of Congress a letter and inclosure from the Secretary of War, with my concurrence in the recommendation therein made.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 8, 1864.

WAR DEPARTMENT,

WASHINGTON CITY, June 7, 1864.

SIR: I beg leave to submit to you a report made to me by the Provost Marshal General, showing the result of the draft now going on to fill the deficiency in the quotas of certain States, and recommending a repeal of the clause in the enrollment act commonly known as the $300 clause. The recommendation of the Provost Marshal General is approved by this Department, and I trust that it will be recommended by you to Congress. The recent successes that have attended our arms lead to the hope that, by maintaining our military strength, and giving it such an increase as the extended field of operations may require, an early termination of the war may be attained. But to accomplish this it is absolutely necessary that efficient means be taken, with vigor and promptness, to keep the Army up to its strength, and supply deficiencies occasioned by the losses sustained by casualties in the field. To that end resort must be had to a draft; but ample experience has now shown that the pecuniary exemption from service frustrates the object of the enrollment law by furnishing money instead of men.

An additional reason for repealing the $300 clause is, that it is contemplated to make the draft for a comparatively short term. The burden of military service will therefore be lightened, but its certainty of furnishing troops is an absolute essential to success.

I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

EDWIN M. STANTON,

Secretary of War.

To the President.

WAR DEPARTMENT,

PROVOST MARSHAL GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, June 6, 1864.

SIR: In accordance with the amended enrollment act approved February 24, 1864, and your orders on the subject, I am now conducting a draft in various sub-districts for their respective deficiencies on quotas of troops heretofore assigned. The results of this draft, so far as shown by reports to this date, are worthy of attention. They are briefly as follows:

Number of drafted men examined.....	14,741
Number exempted for physical disability....	4,374
Number exempted for all other causes.....	2,632

Total exempted.....	7,016
---------------------	-------

Number paid commutation money.....	5,950
------------------------------------	-------

Number who have furnished substitutes.....	1,416
--	-------

Number held for personal service.....	1,359
---------------------------------------	-------

(This last includes some who may yet pay commutation money.)

Total not exempted.....	7,735
-------------------------	-------

These reports come from sub-districts in eight different States. I invite your attention to the small proportion of soldiers being obtained under the existing law. I see no reason to believe that the Army can be materially strengthened by draft so long as the $300 clause is in force, nor do I think it safe to assume that the commutation paid by a drafted man will enable the Government to procure a volunteer or substitute in his place. I do not think that large bounties by the United States should be again resorted to for raising troops. I recommend that the $300 clause, as it is known, be repealed.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES B. FRY,

Provost Marshal General.

Hon. E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

And notwithstanding the provision of the Constitution which provides fully for furnishing troops and fitting out the armies of the Union in a time of insurrection, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs persistently, and in the grasping spirit of centralization, although finding the whole system of the draft a failure, rather than abandon what will lead to a military despotism, now brings this amendment into the House, and under the specious plea that he is going to ameliorate the condition of the people, that he is going to remedy the evils of a draft, he presses more earnestly than before a measure more objectionable than the first.

It gives to the President not only the power under which he has been acting heretofore, but it gives him the right, whenever he may choose, to call for an additional draft, and by this amendment, to use the language of the eloquent and humane gentleman, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the people are whipped on the one side, and tempted on the other. It is a force measure, brought forward under the very worst auspices, and apparently with the very worst intentions, and consequently cannot fail to produce the most fatal result to the representative system of this Government.

In this connection I feel it my duty to call attention to the fact that a joint resolution which lies over under objection, but which will be brought forward again by the Administration, increases the commutation from $300 to $400, with an additional provision that black men may be used as substitutes, thereby seeking to induce the white race to surrender the power of the sword and layonet into the hands of the black. Under that or a similar resolution, and by virtue of the practical working of this bill, I believe the armies of this country will, in the course of time not far distant, be composed of a majority of blacks, organized into a military system under the control of the Executive, to continue this war for political purposes. The whole country may become one scene of carnage and civil strife to gratify the Executive will, whether of the present incumbent or any other adventurer. Such will be the effect of this bill if the third section is adopted.

The gentleman states that the first section is introduced as a poor man's friend, the means by which the poor man will be enabled to find an easy remedy against the operations of the bill which the Administration first forced upon this House some months ago, and which experience teaches the Administration was an error, costly in blood, costly in treasure, costly to our national fame. This section one is as follows:

That so much of the act entitled "An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, and of the several acts amendatory thereof, as provides for a commutation in money, to be paid by persons enrolled or drafted for military service, in lieu of actually rendering such military service, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and hereafter no payment of money shall be accepted or received by the Government to release any enrolled or drafted man from obligation to perform military duty.

And the second section, the honorable chairman informs us, is a happy expedient drawn from the laws of foreign nations, who are "au fait" in all matters connected with conscription; and by this section he designs to relieve those who are subject to the exigencies of a draft. The section is certainly foreign to all American freemen. Here it is:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That hereafter no person shall be received or accepted to serve in the Army of the United States, as a substitute for any other person liable to military duty and who may have been enrolled or drafted for that purpose, unless such substitute be the father, brother, or son of the person so enrolled or drafted, and for whom he proposes to become such substitute.

Sir, it is not the first time that the horrid example of the European system of government as shadowed forth in the French Revolution has been quoted upon this floor, nor have we reason to expect that it will be the last, but certainly it is unbecoming a representative body of American citizens to bring forward a measure such as this which outrages all the affections of family and ties of blood. Sir, that is a provision worthy of the Military Committee, but utterly unworthy of the American people. They have at all times during this war, fathers, brothers, sons, come forward willingly under the old system of the Constitution, before these hideous monsters of war were developed under your odious plea of military necessity, and fought in the ranks of the Army without any such insult to their patriotism and ties of affection as contained in this section:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States may, at his discretion, at any time hereafter, order a draft under the provisions of the act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1863, and of the several acts amendatory thereto, for soldiers to serve for a less period than three years: Provided, however, That no such draft shall be for a less term of service than one year.

With regard to this third section the chairman of the Military Committee admits that he offers it as a "palliation," to use his own words, to the stringent character of the bill which was previously passed, and which he now seeks to amend by this more cruel enactment. What does it palliate? He proposes to give to the Executive a power unheard of before this Administration came into power. After removing the possibility of any substitutes being furnished except those of the same family, the President is given unlimited control over the lives of every family in the land. In the fourth section he falls back upon the original provision of the Constitution and adopts the old system of volunteering, from which there has never been any reason to depart. But still adhering to the dangerous but favorite principle of centralization, this section assumes a partisan character, and depriving the States of their powers gives extraordinary power to the Executive. It has been fully shown that whatever necessity did exist for resorting to the system of drafting in place of volunteering, it was created by the acts of folly and extravagance of the Administration itself. It is unnecessary to enter into any argument to prove that. The gentleman admits the draft to be a failure. Let us then fall back upon the provision of the Constitution in relation to the raising of troops for the common defense and for the suppression of insurrection. Let us leave to the States the power of organizing their militia for the defense of the country as reserved to them in the Constitution, and do not by an enactment such as is now proposed by this conscription act and the subsequent amendments centralize the whole military power of the nation in the hands of the Executive, and thereby cut off all sympathy and connection between the people of the States and this huge military machine wielded by the General Government. That I maintain to be the great mistake and the great evil of this whole system of draft as inaugurated by this Administration. I am further of the opinion that before the party in power have secured to themselves the conquests and the ends they hope to obtain they will find that the sympathy of the people, which they are now using every means to destroy, will be appealed to in vain, and that the States of this Confederacy, to whom you have offered insult upon insult, and from whom you have taken by usurped authority right after right will in the end demand back from you the rights which you have so outrageously usurped.

Sir, my object in rising will have been accomplished if I have succeeded in presenting a simple and clear view of this subject as it appeared to me upon the statement of the chairman of the Military Committee. This bill strikes down what I and those who think with me believe to be vital in the fundamental law of this country, the right of the States to take part in everything that pertains to their liberties, their existence, and their glory.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, resumed the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I will yield first to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. ASHLEY.]

Mr. ANCONA. I object to the gentleman's yielding unless he yields unconditionally.

Mr. ASHLEY. I desire simply to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed with his remarks.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to say one single word.

Mr. A. MYERS. I would like to ask my colleague to let me offer an amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. I object.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I am sorry I have not the power to extend the courtesy which my colleague asks. I desire to say but a single word in reply to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in reference to this bill.

1. At this time this proposition is not called for.

2. The people throughout the country, whose representatives we are, do not desire the passage of this bill.

3. If the bill did pass this House it would not have any force or effect, through failing to receive the concurrent action of the Senate.

These are the three propositions which I have to state, and which I hope will have that weight which common sense and the good judgment of the House must give them. I move the previous question on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.]

Mr. A. MYERS. I ask the Chair whether, if the first section be stricken out, it will be in order to offer a section in place of it.

The SPEAKER. It will be after the previous question shall be exhausted, which will be when the vote is taken on the amendment.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Have I the right to call for a division of the question? The amendment is to strike out the first two sections.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that a division of the question may be called for.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Then I ask for separate votes on striking out the first and second sections.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered, which was first on striking out the first section of the bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to detain the House by adding much to what has been already said. I endeavored when up before to explain in their order these sections. The bill, as I said before, is to be considered as a whole. I think that if passed it should be passed in its entirety.

Mr. HARDING. I rise to a question of order. The amendment was offered by the gentleman from Maine. Does that give the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs the right to conclude the debate?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio having reported the bill, and not having spoken on the second reading, cannot be deprived of his right under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does that right exist on each amendment that may be offered?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide questions when they come up. The Chair decides now that the gentleman from Ohio is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SCHENCK. I understand that the question is on the engrossment of the bill.

The SPEAKER. It is on the amendment to strike out the first two sections of the bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. Does the previous question apply to the amendment?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. SCHENCK. The previous question does not apply to the engrossment?

The SPEAKER. It does not. The gentleman has the right to speak one hour, and may do so either now or after the engrossment.

Mr. SCHENCK. The first question will be on striking out the commutation, and the second on striking out the substitution. In regard to the commutation I have nothing to add to what I said before, except to allude generally to the vital necessity of doing something to make the draft more efficacious than it has been.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANLER] who has just addressed the House is mistaken in supposing that I am inconsistent in the positions which I have taken in reference to the existing law and to this proposed law. I have never believed that the old enrollment law passed by the last Congress was perfect. I believed then that in passing it we were doing the best we could at the time, nor did I believe that in amending it during the present Congress we were doing enough. But the conviction is most thorough on my mind, and it is spreading throughout the country, it is admitted by the war-making power as well as by all members of the House who are anxious to do something to obtain men to put down this rebellion, that some more stringent measure is necessary in order to bring about that condition of things by which men shall be obtained for the Army.

Mr. GANSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if there are any States that have failed to respond to the calls hitherto made by the President of the United States; whether the State of New York is not four thousand ahead of all calls; and whether there is any necessity for having any more stringent measure.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will answer that by saying that under the call made in the district referred to, there are upward of five thousand out of fourteen thousand who responded to the call by paying their $300 commutation. And I will go further and remark, as to the gentleman's State, that if they have answered all the calls made hitherto and have an excess so much the better for them, because upon the calls to be made hereafter their excess will be credited upon their quota.

In reference to the commutation clause being stricken out I notice that there are gentlemen here who say they are in favor of striking that out and of still retaining the second section. Well, sir, I am in favor of retaining the second section if the section repealing the commutation is stricken out. It is true, so far as being an assistance to a certain class of men is concerned, it may be desirable to allow drafted men to obtain substitutes, but it is objectionable upon another ground. If you strike out the commutation, and leave the matter of obtaining substitutes open, the price of substitutes will be run up to ten or fifteen hundred dollars, so high that but a small portion of the people can afford to obtain substitutes. It will therefore be no benefit to the larger portion of the people. I am therefore of the opinion that whether this commutation clause is stricken out or not the section providing that there shall be no substitutes hereafter, perhaps on the whole had better be retained, with the provision allowing a substitute in the case of a member of a family stricken out.

But, sir, as I have said to the House, to make the bill of value, to make it efficient, it should be taken as a whole. If gentlemen will look it through as a whole they will find that it presents a most efficient plan for securing volunteers. The effect will be to organize every town, ward, or precinct into a committee to promote volunteering. It makes it directly for the interest of every man subject to draft to encourage volunteering. Every one, no matter what his condition is, will be required to assist to the last man in making up the full quota, because he is subject to draft, and if a draft is held in his town or ward and he is drafted, he has no alternative but to go. I hope, therefore, that gentlemen will look at the bill as a whole; that they will take the section prohibiting substitutes in connection with that striking out the commutation clause, and these sections in connection with the other sections of the bill, and that they will see that to strike out the commutation clause will render all the other sections comparatively valueless. But I think that on the whole, for a bill that provides, if need be, to force men reluctantly and involuntarily into the service of the Government to which they owe allegiance, it is as mild and liberal a bill as can be framed. It provides a condition of things by which almost every town or ward will obtain the requisite number of volunteers, and a draft will be avoided.

I will now yield to my colleague, [Mr. GARFIELD,] who desires to occupy the attention of the House for a very few minutes before the vote is taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman that he cannot yield the floor unless he yields it unconditionally.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then I yield the floor unconditionally.

Mr. ASHLEY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave for my colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] to be heard for fifteen minutes upon this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I object.

Mr. GANSON. I desire to ask the Speaker whether this bill will come up in the evening session.

The SPEAKER. It will not. The whole of the evening has, by unanimous consent, been set apart for the consideration of the Pacific railroad bill. If that bill should, however, be disposed of before the close of the evening session, the bill in reference to the establishment of a naval depot at Cairo would then come up; and if that were out of the way, this bill would come up.

The question was taken on striking out the first section of the bill; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 100, nays 50, not voting 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Alley, Ames, Ancona, Baily, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Blaine, Bliss, Boutwell, Brooks, Broomall, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Chanler, Freeman Clarke, Coffroth, Cravens, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Eliot, English, Fenton, Finck, Frank, Ganson, Gooch, Grider, Griswold, Hale, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Horrick, Holman, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Hutchins, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Knapp, Law, Lazear, Le Blond, Mallory, Marcy, McDowell, McKinney, Middleton, Samuel F. Miller, William H. Miller, Daniel Morris, James R. Morris, Morrison, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Nelson, Noble, Odell, John O'Neill, Patterson, Pendleton, Perham, Perry, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Robinson, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, Scofield, Scott, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stevens, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Sweet, Thomas, Upson, Wadsworth, Ward, William B. Washburn, Webster, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton, A. White, Joseph W. White, Williams, and Winfield—100.

NAYS—Messrs. Arnold, Ashley, Baxter, Beaman, Blair, Blow, Boyd, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Cole, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Farnsworth, Garfield, Higby, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Knox, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McClurg, Moorhead, Morrill, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, John H. Rice, Ross, Schenck, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Thayer, Tracy, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburne, Wilder, Wilson, and Windom—50.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Brandegee, Clay, Cox, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Dumont, Grinnell, Hall, Charles M. Harris, Jenckes, Kasson, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, King, Littlejohn, Long, McAllister, McBride, McIndoe, William H. Randall, James S. Rollins, Smith, Spaulding, Starr, Stebbins, Voorhes, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—32.

So the first section of the bill was stricken out.

During the vote, Mr. ALLISON stated that he was paired with Mr. KERNAN.

Mr. MOORHEAD stated that his colleague, Mr. KELLEY, had been called home by sickness in his family.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question then recurred on the motion to strike out the second section.

Mr. SCHENCK withdrew the demand for the yeas and nays.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ELDRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the first and second sections were stricken out; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROOMALL. I submit a substitute for the bill.

The SPEAKER. It will be considered as pending.

Mr. FENTON. I move to amend the fourth section of the bill so that it will read as follows:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the President shall accompany any order for a draft of men for military service with a notice that he will accept volunteers or substitutes in lieu of such drafted men prior to the day appointed for the draft to fill up the quota or any part thereof of any town, township, ward, precinct, or election district, or of any county not so subdivided; and every person so volunteering, in lieu of a man to be drafted, shall be credited to such town, township, ward, precinct, or election district, or county not so subdivided; and if he volunteers or is offered as a substitute for a drafted man and is accepted and mustered into the service for a term of one year, unless sooner discharged, shall receive and be paid by the United States a bounty of $100, and if for a term of two years, unless sooner discharged, a bounty of $200, and if for a term of three years, unless sooner discharged, a bounty of $300, one half of which said bounty shall be paid to the soldier at the time of his being mustered into the service, one fourth at the expiration of one half his term of service, and one fourth at the end of his term of service; and the President in any call or order for a draft shall specify the exact time of service for which such draft is to be made, and the volunteers accepted in lieu of the whole or any part of the quotas to be provided under that draft shall be for not less than the term of service for which that draft is ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHLEY. I move to strike out in the fourth section the words "be credited to such town, township, ward, precinct, or election district," and in lieu thereof to insert these words:

If subject to enrollment, be credited to the town, township, ward, precinct, or election district in which he may be liable to enrollment; if not so subject, to the town, township, ward, precinct, or election district in which he may have volunteered.

I wish merely to call the attention of the House to the fact that the cities take up nearly all of our volunteers. This is designed to credit them where they reside and are enrolled.

Mr. NELSON. Do not the cities pay higher bounties?

Mr. ASHLEY. They do; and that is the way they get men from the counties and townships to which they properly belong.

Mr. NELSON. If they pay the bounty they are entitled to the credit of these volunteers.

Mr. STEVENS. Does the gentleman mean that the men who go to the towns because they pay higher bounties there, shall receive those bounties and then not be credited to those towns?

Mr. ASHLEY. I want the volunteers to be credited where they reside.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 41.

Mr. L. MYERS demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL moved to add the following to the fourth section:

Provided, That no volunteer or substitute under the provisions of this section, who shall be honorably discharged previous to the expiration of the term of his enlistment, shall be entitled to his full bounty for the time of his enlistment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to insert in the fourth section, after the word "service," in the eighteenth line, these words:

But in case of his death when in said service, the residue of said bounty shall be paid to his legal representatives, and in case of his honorable discharge from wounds or sickness incurred in the service he shall receive the full bounty.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move that the bill and amendments be laid on the table. The bill has been so emasculated that it is evident the House does not mean to pass any measure of this kind.

The motion was disagreed to.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is it in order to move to amend by striking out the fourth section?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to strike out the third and fourth sections of the bill. The bill, as my colleague on the committee has said, was presented as a whole, a measure that had no value in it, except the last two sections, unless taken as a whole. The heart is cut out of it, and the head cut off, and with the exception of those two sections I have not only no desire that it should pass, but I believe the mangled trunk would be a deformity, and would seriously injure the efficiency of the present law.

We come before the House to say that the President had informed us, that our own examination of the state of the country also led us to believe, that the Government is in want of men and not of money to fill the ranks of its Army; that the law we have given to the President and the War Department has in the main failed to secure the requisite reinforcements.

It is no longer a question that we cannot retain the commutation clause of the enrollment act and at the same time fill up the Army so as to supply the waste of battle.

Gentlemen, this Congress must sooner or later meet the issue face to face, and I believe the time will soon come, if it has not now come, when we must give up the war or give up the commutation. I believe the men and the Congress that shall finally refuse to strike out the commutation clause, but retain it in its full force as it now is, will substantially vote to abandon the war. And I am not ready to believe, I will not believe, that the Thirty-Eighth Congress has come to such a conclusion.

I think the second section can be stricken out and the bill be serviceable. Perhaps it had better be stricken out. It was not put in to make it palatable to the House, but in the hope that it would be more acceptable to the country.

But when the officers to whom you have committed the safety of the nation ask for adequate instruments to carry on the war, when they tell you the instruments you have given them are not adequate, as the President and the Secretary of War tell you, as the history of the late draft and the one now in progress tells you; when these demands are made and reasons given, if you refuse to grant the aid they need, how have you any right to hope either success or safety? But if you will not give the needed help, at least preserve intact the law you have already made. I hope, therefore, all the sections will be stricken out except the last two.

The hour of half past four having arrived, the House, in pursuance of a previous order, took a recess until half past seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock.

ENROLLMENT LAW.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask the consent of the House to have printed the bill which we have had under consideration to-day, together with the amendments already adopted, and those now pending.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I object unless I can know when action will be taken on the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope my colleague will not object. We can know better, if it is printed, how to act when it comes up for consideration.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Will this give it any precedence?

Mr. STEVENS. None whatever.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Then I will withdraw my objection.

No further objections being made, the bill and amendments adopted and pending were ordered to be printed.

LANDLORD AND TENANT IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, and by unanimous consent, reported back, with amendments, an act (S. No. 138) to regulate proceedings in cases of landlord and tenant in the District of Columbia.

The first amendment was to add to the first section the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of this section, other than that which relates to the attornment of tenant to a stranger, shall apply to contracts made, or to any tenancy existing, prior to the passage of this act, except in case of waste or refusal to pay rent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The second amendment was to insert the following as a new section, after section three:

And be it further enacted, That either party against whom judgment is rendered by a justice of the peace, may appeal from such judgment to the supreme court of the District of Columbia in the same manner as appeals are taken to the said court in other cases; but in cases of an appeal by a defendant, he shall, in addition to the bail required in other cases, recognize in a reasonable sum to the plaintiff, to be fixed by said justice, with sufficient sureties conditioned to pay the intervening damages to the leased property resulting from waste, and intervening rent for the premises; and such appeal shall be tried in the same manner, and further proceedings had therein, as in other cases in said court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to ask the gentleman whether there is any amendment with regard to the time of giving notice?

Mr. WILSON. The time specified by the bill is thirty days.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. Does this bill affect contracts made prior to the passage of the bill?

Mr. WILSON. It affects no contracts made and no tenancy in existence except in cases where the tenant permits the property to waste or refuses to pay the rent.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The House then resumed the consideration of bill of the House No. 438, to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, the pending question being upon the motion of Mr. STEELE, of New York, to reconsider the vote by which the bill was postponed until this evening.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I believe the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. STEELE] was upon the floor when the morning hour expired, when the bill was last under consideration. The gentleman from Indiana will be entitled to resume the floor when the gentleman from New York concludes.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The gentleman from Indiana informed me that he expected to resume the floor and make a speech this evening.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I do not desire to occupy the floor. I will yield it to the chairman of the select committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw the motion to reconsider?

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I do not desire to move it now.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider is pending.

Mr. STEELE, of New York. Then I withdraw it.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Let us wait until the gentleman from Indiana submits his remarks, and then I hope to have the floor for a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. The right of the gentleman from Indiana will be reserved, and other gentlemen can speak until he comes in.

Mr. PRUYN. I should like to make a brief statement about this matter.

Mr. STEVENS. As there are several amendments to be proposed to this bill, I should like to get the one now pending out of the way.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The amendment is an important one, and will have to be voted upon, and there is no quorum here now.

Mr. WILSON. When this bill was up the other day the gentleman from Illinois suggested that it be postponed till to-night, in order that he might have an opportunity to prepare himself to make a speech on it. Why cannot he make his remarks now, as well as at any other time? Why wait until the gentleman from Indiana comes in?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I do not wish to take the place of the gentleman from Indiana. He will be here in a few moments. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. PRUYN. If the gentleman will waive that motion, I should like to make a remark or two.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Well, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. PRUYN. I beg to ask the present position of this question. What is the pending amendment?

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Add at the end of section fifteen the following: And said road shall be a public highway, and shall transport the property and troops of the United States, when the transportation thereof shall be required, free of tolls or other charges.

Mr. PRUYN. I understand that it is proposed to offer to this bill several other amendments of an important nature, and it may perhaps be well at this stage of the discussion to inquire of the chairman of the committee what disposition, if any, is intended to be made in this House of the Senate bill which has come in here. Is it intended to act upon that bill and amend it and send it back to the Senate, or are we to pass a new bill and send that up to the Senate?

Mr. STEVENS. This is the bill originally reported by the committee, and which was recommended to the committee with liberty to report at any time. That is the way we got an opportunity of reporting it back. The Senate bill was referred to the committee but that committee will have no right to report it until it is called again; and, in my judgment, and such is the judgment of others, the committee will not be called again this session. It will therefore be impossible for us to report back that bill. We have had no opportunity to report it so far, and we shall have none hereafter unless we are called again.

Mr. PRUYN. Then the Senate will have to act upon a new bill, and not upon amendments to their own bill.

Mr. STEVENS. That is so.

Mr. PRUYN. I think it is desirable, before further action is had on this bill, that all amendments of an important character which are to be offered should be presented to the House and placed before it, so that gentlemen may know what shape the matter will probably assume, and be prepared to discuss it accordingly. There is one cardinal question in the outset which the House is called upon to determine, and that is by what agency this road shall be built. The company chartered in 1862 was authorized to commence operations whenever $2,000,000 should have been subscribed and ten per cent. or $200,000 paid in on that amount.

The grant by the Government in aid of the work is divisible into two parts; in the first place, the right of way over the whole territory of the United States, wherever the Government still holds land, and a large land grant to the company in addition; and secondly, and which is the most important present aid, a large issue of Government bonds, which the company are to receive and sell for the purpose of enabling them to build the road. I do not recollect what these bonds would amount to, but I think it is entirely safe to estimate them at $100,000,000.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Ninety-five million and eighty-eight thousand dollars.

Mr. STEVENS. The sum is to be $16,000 a mile to the foot of the Rocky mountains, then $48,000 a mile for one hundred and fifty miles, then $32,000 a mile to the base of the Nevada mountains, then $48,000 a mile for one hundred and fifty miles, and then $15,000 a mile until they reach San Francisco; not exceeding in all $100,000,000.

Mr. PRUYN. Substantially then the state of the case is this: that in consideration of $2,000,000 subscribed by individuals, of which ten per cent. has been paid, the Government of the United States gives the right of way and makes a large land grant in aid of this road, and then gives it $100,000,000 in addition. Now, it will be observed in order to secure the faithful application of this fund as far as these individuals are concerned, looking at it in that point of view and without reference to who the individuals are, and taking it for granted, if you please, that the fund will all be rightly and fairly appropriated, they contribute two per cent. only of the money, and no part, of course, of the real estate. If we consider the whole as an investment of $150,000,000, it would be a contribution of one and a half per cent., or at $200,000,000 but one per cent. on the part of the company which undertakes to build this road, toward its construction.

In other words, the Government in fact build the road, and ought to control or own it, and then no land grant could be called for. The Government is the party to be responsible for this outlay when once commenced; and when you begin it you must go through with it, cost what it may, or otherwise lose what you put in. No company can be expected to operate it at a loss.

I believe there is but one opinion—at any rate but little difference of opinion—in this House as to the very great importance of this work, and the importance of constructing it without delay, and in the very best manner. I have looked at it for many years with very deep interest as the great thing to be done to bind together the two extremes of our country. I wish it had been commenced years ago, and it would now have been near completion.

But the question now comes before us to be settled probably at this time, what agency shall we employ which will be the most effective to construct this great work? It is very important as we all know in regard to every enterprise of this kind that it should start right.

The present company has done I believe very little or nothing toward constructing the road. It was not expected when the organization took place that much could be done before this. It was understood quite generally by subscribers to the stock that they were then only to pay in their ten per cent. in order to secure the charter as the time limited by the act of Congress was about to expire, and that the company should do nothing in the way of constructing the road, and should expend nothing that they could possibly avoid, except for the purpose of maps and surveys until Congress should meet, it being admitted on all sides that very important amendments were needed to the charter.

In the shape in which it now stands it is virtually admitted by the company—and I have no doubt it is true—that the company cannot go on and construct this road with the grant in bonds made by the act of 1862. Now, how shall we proceed? Shall we hand this over to gentlemen who contribute one or two per cent. of the amount, with whose appointment we have nothing to do, over whom we have no control except in a very indirect way; shall we hand over this great public work with the large grant attached to it to such a body of men—I care not how wealthy or respectable or influential they may be—or shall we at once in some plain, direct, and efficient manner take charge of it ourselves?

I believe I hazard very little in saying, from conversations with some of the leading men of the country who have taken an interest in this matter, that a board might be organized by the Government, consisting of five, seven, or nine individuals of experience, character, and position, who would, in view of the great public benefits to be conferred by that work, undertake to supervise its construction without any pay. If such a board can be procured, it will work more efficiently, more thoroughly, and more actively than any other organization, at any rate more satisfactorily than any corporate organization such as that which now exists.

It is my purpose, Mr. Speaker, for these reasons briefly stated, with a view of testing the sense of the House as to what the future of this enterprise shall be, how it shall be managed, controlled, and conducted, to offer an amendment to the bill of the character I have suggested. If such an amendment shall be adopted, if the House shall determine that this public work shall be constructed by a board of commissioners to be appointed by the Government, I expect them to move that the bill be referred back to the committee for the purpose of framing it in accordance with the principle thus determined upon. I have not undertaken the labor—for it would be a considerable one—of framing a bill, with all the detail necessary to carry out this principle—wishing the House first to determine whether it will adopt it. If adopted we can very easily frame a bill accordingly.

There is another branch of the matter to which I will refer. If the House shall determine not to adopt this principle but to undertake to amend the charter of the existing company, and give it additional powers and additional grants, it strikes me that some amendment should be made to the present bill with a view of controlling the action of the directors and the future of the company more thoroughly than has been done in the bill before us. I believe I am quite at liberty to state that in these views I am sustained by a number of gentlemen on this floor who have looked at the matter with some care, including those from California. Indeed I may say that at their request I have prepared amendments to this bill calculated—if the principle I have first suggested to the House be not adopted—to carry out the views which I will now very briefly state.

In the first place the present charter, and, I believe, the amendment before us, contemplate that the President of the United States shall fix upon the termini of the road, the eastern end commencing at the one hundredth degree of longitude and terminating at the western end by a connection with the California road.

Now, in the long line of country which this road is to traverse, some sixteen hundred miles, there may be great difference of opinion as to the route which the road ought to pursue. I shall therefore propose an amendment that the President of the United States shall not only fix the termini of the road, but that the maps and surveys of the line shall be submitted to him, and that with the aid and advice of competent engineers he shall fix and determine the whole route or line of the road.

In the next place I am not aware that there has been, and from what has been said I infer there has not been any statement submitted to the special committee showing what this company has thus far done, or whether contracts have been made for the construction of the road, for the purchase of iron, for equipment, or for any other or what purpose. I know nothing of the matter, and have no information in regard to it; but I think it is quite possible that nothing of any importance has been done by the company. Now, it seems to me quite proper that the Government which is about to issue this large amount of bonds to aid in the construction of this road should, in the first place, ascertain what contracts, if any, have been made for the construction of the road; and to meet this point I propose to offer an amendment which shall provide that the company shall submit to the Secretary of the Treasury and Attorney General, before any of these bonds shall be delivered to them, a statement of the contracts, if any, which may have been made for the construction of the road. If they are not satisfactory to those officers I propose to provide that no bonds be issued until the contracts are properly abrogated or modified so as to meet their approval.

Another amendment, and the last which I have thought it desirable to present, is one which authorizes and requires the Secretary of the Treasury and Attorney General to pass upon future construction contracts. The object is that we may thus have some assurance that a corporation which is to receive so large a sum of money from the Government (about ninety-eight per cent. of all they are to expend) are about to expend it in a manner which the donors believe to be judicious. At any rate, it will throw around the matter a judicious and reasonable guard to which, it seems to me, there can be no sound objection.

Such are the amendments which I propose to offer to the bill. They have met the approval of gentlemen who have taken an interest in the matter and at whose request in a great measure I have prepared them. They have received the approval of gentlemen who are more immediately interested in the construction of the road and who feel a deep interest in the speedy and effectual completion of this great work.

With a view, however, of obtaining the sense of the House on the first point to which I called their attention, I propose now to submit an amendment transferring the work to the control of a board of commissioners.

The SPEAKER. There is an amendment to an amendment pending at the present time, and no further amendment is in order.

Mr. PRUYN. I will then have my amendment read as a part of my remarks for the information of the House, and submit it for action hereafter.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

The President of the United States shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a board of commissioners, to consist of seven persons, who shall have and possess all the powers now vested in the Union Pacific Railroad Company under the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; and that said commissioners shall proceed without delay to construct the said railroad and telegraph line as authorized by the said act. The said commissioners shall not be entitled to any compensation for their services, but their necessary expenses, to be audited by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be paid to them respectively.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I propose to say a few words on the bill now before the House for our consideration. Those gentlemen who are familiar with my course in this Congress will not be surprised if I shall advance objections to some of the provisions in this bill. It has been either my misfortune or my fortune to differ with the majority of the House in almost all questions of a character kindred to this. I have been on a different line of legislation to the majority. Recognizing the character of the stupendous struggle in which we have been engaged, and the fact that the last resource of the nation may have to be exhausted to secure the suppression of this hideous and red-handed rebellion, I have felt that all the energies and all the resources of the people should be devoted to that object—that all matters of secondary importance should be subordinated to that great consummation. I am for my country, my whole country, and nothing but my country. I am for it in all its glory, its grandeur, and its power. With the war ended and peace restored, and our country and Government intact, I want to witness no ruin of our national finances and no national bankruptcy; but I hope to see the credit of the nation, as it emerges from this terrific contest with traitors, with its power augmented and its glory still further advanced. While I have been for every appropriation necessary to carry on the war, I have been equally against other appropriations not necessary to that object. I have believed there never was a time when the faithful representative of the people should more vigilantly guard the public Treasury than at present. While the people must be overburdened by necessary taxation to carry on the war, by no vote of mine shall anything be added to the fearful weight of taxation for objects which are not indispensably requisite. In my judgment it is no light thing for us here to vote away the people's money and impose further and lasting obligations on our constituents. In the unheard-of appropriations we are every day making we become accustomed to reckless voting. Millions are now voted away as readily as thousands before the rebellion broke out. It is said that in arms the laws are silent, and I think it may be added that in time of war the voice of reason and the voice of remonstrance may become silent. When the public attention is so much and so naturally engrossed in the events which are now challenging the attention of the civilized world, when every breeze bears to us the sound of victory or disaster, when the land is filled with suffering and sorrow and anguish, when so many noble men are surrendering up their precious lives on the battle-field, when so many sick and wounded and maimed soldiers and sailors are in all our hospitals, illustrating the ghastly horrors of war, it is no wonder that the public attention is so fixed upon matters of such overwhelming and transcendent interest that it is hard to divert to any other channel. It is therefore the time for bad men to scheme and unprincipled men to plot, for men who are callous to all the obligations of patriotism or honor, who would see the grand old ship of State burned to the water's edge, provided they could plunder her before she went down—men who follow in the wake of power, and

"Crook the pregnant hinges of the knee
Where thrift may follow fawning."

Sir, I have no faith in the noisy patriotism of shoddy contractors and none in the men who in these times of trial and tribulation through which our country is passing are scheming and plotting to fill their own pockets while the nation is verging toward bankruptcy. The sublime and unselfish patriotism of our people, who stand like a wall of adamant behind the Government in its support, a people suffering, bleeding, dying for their country, is in magnificent contrast to the flaunting counterfeit everywhere to be seen.

But, Mr. Speaker, this has but little to do with the real question before us, except as an explanation of the reasons why I feel called upon to scrutinize all legislation of this kind, regardless of the plausible guise in which it may be presented to us country members. What is the bill before us? I want to inquire of honorable members of this House what is it proposed we shall enact into a law? What rights of our constituents are we called upon to vote away to-day, and what additional obligations, if any, are we to load them down with in the passage of this bill? Of course it is to be presumed that we are all familiar with the vastly important subject upon which we are called upon to pass. In the course I am to take in this matter I am not to be misunderstood, and I presume other gentlemen do not wish to be misunderstood. The subject of a Pacific railroad is one of great interest to the public. I am the oldest friend of the measure on this floor. I have been its consistent friend ever since it has been before Congress, and voted for it in every shape in which it has been presented. It has been a plank in the platform of the party to which I have the honor to belong. The great work of uniting the Atlantic coast with the Pacific seas and binding the patriotic, loyal, and enterprising people of the western coast to us on this side I have always considered as worthy of a great nation like ours and of the times in which we live. But as a Representative it is my duty to look well to the means by which the object is to be accomplished. Because I am in favor of building a road it does not follow that I am to squander the means of the Government without any security that the work will be done. The interests involved are of such stupendous magnitude as to demand the most vigilant watchfulness on the part of the Government, and if we here fail to guard them we fail in a great duty to the country. If we do not place the guards that are necessary for protection of the Government, the whole works will be exposed to successful attacks, and the object of the whole campaign may fail after involving us in a ruinous expense.

Sir, what is the present law; what were the circumstances under which it was adopted? It is a most liberal law, and made so for the purpose of securing the great object in view. It was passed more than a year after the rebellion broke out, and its liberal provisions were adopted with a view to meet the embarrassed circumstances attendant upon war. Capitalists and others made their estimates and declared that the work could be successfully accomplished under that act. It embraced all the provisions asked for. Let us see, for a moment, what some of them are, and what liabilities the Government assumed under the act, and then examine the proposed amendments in the bill before us. In the first place, by section three of the existing law there is granted for the purpose of building this road, and the telegraph line to go with it, five alternate sections of land per mile on each side of the road, being half of the whole amount of land in a strip of ten miles wide. That of itself is an enormous grant. Then by section five it is provided that on the equipment of forty consecutive miles the Government shall issue six per cent. thirty years' bonds to the amount of sixteen bonds per mile, that is, $16,000, for such section of forty miles. The issue of said bonds and delivery to the company were, ipso facto, to constitute a first mortgage on the whole line of road, telegraph, rolling stock, &c. I desire particular attention to this fact, in view of a provision of the amendment to the bill we are now considering. The company is not compelled, in consideration of what the Government does toward building the road, (and it does almost everything,) to carry the troops, munitions of war, supplies, public stores, &c., free of charge or toll, but is to be charged the same price as private parties. The company is required to file assent to the act, designate the route and file their map in two years from the date of its passage. No man can be a director unless he be the bona fide owner of five shares of the stock, and there is a prohibition against any one man owning more than two hundred shares of the stock. In the existing law Congress not only provided for the building of the main road, but it granted land to certain railroad companies by name, which were to form connections with it. I refer to the Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Western Railroad Company of Kansas, (to which I will presently make further allusion,) the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company, and the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

I have stated the provisions of the fifth section of the act, providing bonds at the rate of $16,000 per mile; but there is a further provision in the eleventh section of the act which gives $48,000 per mile for three hundred miles of that portion of the road most "mountainous and difficult of construction," and to be issued upon the construction of every twenty miles of the road. And then on another portion of the road for two hundred miles, bonds are to be issued at the rate of $32,000 to the mile. In the seventeenth section there is a very important provision to the Government, which reserves twenty-five per cent. of the bonds to be issued until the said road should be entirely completed. The fourteenth section of the act requires the company to complete one hundred miles of the road in two years after filing their assent to the conditions of the act, and one hundred miles per year every year thereafter until the whole is completed.

In the business transactions of life the prudent man gives his closest attention to his liabilities. It behooves the Government to act with as much circumspection and prudence in all transactions of this character as a good business man would exercise under the circumstances. And before we launch out into other obligations, and hurriedly rush to give up all we so prudently and justly reserved in the existing law, I demand to know what our present obligations and liabilities are as fixed by law. Sir, I hold in my hand an official document (Miscellaneous Document of the Senate, Thirty-Eighth Congress, first session, No. 112) which tells the story. It tells to us the story of our already existing obligations under the law. Will gentlemen look at the appalling figures, $95,088,000, being the amount of bonds and interest, besides the untold millions of acres of the public lands granted outright!

Being the total Government expenditure on the completion of the road in 1876, under the law of 1862, for bonds issued, and interest paid on the same to December 31, 1876, excepting those bonds issued in that year, on which interest would be due December 31, 1877.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it becomes vastly important for us to know how this company stands in relation to the building of the road and in relation to the Government before we act further and before we further commit the country to it. It is an organization of our own creation, and for one I propose to scrutinize the demand which it now makes upon Congress before it has been fairly warmed into life.

What is the present status of the company and the Government under the law? The company is organized. It has its stockholders, its president, directors, and officers. The question of the good faith of its organization has been raised. Has no one man more than the amount of stock limited by law, that is, two hundred shares? Are all the directors owners, bona fide, of the amount of stock required? On the other hand, is it not notorious that one single individual owns or controls a majority of the stock, and has organized the company in such a way as to completely control it; and is it not alleged that there are directors in the board who are not bona fide owners of a single dollar of stock? And it must be understood that under the existing law parties who have subscribed for $1,001,000 worth of stock (the whole amount subscribed being only $2,000,000) can control the whole concern. While the Government is liable for nearly $100,000,000, and has donated millions upon millions of acres of public land to this great work, yet this entire organization has gone into the hands of parties who have put in but a trifle over one per cent. of the whole amount that the Government is liable for. And the Government is utterly without any controlling voice in the direction of this company, as it has but two directors out of the whole number. Does it not seem, therefore, that the Government is "left out in the cold" in the arrangement as it now stands? But gentlemen point us to the long list of the present board of directors, who are men of well-known integrity and of capital; but I desire to ask what number of these men of integrity and capital who appear in the list as directors are active and managing men controlling and directing the action of the company? Such directors as General Dix, Mr. Opdyke, A. A. Low, W. B. Ogden, Nathaniel Thayer, J. Edgar Thompson, J. F. D. Lanier, George Griswold, J. V. L. Pruyn, and Auguste Belmont, have either resigned their positions or refuse to take any part in the management of the affairs of the company, while the real management is in the hands of a set of Wall street stock-jobbers who are using this great engine for their own private ends, regardless of what should be the great objects of the company and of the interests of the country. Who are the men who are here to lobby this bill through? Have the men of high character and of a national reputation whose names were at an earlier period connected with this enterprise been here, animated by a commendable public spirit and by motives of patriotism, to ask us to pass this bill? I have not heard of such men being here for that purpose, but on the other hand the work of "putting the bill through" has gone into the hands of such men as Samuel Hallett and George Francis Train—par nobile fratrum.

What was required to be done under the law and what has been done? The general route was to be designated in two years, and the map was to be filed in two years from the date of the act. See section seven of the act. The two years will expire on the 1st day of July, ten days hence, and neither of these provisions has been complied with, and the bill we are now considering extends the time for both of these objects for one year more. Section fourteen of the act provides that one hundred miles of road shall be built by the company in two years from the acceptance of the charter, which took place June 23, 1863, one year ago. Though one half of the time has expired not one rod of the main road has been completed, and I am told no contracts entered into for its construction, and all that has been done has been the purchase of iron enough to build ten miles of the road. The company so far has utterly failed to perform its part. Such being the situation of this company and its relations to the Government, I ask the attention of the House to what is demanded of us by this bill in behalf of the said company.

I do not know that I have any objections to the first three sections of the bill, but the fourth section amends the act by doubling the quantity of land to the company. It also provides for amending the seventh section, so that land within twenty-five miles of the designated route shall be withdrawn from preemption, instead of fifteen miles. And now I read the fifth section of the bill before us, and I call particular attention to its provisions:

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the time for designating the general route of said railroad, and of filing the map of the same, and the time for the completion of that part of the railroads required by the terms of said act of each company, be, and the same is hereby, extended one year from the time in said act designated; and that the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California shall be required to complete twenty-five miles of their said road in each year thereafter, and the whole of the State line within four years, and that only one half of the compensation for services rendered for the Government by said companies shall be required to be applied to the payment of the bonds issued by the Government in aid of the construction of said roads.

You will perceive, Mr. Speaker, that the time for designating the general route and filing the map is extended one year, but the Central Pacific Railroad Company is only required to build twenty-five miles of road per year instead of fifty, as now required by law; and instead of the compensation due the company for services rendered to the Government being applied to the payment of the bonds issued in aid of the construction of the roads, one half only, by this bill, is to go in that direction, and the other half is to be paid by the Government to the company—a proposition that I cannot agree to. Section six of this bill provides for the absolute repeal of the proviso to the fourth section of the present law, which proviso is as follows:

"That no such commissioners shall be appointed by the President of the United States unless there shall be presented to him a statement, verified on oath by the president of the said company, that such forty miles have been completed in the manner required by this act, and setting forth with certainty the points where such forty miles begin and where the same end, which oath shall be taken before a judge of a court of record."

In lieu of this provision, so necessary to guard the public interest, it is provided by section six of this bill as follows:

And the President of the United States is hereby authorized, at any time after the passage of this act, to appoint for each and every of said roads three commissioners, as provided for in the act to which this is amendatory; and the verified statement of the president of the California company, required by said section four, shall be filed in the office of the United States surveyor general for the State of California, instead of being presented to the President of the United States; and the said surveyor general shall thereupon notify the said commissioners of the filing of such statement, and the said commissioners shall thereupon proceed to examine the portion of said railroad and telegraph line so completed, and make their report thereon to the President of the United States, as provided by the act of which this is amendatory. And such statement may be filed, and such railroad and telegraph line be examined and reported on by the said commissioners, and the bonds may be issued, and the lands may be set apart, located, entered, and patented, as provided in this act and the act of which this is amendatory, upon the construction by said railroad company of California of any portion of not less than twenty consecutive miles of their said railroad and telegraph line, upon the certificate of said commissioners that such portion is completed as required by the act of which this is amendatory.

This section, after repealing the provision for bidding the President to appoint commissioners until a verified statement is presented to him by the president of the company that forty miles of road have been completed, provides for a different mode of getting the verified statement, so far at least as the California company is concerned, and requires the oath to be filed in the surveyor general's office of California instead of being presented to the President. But the real gist and animus of the section is to enable the company to get the bonds upon the "construction" of twenty miles of the road anywhere, instead of forty consecutive miles, the points of beginning and ending being required to be set forth with certainty, as by the present law.

Now I will ask the House to look over with me the seventeenth section of the present law and see the provision which reserves twenty-five per cent. of the bonds issued in this behalf in the Treasury of the United States, undelivered "until said road and all parts thereof are entirely completed." This wise provision, so just to the Government, is repealed outright by the seventh section of the bill before us, and no portion of the bonds whatever are to be retained but all are to go to the company. The fifth section of the law provides for the issuing of bonds when the commissioners shall certify to the completion and equipment of forty miles of the road and telegraph. Who will contend that this is not a just provision to the Government, and one that ought to be adhered to, if we pretend to look to the interests of the nation? But, sir, mark you how this is got rid of by the extraordinary provisions of the eighth section of the bill before us to-day.

I will read this eighth section, and then scrutinize its provisions:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of facilitating the work on said railroad, and of enabling the said company as early as practicable to commence the grading of said railroad in the region of the mountains, between the eastern base of the Rocky mountains and the western base of the Sierra Nevada mountains, so that the same may be finally completed within the time required by law, it is hereby provided that whenever the chief engineer of the said company, and said commissioners, shall certify that a certain proportion of the work required to prepare the road for the superstructure on any such section of twenty miles is done (which said certificate shall be duly verified) the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required, upon the delivery of such certificate, to issue to said company a proportion of said bonds, not exceeding two thirds of the amount of bonds authorized to be issued under the provisions of the act, to aid in the construction of such section of twenty miles, nor in any case exceeding two thirds of the value of the work done. The remaining one third to remain until the said section is fully completed and certified by the commissioners appointed by the President according to the terms and provisions of the said act, &c., &c.

Here, instead of having forty miles of your road completed before you let go your bonds, it is coolly proposed that, upon a certificate that the road is prepared for the superstructure, before a rail is laid on any section of twenty miles, the Secretary of the Treasury is required to issue bonds not exceeding two thirds of the amount authorized to be now issued, and not to exceed two thirds of the value of the work done. What does all this mean? It means that the company shall be permitted to go on and do certain grading on the road, not putting it anywhere in the neighborhood of completion, get two thirds of the whole amount of bonds per mile which are authorized by law, and leave the road unfinished, put the bonds into its pocket, and leave Uncle Sam to whistle for his money and his railroad.

I come now to the tenth section of the bill, and I confess to a sort of admiration of the sublime audacity which parties must have to come here and ask Congress to enact such a provision into a law. I have called attention to other provisions of an extraordinary nature, but this proposed enactment throws all others far into the shade, and stands out in bold relief as an indication of the "base uses" that this company have conceived that Congress may be put to in their behalf. I carefully read the section that every gentleman may know its exact meaning and purport:

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That section five of said act be so modified and amended that the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and any other company authorized to participate in the construction of said road, may issue their first mortgage bonds on their respective railroads and telegraph lines to an amount not exceeding the amount of the bonds of the United States authorized to be issued to said railroad companies respectively. AND THE LIEN OF THE UNITED STATES BONDS SHALL BE SUBORDINATE TO THAT OF THE BONDS OF ANY OR EITHER OF SAID COMPANIES HEREBY AUTHORIZED TO BE ISSUED ON THEIR RESPECTIVE ROADS, PROPERTY, AND EQUIPMENTS. And said section is further amended by striking out the word "forty" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "on each and every section of not less than twenty."

Now, it will be recollected that the fifth section of the existing law provides for the repayment of the bonds issued to the company, and declares that the issue and delivery of them to the company shall ipso facto constitute a first mortgage on the whole line of road and telegraph, together with the rolling stock. This was the security which Congress had a right to demand of any company that should be organized. It was its duty to require it, unless it was intended to surrender up everything and place the most gigantic interests at the feet of the company without control and without challenge. We donated, as I have before stated, millions upon millions of acres of the public lands for this purpose; then we agreed to give our bonds for the amount, with the interest thereon, of $96,000,000, and if Congress had required less than a first mortgage as its security, it would in my judgment have been derelict in duty to the country, whose interests in this regard it can alone protect. What is now proposed by this amendment? I demand that gentlemen shall look at it; let the mirror be held up to nature. Nothing less than that the Government, with its liability of a hundred millions, shall relinquish its first mortgage and subordinate its lien to the liens of all the companies created for building the road. The bonds of the United States are to be issued to the company, and the Government is to have no prior lien for its security; but by this provision the company representing as it may but one per cent. or a little over of the amount that the Government is liable for, is to subordinate that Government to its own interests, raise money on the security of the means that the Government has furnished, give a first mortgage for the security of that money, and leave the United States as a second mortgagee, obliged to pay off the first mortgage before it can be in a position to take advantage of any security there might by possibility be as a second mortgagee. But who is wild enough to believe that should the provisions of this section become a law the remaining security of the Government will be worth a straw? It is worse than idle to contend that we shall have any security left for all our liability if this bill shall pass. And further, by the fifth section of the law bonds cannot be issued till forty consecutive miles of the road are fully completed and equipped. It is now proposed by this tenth section to strike out forty and make it twenty. This company, not content with snatching from the Government the security it now holds for the bonds it issues, cannot even wait to finish the forty miles of road at present required before grabbing what is proposed to put into their hands, but they must cut it down so that they can go in on twenty miles. Sir, on my responsibility as a Representative, I pronounce this as the most monstrous and flagrant attempt to overreach the Government and the people that can be found in all the legislative annals of the country. When we look at the original law with all its liberal and just provisions, when we look at the company organized under it and see how far it has failed to meet its proper obligations, and consider the extraordinary amendments here proposed, are we not filled with astonishment at what is demanded of us as the guardians of the people's rights? Indeed may we now exclaim:

"Can such things be,
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder?"

I have said I am a friend to the Pacific railroad, and that friendship has been proved by my official action in this House for the last ten years. I want to see that magnificent enterprise completed at the earliest moment, and anything the Government can properly do in this time of war to urge forward the object I am in favor of. But because I am in favor of it I am not going blindly for any projects that may be thrust forward by interested parties; projects that will take the means of the Government and not secure the end desired. I will never consent to yield what is demanded by this bill. I believe the road will never be built under the present management even if the bill shall pass, and I desire to place that conviction upon the record here to-day. I warn the true friends of the road, I warn Congress and the people what will be the result. The present directors of the company hold for three years, and the whole business of the directors is done by an executive committee of the board who hold for the same time. The real state of the case seems to be that the executive committee is the board of directors, and one man is the executive committee.

I have said I would again advert to the Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Kansas Road Company, to which a grant was made by the existing law, but it is not material to the object I have in view in making these remarks. This has been a separate organization, and the same fate has befallen it as will, I fear, overtake other and like companies. There are, I understand, no less than three different organizations, and everything connected with the road is in the most inextricable confusion, with litigation piled mountains high, different parties fighting over the matter like dogs over a bone.

I believe a different state of things exists with the California company, and it is on that side that nearly all the work has been done, and done in good faith; but the fate and destiny of that company must abide that of the others.

To the first, second, and third sections of the bill I now see no valid objections, and I do not know that I would object to the twelfth and fourteenth sections. The thirteenth section is a great improvement on the existing law, but I do not believe it goes far enough. The objectionable features of the bill are very objectionable, while the others are of but little value. Unless there shall be very material amendments adopted, I shall vote against the bill.

MR. PRICE. I have no speech to make particularly upon this bill, yet I have thought that it might be well enough for some one who is upon the special committee on this subject to make some observations in reference to the operations of this road.

I am a little astonished at the proposition made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PRYOR] in reference to this matter—a proposition coming from a gentleman professedly a friend of the enterprise, proposing at this day, without so much as "by your leave, sir," to take away the entire franchise from a company which have this matter in charge, who have subscribed the stock, have paid the money contemplated by law, have complied in every respect with the requirements of their charter. I say I am surprised that under these circumstances a proposition should be made to take away at one fell swoop the entire control of the road with all its franchises, and leave them without remedy or redress. I do not know that it is necessary to spend much time upon that subject, for I have not persuaded myself that the proposition was made in good faith, or that it will be seriously entertained. I shall therefore say nothing further in reference to it, for my object is not to kill time, nor to kill the bill by talking it to death, for after what has taken place this evening, if that object is to be accomplished, it will not need help from me or any other friend of the enterprise.

I wish now to pay some little attention to the remarks made by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN.] I must congratulate him on the great interest he takes in the condition of the country at this particular time. I am much pleased to find some gentleman upon this floor who is willing at the risk of his life and his honor to guard the Treasury of these United States when there are so many contractors with their arms into it clear up to the shoulder. I begin to believe there is some hope of salvation for the country when I can array on this side of the question such an able advocate as my friend from Illinois.

But there is one strange thing about his course at this time. He proposes to guard the Treasury when there is no attack made upon it. He proposes to stand as sentinel when there is no foe near or far off. He proposes to save money from going out of the Treasury when nobody asks for any money to be taken out of the Treasury. I beg the gentlemen who compose this House to mark well what I say, for there is nothing I say that I cannot prove from the record. The gentleman from Illinois has gone over this bill section by section and paragraph by paragraph, and he has failed to put his finger upon a single item in these amendments to the original charter of the company where we ask for a single additional dollar. I am either right or wrong in the declaration that not an additional dollar is

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1864.

NEW SERIES.....No. 198.

asked for by this bill. If I am wrong, now is the time and here is the place to correct it. And I wish particularly to call the attention of the House to the fact that there is no attempt here to take a dollar or a dime from the Treasury other than that proposed by the original law.

Now I want to say parenthetically, Mr. Speaker, or in any other way, that these amendments, fourteen in number, are the result of the investigations of the special committee of thirteen for the last six months. That committee of thirteen is composed of some gentlemen who have had some experience of railroading, and who know something about what it takes to build a railroad in time and money. Six months' labor produced these fourteen amendments.

If you believe the gentleman from Illinois these amendments are not only very weak but must be very wicked. If he is right this bill not only will destroy the Treasury but will uproot the very foundations of society and civil government. I overheard a conversation between some gentlemen near me in which it was said that if these things charged by the gentleman from Illinois against this bill are true, then it ought not to pass. I do not wonder at these remarks. If sound goes for sense, any gentleman coming into this Hall and hearing the denunciations of the gentleman from Illinois against these amendments of the committee must have concluded that the committee had been devising ways and means during the entire six months for the purpose of robbing the Treasury and destroying the Government.

Now, I have the idea that the gentlemen who are upon that committee are moderately loyal and moderately honest, and that they do not intend to rob the country or to destroy the Government. That is my idea. There are twelve other gentlemen on the committee, and they can speak for themselves. So far as I know them that is my conclusion, that they are not only men of fair ability but of average honesty, and have no design upon the Government or the Treasury.

The original bill was passed for the purpose of the construction of a Pacific railroad. At the time of its passage it was the impression that the amount of the Government subsidy was sufficient to build that road. I need not say to the members of this House that since the passage of that law the prices of labor and material have gone up from fifty to one hundred per cent. and that an amount of Government subsidy amply sufficient to construct the road at that time is insufficient and inadequate at this time. If the members of the House think it proper under the circumstances not to grant further time and not to grant further facilities to this company for the construction of this road, (for not an additional dollar is asked,) then these amendments must be voted down.

In reference to carrying the troops of the Government, I need only say that the bill contemplates—and, if I am not mistaken, specifies in terms—that the company shall carry the troops and munitions of war of the Government at all times when called upon to do so; and the compensation for doing so shall be credited to the company on the loan the Government makes in these bonds. If I am not right in this, this is the time and place to correct me. It proposes nothing new in reference to that. It leaves that matter, as I understand it, just where it was before, and, as a matter of course, if it was right at the time it was passed it cannot be wrong now.

Now, a word in reference to the honesty of the company that is organized for the purpose of prosecuting this work. I am only acquainted with a part of the company and not very particularly acquainted with any of them. I do not know anything against the honesty of anybody connected with the road. I do know some men who are directors and officers of the company who have the reputation of being honest men, and good railroad men. The gentleman from Illinois, in enumerating certain individuals whom he said had nothing to do with the company, included in that enumeration General Dix. I think he has forgotten or lost a part of the record of the facts connected with this transaction. I think that General Dix is president of the road now, and if so he must certainly be connected with it, and I presume he is a stockholder. I do not know that he is, and I only state what I know to be facts. I only wish to disabuse the minds of members and let them know that General Dix is connected with the road; and he has had something to do with railroading, and I believe he is esteemed a tolerably honest man. He was the first president of the road elected, and, as I understand it, he is president to-day, so that that part of my friend's objection falls to the ground, and, worse than that, it proves that he is either mistaken about this matter or never knew anything about it, either of which suppositions is fatal to his argument.

The gentleman from Illinois charges against this company (and I am not its attorney and have never seen its books) that one man owns all the stock. He did not tell us how he knew it. He did not tell us that he had seen the books. I undertake to say, without having seen the books, and I say it without fear of successful contradiction here or elsewhere, that that statement lacks the very important ingredient of truth. I do not mean it in an offensive sense. I mean that the gentleman is mistaken about it, or did not state the facts.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I did not say that one man owned all the stock.

Mr. PRICE. Well, I understood the gentleman to say so; or at least that one man controlled it; his language, I am told, was, "Is it not notorious that one man owns all the stock?" Suffice it to say that one man does not own all the stock, and until it is proved that one man controls the company I do not think the charge ought to be made here. I believe, although I am not a lawyer, that the principle of law is that a man is presumed to be innocent until you prove him guilty. There is no proof here of that statement, and I have yet to learn that denunciations and assertions and declarations, however loud and emphatic they may be, amount to proof.

But, says the gentleman from Illinois, the maps are not filed and hence the company has not complied with the law. Well, I presume the maps are not filed. I do not know whether they are or are not, but I do know the fact that the time for filing the maps has not yet arrived, and a contract is not supposed to be violated until the time fixed as the limit shall have expired. That time has not expired according to the gentleman's own showing, and yet the company are arraigned here in the high council chamber of the nation for a failure to comply with their contract when the time fixed by the contract has not yet expired! I ask how much fairness there is in such a charge?

But in connection with that statement the gentleman says that the company has done nothing. Now, does he mean what he says? Does he mean that the company has done nothing, or does he use the expression in a qualified sense? If he means that the language shall convey just exactly the meaning that it would seem to me to have on paper, then I say that he has forgotten the facts again and talked around the truth, because the company has done something. It has spent four times as much as the gentleman from Illinois and myself are both worth or ever will be. They had expended three months ago—I do not know how much they have expended since—according to their certified statement, $800,000. Is that no money? I grant that it would be considered no money according to the practice in this House when we come to vote appropriations; but out in the country where my friend and I live $800,000 is regarded as a considerable amount of money, even in greenbacks.

The gentleman says there has been no statement filed before the special committee. Now, there are twelve members of the committee here besides myself, and they will bear me witness when I say that there was a statement laid before that committee, and that it was examined by that committee, showing what the company had done up to the time that statement of facts and figures was laid before the committee. What, then, I ask has become of the statement of the gentleman from Illinois when he says that no statement of the proceedings of the company has been filed?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I made no such statement.

Mr. PRICE. I believe the first thing that a lawyer learns is to deny. The gentleman from Illinois says he did not say it, and that is enough. I understood my friend from Illinois to say that no statement had been filed with the special committee.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Oh, no, sir; I said nothing of the kind, and I never thought of anything of the kind.

Mr. PRICE. I will take my friend's denial. And I say to the House that there is a statement showing what the company has done from the date of its organization till the time this statement was filed; and it is as plain and fair and honest-looking a paper as any man has ever seen, and the company is entitled to credit for it.

Mr. VAN VALKENBURGH. With the permission of my friend from Iowa I will state that there are eighty miles of the eastern division graded, and twenty miles of it already in running order; that railroad iron for one hundred miles has been purchased at a rolling-mill in Pennsylvania, and is now being delivered; and that on the 4th of July the road from Kansas City to Lawrence—forty miles—will be completed and in running order. I make the statement in answer to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that he should not make such a statement as that, because it will spoil the speech of my friend from Illinois. [Laughter.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to answer what has been said by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. VAN VALKENBURGH.] The road which he says is to be in running order at a given time is not the road that we are talking about. It is the Leavenworth and Kansas road, which is called the eastern division of the Union Pacific road. I know something about that railroad. I know something about its history, and about the litigation that has been going on about it.

Mr. VAN VALKENBURGH. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois, I will say that this road to which the gentleman alludes is recognized in this bill as the eastern division of the Pacific railroad, and is the same that my friend from Illinois has been adverting to in his remarks this evening.

Mr. PRICE. I am glad that gentlemen have come to my assistance in this matter, for it "makes assurance doubly sure." I have had a paper handed to me—and, as I have no written speech, I am very much obliged to gentlemen to furnish me with one—by a gentleman from Missouri, who is not on the special committee and who has nothing to do with the road. This paper says that "twenty-five miles of this road are in running order, and that iron for fifty miles more has been paid for." And yet the gentleman from Illinois says that nothing has been expended. I have just had handed to me the report of the proceedings of the company which was laid before the special committee giving a detailed account of everything that has been done by that company from its organization up to the time the committee first met.

The directors of the company have followed up the preliminary surveys by contracting for rails, ties, locomotives, and cars. And yet, says my friend from Illinois, nothing has been done. The report reads differently. The facts of the case are altogether of a different character. The expenditures for these objects within the period covered by the report amount to $800,000. I knew I was not mistaken in the figures. I have also seen statements of the surveys on at least two different roads. Yet my friend says that nothing has been done. If that were so the position which he takes might be correct. But if the facts are diametrically opposite to these presentations of the gentleman from Illinois, then the company is entitled to some consideration for having done what it could do under these circumstances. I am informed on good authority that not only has the company done this, but it has purchased rolling stock and a locomotive for the work. I know that these men have been busy ever since the organization of the company.

The gentleman from Illinois, as a point in his speech, asks why was not this company organized sooner? I have only to say to gentlemen that the subscription books were opened at the time designated by the law, and remained open for the time directed and until the last hour fixed by law for closing them. Then the books were closed, the stock having been subscribed to enable the company to organize under the act.

Now, whose fault is it? I did not take any stock, you did not take any stock. Somebody had to take the stock and pay the money, or nothing would have been done. I undertake to say that no gentleman will controvert the position that the men who took the stock, paid the money, and organized the company, ought to be recognized as the company, and ought to be recognized as the proper persons to receive the bonds and carry on the work. If the gentlemen who were inserted in the original bill as corporators did not take the stock is it your fault or mine? Is it the fault of the men who did take the stock and organize the company? I think not. It is a well-known fact that men who are in other railroad companies, and who organize them, are not the men who want to take stock. I make the assertion that no gentleman who has ever invested money in a railroad company will be anxious to embark in it again. I do not think any gentleman here will controvert that position. If there be any gentleman here who thinks differently, I will now give way to him to express his dissent. If there is such a man I would like to see the color of his eyes.

Well, I hear no response; and the reason why I hear no response is that there is no one to respond. An investment of that kind does not pay, and men do not generally invest twice in a business that will not pay; that has been my experience on this subject. Now, sir, in reference to the sixth section of these amendments, which proposes to furnish bonds of the Government when twenty miles of the road shall have been constructed instead of forty, if the Government is to be cheated by it the amendment ought not to be adopted. It is a plain proposition, and if there is any reason for not granting it then we ought to vote it down. But I submit whether in these times, when the price of every material has advanced so much, and is advancing, the Government loses anything by furnishing bonds for twenty miles of the road when twenty miles have been constructed? And if there is nothing lost by the Government, then I see no reason why this particular feature should be so violently opposed. If the company had constructed forty miles under the existing law they would be entitled to forty times $16,000 in bonds. If, under the proposed amendment, they construct twenty miles, they will receive twenty times $16,000. The Government loses nothing, but the company receives additional facilities for progressing with the work. I see, therefore, no possible objection to this amendment. If the country is going to lose anything by it I hope gentlemen will show it, for then I should be opposed to the amendment myself; but if not, then I am in favor of it.

But the amendment to which the greatest opposition is made, and which without some explanation might seem to be improper, is one which proposes to allow the company to go out into the mountains, construct tunnels, and cut through the rocks, and receive from the Government two thirds of the amount before the road is completed. I would like the attention of gentlemen for a moment to that point, and I will submit a plain statement of the case. It is well known that away out in the mountains there is tunneling to be done, and deep excavations of rocks to be made, which will require two or three years to construct a mile of the road, and I desire to know whether it is good policy, if we expect the road to be completed within any reasonable time, to delay the work of tunneling and excavation until the road has been completed across the plains right up to the mountains? In order to meet the delay that would inevitably occur by adopting that plan, it is proposed to allow the company to go on in advance and commence the work of tunneling and excavation, and when they have brought the road to its proper grade, to allow them to receive two thirds the amount of bonds to which they would be entitled if the road was completed. Remember, not two thirds of the cost incurred, but only two thirds of the Government subsidy. Is there anything wrong in that? Is it not furthering the work? Is it not enabling the company in less time to complete this great bond of union between the East and the West, between the Atlantic and the Pacific? That is all there is of it.

If we decline to accept the amendment, the company will then be required to build the road several hundred miles across the plains, and when they arrive at the mountains the work will be delayed for many years by the process of tunneling and excavation, which has to be accomplished. I think the amendment is a wise one, that the Government will lose nothing by paying them this pro rata compensation in advance of the entire completion of the work. That is a wise provision; any railroad man will tell you so; any business man will tell you so, when he understands what the object of the provision is.

Section seven has been referred to as containing something objectionable. It is provided by that section that—

So much of section seventeen of said act as provides for a reservation by the Government of a portion of the bonds to be issued to aid in the construction of the said railroads is hereby repealed. And the failure of any one company to comply fully with the conditions and requirements of this act, and the act to which this is amendatory, shall not work a forfeiture of the rights, privileges, or franchise of any other company or companies that shall have complied with the same.

If one of these companies fail and the others go on and comply with their contract and build their portions of the road, they are not to suffer by reason of that failure. This is intended to protect those who comply in good faith with the terms of the law. It is intended to protect innocent parties, and that is all there is of it. It is a just provision, and there can be no good ground of objection to it.

I will now refer to these mortgage bonds, and this part of the bill seems to have particularly excited the indignation of the gentleman from Illinois. We propose to repeal that portion of the original law which provided for the reservation by the Government of some of these bonds to be issued for the construction of this road. What security has the Government under the original law that it has not under this amendment? The Government cannot be paid back this loan until the road is built; and when it is built no lawyer will take the ground that they can take the road from the Government until these bonds are paid. The chances of the Government for being paid are not lessened in the least by this amendment. This amendment was deemed necessary, and the committee have therefore reported it.

The committee of thirteen reported this bill unanimously. There was not a dissenting voice. After six months' investigation they came to the conclusion that these amendments were necessary for the success of these companies and for the good of the country in securing the early construction of a Pacific railroad.

I will not detain the House longer. I have said already that I did not want to kill the bill by talking about it. That will be attempted by those who are ready for that business. I have gone over the several provisions hurriedly. I have endeavored to look at this whole matter in a fair, common-sense way. It is a great work which the people and the Government need. I do not believe there is one man in five hundred who will invest his money and engage in building this road as the law now stands, and we must therefore hold out inducements for them to join in the undertaking. We must grant such facilities for going on with the construction of the road as may be needed. That is all we have done in this bill. It does not take an additional dollar out of the Treasury of the United States.

But we are told that it gives some additional lands. What of that? Ask any man who has been on the plains what the land is worth there. He will tell you that the more you have the worse you are off. Any man who has been over the country knows that after leaving the Missouri river seventy-five miles the land is scarcely worth having.

It will be said, if it is such bad land what do these companies want of it? I will answer, that if there is any good land they want to get it to aid them in building this road. If the land is worth nothing the Government will lose nothing. The Government is not selling the land now, and never will sell it unless this road is completed.

We want this road, stretching from the granite hills of New England to the golden sands of California. When completed it will far outshine in grandeur and usefulness the famed Appian Way. It will be the greatest and most useful work done by man. It is needed, and these amendments are necessary for its success; and I therefore hope that the bill will pass.

MR. STEVENS. Mr. Speaker, I have been much edified this evening by the excellently prepared and delivered dissertation of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN.] He touched on several subjects in reference to which a useful lesson may be learned—political economy, frugality, and especially morality! It was well done, well conceived, and well uttered. I listened with great pleasure to most of his abstract theories and his disquisitions on them. He was pretty much like an old friend of mine who talked very much about Coke and Littleton, and could make as good an argument on estates tail and contingent remainders as any man, but he never could try a cause, because he got up his law upon the supposition of a certain state of facts, and then it did not make a particle of difference whether the facts failed or not. He would give the law though the facts had no application to it. He once made a long argument on the law in reference to a lost bond, and I reminded him that he had forgotten the fact that it turned out the bond was not lost at all. He said he did not care anything about that; the law was right anyhow. [Laughter.] Just so with my friend here. A most excellent dissertation he has made upon saving money to aid this war against these tedious rebels. He said he had pursued the course, since he has been here, of not voting anything at all which was not directly for powder and ball, as I understood him. The country is to live without anything else, provided there is powder and ball enough. He does not care anything about what becomes of agriculture, or commerce, or navigation, or the intercourse of the country; all these must take care of themselves until after the rebels are put down; then if anybody survives they will be taken care of.

Now, sir, all this denunciation of expenditures has not a fact to ground itself upon in the bill which we have here presented; for if the bill passes, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] has said much better than I could say it, the Government is not one dollar poorer, at any rate until after this war is ended, than it is now, for there is not a dollar called for within any time which we can conceive this war to last. There is not a single thing asked for which is not in the original bill except some little land; and as to that land, I ask the gentleman what he is going to do with it, how he is going to feed the soldiers on it? It is all given away now in homesteads to anybody who chooses to take it, and every mile of railroad you make gives each odd section, for an emigrant to plant his home upon, worth twenty of those sections without any railroad. Where, then, is anything taken from the national Treasury—anything for which the House are to be rebuked for having robbed this nation? Where is there any ground for the gentleman's indignation which has towered so high here? His speech he must have prepared before we prepared the bill, thinking we were going to steal something; and if we did not, why the law would be right anyhow. [Laughter.]

Now, let me go over this bill with my friend as he did, just as if we were going over the Shorter Catechism together, and see how it applies to his speech. What does this bill propose? It does propose concessions of great value to the railroad company. It proposes to make a work much greater than if it were attempted through or over the Alps. It proposes great concessions for the road to work under, for under the old bill they could not work at all. I admit that the committee did know, and believe, and intend by this bill that the Government should aid this company somewhat more than by the old bill, or it would be idle for us to pass it. The original bill was passed here after a great struggle, and it was a piece of patchwork. I remember the struggle well. The bill, as passed, had many imperfections, and the company could not work under it. They could not take the right of way over anybody's land under it, and the company properly declined to proceed far, even if they had money enough, until they knew whether they were to have such a bill as they could make the road under, and under which capitalists would invest their money.

Hence it was after the two millions of subscription were taken up by "mercenary" men, by enough men who grasped at the opportunity of putting their ten and twenty thousand dollars into this "mine of gold," which the gentleman thinks is such a great boon to them, hence it was that these men who, I think, from patriotic motives, formed this organization, and put their money into it at great peril, found it absolutely necessary to delay doing much work until they should get some extension to the working features of the bill. Hence it is that to-day, so far from having the road located through the whole route, they have only had surveys made through passes of the mountains. One of those surveys was made by a member of the company, who took $20,000 of the stock. I will not mention his name, for fear of exciting the ire of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. One of the gentleman's directors, Brigham Young, I suppose.

Mr. STEVENS. That may be; but I venture to say that he never stole any man's money. I know that he is a most remarkable man, although I do not agree with him in his religious opinions. He is certainly a man of great physical power. [Laughter.] Certain it is that upon the California side of the line they have gone into the work with excellent zeal. They have not only completed ten and twenty miles, but to-day there are fifty-two miles of the road made and in running order.

Mr. COLE, of California. Eighty miles.

Mr. STEVENS. Well, a part of it runs up to San José, round the bay of San Francisco; but we may say that the company have completed eighty miles. The company have raised already upon that side of the mountains over fifteen million dollars. They have that money to expend, and they are expending it. They are building a road over the Sierra Nevada into the silver mining region, at a cost of over a hundred and fifty thousand dollars a mile. It was obvious to the committee that upon this side of the Rocky mountains it would cost even more than that. I have no doubt that there are sections of country there where it will cost from three to five hundred thousand dollars a mile. It would be impossible, therefore, for the company, under the old concession, to make this road, and we felt that if it was to be made, something more ought to be done by the United States. The committee thought that nothing which we could carry through the House would be too much to aid in building this great thoroughfare between the eastern and western population of the country; to unite us with California, whose people, whatever they may have been at the start, are admitted now to be among the purest both in politics and morals of any in the United States. We thought it necessary, therefore, to do something to unite us with that people. What could we do? The company asked that we should double the number of bonds, and the Senate actually passed a bill guarantying the payment of interest for twenty years, in coin, on double the amount of bonds which the United States originally granted.

Your committee came at once to the determination not to burden the nation at this time with any further liabilities or obligation. They said to the company, "Take what land you choose; it is worth nothing to the Government; it is not held out for sale; it is worth nothing except as it becomes populated, and as you populate it you do us a benefit; do not ask us for more bonds; we will take off some of the restrictions and make the conditions lighter, so as to enable you to go on with the work." What, then, did we do? We agreed to take off the first restriction, the one fourth, which we had put into the last bill, until the whole road was finished. We thought that unreasonable. We agreed to release that one fourth of the concession for every mile until a section of forty miles was fully finished. That provision seemed to us to be unreasonable, and we have in this bill submitted to the House the question whether we are right or not. That is one of the flagrant enormities in which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] has detected us!

We agreed, also, to double the amount of lands. What lands? Why, the sections on each side of the road! The gentleman lives in the West, and knows all about this matter. He knows that after we get beyond the one hundredth degree of longitude the land is hardly worth holding. From there, for some five hundred miles to the Rocky mountains, the concession of land, except upon some small streams, is merely of nominal value. In the Rocky mountains it is solid land, and yet it is not very valuable. When you get to the other side of the Rocky mountains, to what is called the plains, you find a barren valley that bears nothing but sage of the bitterest kind, and that never can be made fertile for any use whatever. Then you come upon the Sierra Nevada, and when you pass over that range of mountains you find no land worth anything until you get into California, and there the lands have all been taken up long ago.

It is also charged, Mr. Speaker, that we allow this company to issue its own bonds and give a first mortgage. That is true; but that does not take a dollar from the Government now. It does not weaken the Administration in carrying on this war and defraying its expenses. The only doubt is whether this road will bear the two mortgages. It is very clear that unless the second mortgage is to be got in this way the road will never be finished and will never earn a dollar. I doubt not that when this road is finished and the vast travel between the two oceans sets in over it, when the business not only of this country but the commerce of the far East shall be brought across this continent to the population on this side of the Rocky mountains and on its way to Europe, as it will be the only short thoroughfare, the road will be so productive as not only to pay all its liabilities but to make its stock very valuable.

Suppose the road does cost $200,000,000. The amount of the interest will be $12,000,000 a year. The Central road of Pennsylvania receives more than half that in tolls. Last year and the year before the railroad between Pittsburg and Philadelphia received $7,000,000. The Erie canal of New York I believe receives some $6,000,000 of tolls annually, and I believe the New York Central railroad receives more.

A MEMBER. Ten million dollars a year.

Mr. STEVENS. Ten million dollars I am told. If these lines, on such short distances, have such receipts, I imagine we can hardly figure up the amount that will be received on this great work.

Mr. HIGBY. The freight now from San Francisco to the valley amounts to over five million dollars a year.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman from California states that the wagon freight now from San Francisco to the valley is over five million dollars a year. I do not mean to argue this. Everybody who looks over this vast continent and on the world at large must perceive that this work, when once completed, will not only be the most magnificent on earth but the most productive. Then, sir, I say that both these mortgages will be fairly paid, in time; and although the bonds of the Government may be postponed to the others, the Government will receive vast advantages from the very fact that the road is finished and pours the wealth of California into its coffers, besides keeping together the Union as it now is. That was the view that actuated the committee. It was not the motive that our friend, the detective, [laughter,] suspected. He has found out motives which never actuated that committee; which, so far as I know, no one ever dreamed of. But the committee did aspire to look at the question in a statesmanlike point of view.

The gentleman from Illinois says he has discovered "a cat in the meal tub"—[laughter]—I do not know that he used that language exactly, but I am only paraphrasing it—when he found that this bill repealed the proviso of the fourth article of the charter with reference to the appointment of commissioners on the California side. That provides that when any section is finished that fact shall be certified under oath by the president of the company; and the President of the United States shall appoint a commission of three, who shall examine and report upon it, and who shall certify to him, and then he shall issue bonds for the amount, and so on in succession as fast as sections are finished. Now, the one commission is to be appointed to go through the same operation. It is obvious that on the California side it would take a long time to communicate with the President of the United States and to have all these certificates sent and filed. It would take almost long enough to let so much interest accrue as would help to pay some of the debt which my friend from Illinois is so much afraid of. We provide in this bill that instead of these numerous commissions for each section, the President of the United States shall appoint a set of commissioners so that they shall be ready to examine and give the certificates the same as before; and that in California, instead of waiting till all the papers are filed in the Department of the Interior here, they may be filed in the public land office of the nation in California; and then the commissioners may go on and make their examination. Is there anything in that that looks like murder, or arson, or robbery? [Laughter.] The gentleman from Illinois intended no slight censure when he accused the committee of such a monstrous scheme of robbery as that.

Now, the gentleman from Iowa has very properly called the special attention of the House right here to that part of the bill which allows a portion of the bonds to be furnished to the company before they get the rails laid down—allowing them for two thirds the value of the work. As my friend from Iowa says, there is no man who has been a railroad man, who has been an original stockholder in a railroad, who will care again to invest his money in that way, and especially who would care to undertake the construction of a road through these vast mountains, without compensation until the entire work has been completed. He has properly said that it will delay the completion of the work for years, unless they are allowed to commence the tunneling and excavation of these rocks before the entire work has been constructed up to the mountains, and the committee did not think there was anything unjust or improper in allowing the company to go forward with these tunnels while they were grading the road and laying the track from the Missouri river in that direction. It is well known that in order to cross these mountains there must be excavations of hundreds of feet of solid rock, and I see no objection, when that work has been done, ready to lay the rails, and the rails themselves have not been laid because it was impossible to transport them there, in allowing the company to receive two thirds the amount to which they are entitled in the construction of that part of the road, thus enabling the company to go on more rapidly, and bring the entire work more speedily to its completion.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I ought to detain the House any longer. I have touched upon the main points covered by the bill. If this road is to be built there must be some advantage given. The committee have not had an opportunity to report the Senate bill, and I do not think, as I understand the feeling of the committee, they would have reported it. The Senate bill pledged the Government to guaranty the interest in coin upon bonds to twice the amount to which the company is entitled under existing law. Our committee have avoided that throughout.

Now, sir, these gentlemen have subscribed the $2,000,000 required by the law. They have paid $200,000, and, as the report before us shows, have expended $800,000. They cannot, under the present arrangement, go on with the work. They have not put any of it in running order, although many miles of an auxiliary road have been completed, and the question is now whether they shall be allowed to go on or stop. I think, under these circumstances, we have done about as little as we could do if anything at all was to be done to enable them to make this road. I have no hesitancy in saying that the whole question whether the work is to stop altogether depends upon the action of the House upon this bill. It does not provide what the company want, it is not the kind of a bill they asked from the committee, or which has been sent to us from the Senate. I repeat that the committee were not willing to go to the extent of the Senate bill. They were not willing to burden the Government at present by guarantying payment of the interest in coin as was proposed by the Senate, but they are willing to grant facilities as far as possible without placing the interests of the Government in jeopardy, such as will enable them to proceed with the work.

The gentleman from Illinois complains of the men who compose this company, and mentions the name of some gentleman with whom he seems to be acquainted better than I am. There are some gentlemen whose names appear of whom I have heard. I have heard of General Dix, who takes a strong interest in this road. I learn that his reputation is probably as good as that of most of the persons the gentleman from Illinois would have belong to the company. I learn from some gentlemen that he is a man of talent and is probably president of the company. I believe the company is composed of pure men. I will not say about the committee in that respect. I confess I have some little apprehension about my friend from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] because he makes so loud professions, [laughter,] but I believe this is managed by pure men.

The gentleman from Illinois has forgotten one thing. He says the directors are in for three years. The gentleman will do the committee the credit, I am sure, of saying they have attempted to avoid that. The section to which the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is an amendment provides that in the middle of October next a new election shall be held, and that thenceforward they shall be elected annually; that there shall be fifteen directors instead of thirty, and that ten instead of two of them shall be appointed by the Government. I think, therefore, we have done all we could to guard the interests of the Government in that respect. We have directed that the books shall be kept open for subscriptions up to the day of election, so that every man who wishes to participate in the management of the corporation may take part until the entire subscription of $1,000,000 has been made.

I call for the previous question on the pending amendments, which must be disposed of before any other amendments can be submitted to the bill. I do not propose to call for the previous question on the bill, but to leave it open for amendment.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I give notice that at the proper time I will move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed till the next session of Congress.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question first recurred on the following amendment, offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN:]

Add:
And said roads shall be public highways, and shall transport the property and troops of the United States, when transportation thereof shall be required, free of toll or other charge.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is now ten o'clock, and I hope that no vote will be taken on this amendment until we have a fuller House.

Mr. STEVENS. The House is full enough, and as we understand the amendment we may as well dispose of it now as at any other time.

Mr. HOLMAN moved that the House adjourn. The House divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 73.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered; and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The House divided on Mr. HOLMAN's amendment; and there were—ayes 25, noes 75.

Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays, and tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MIDDLETON and THAYER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 25, noes 70.

So (more than one fifth of those present having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN moved that the House adjourn. Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to adjourn was disagreed to.

The question was taken on the amendment; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 39, nays 82, not voting 61; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Cobb, Coffroth, Cravens, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Edgerton, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Finck, Hale, Harding, Herrick, Holman, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Knapp, Marey, Middleton, James R. Morris, Nelson, Norton, Orth, Pike, Samuel J. Randall, Stiles, Thayer, Thomas, Tracy, Elihu B. Washburne, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, and Williams—39.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, Beaman, Blair, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Brooks, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Cole, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, English, Fenton, Frank, Ganson, Garfield, Gooch, Grider, Griswold, Benjamin G. Harris, Higby, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Knox, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Daniel Morris, Morrison, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Noble, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Perham, Pomeroy, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Ross, Schenck, Scott, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stevens, Stuart, Sweat, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Wadsworth, Ward, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Wilder, Wilson, Windom, and Winfield—82.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Baily, Blaine, Bliss, Brandegee, James S. Brown, William G. Brown, Chauler, Freeman Clarke, Clay, Cox, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Deming, Dumont, Grinnell, Hall, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Hulburd, Hutchins, Jenckes, Kalbfleisch, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, King, Law, Lazear, Le Blond, Littlejohn, Long, Mallory, McAllister, McDowell, McDermott, McKimney, William H. Miller, Morrill, John O'Neill, Patterson, Pendleton, Perry, Pruyn, Radford, William H. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, Scofield, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, Strouse, Voorhees, Webster, Joseph W. White, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—61.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question then recurred on the following amendment, submitted by Mr. STEVENS:

The several companies authorized to construct the aforesaid roads are hereby required to operate and use said roads and telegraph for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and the Government are concerned, as one continuous line, and in such operation and use to afford and secure to each other equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation, without any discrimination of any kind in favor of the road or business of any or either of said companies, or adverse to the road or business of any or either of the others.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend by adding after the word "equipments," in the twelfth line of section ten, the following:

Except as to the provisions of the sixth section of an act to which this is an amendment relating to the transmission of dispatches and the transportation of mails, troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores, for the Government of the United States.

The sixth section of the law to which this applies is as follows:

"Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the grants aforesaid are made upon condition that said company shall pay said bonds at maturity, and shall keep said railroad and telegraph line in repair and use, and shall at all times transmit dispatches over said telegraph line, and transport mails, troops, and munitions of war, supplies, and public stores upon said railroad for the Government, whenever required to do so by any Department thereof, and that the Government shall at all times have the preference in the use of the same for all the purposes aforesaid, (at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the amounts paid by private parties for the same kind of service;) and all compensation for services rendered for the Government shall be applied to the payment of said bonds, and interest until the whole amount is fully paid. Said company may also pay the United States, wholly or in part, in the same or other bonds, Treasury notes, or other evidences of debt against the United States, to be allowed at par; and after said road is completed, until said bonds and interest are paid, at least five per cent. of the net earnings of said road shall also be annually applied to the payment thereof."

Now, sir, I propose to reserve this right of the Government for the transmission of dispatches, and the transportation of troops and supplies, as against the right of any parties into whose hands this road may ultimately pass under the first mortgage provided by this bill.

I call the previous question upon the amendment.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN called for tellers upon the motion to adjourn.

Tellers were not ordered.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays upon the motion, and tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The question recurring on seconding the demand for the previous question, the House divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 13; no quorum voting.

Mr. WILSON called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. VAN VALKENBURGH and Mr. PERRY were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 78; noes 15.

So the previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until the third Tuesday of December next.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order at this time. A motion to reconsider is pending.

Mr. FARNSWORTH moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly (at forty minutes past ten o'clock p. m.) adjourned.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 22, 1864.

Prayer by Rev. B. H. NADAL, of Washington.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SUMNER presented the petition of Horace Sprigg, a colored citizen of Washington, District of Columbia, praying for compensation for the amount expended by him in the purchase of the freedom of his daughter, to which he claims to be entitled under the provisions of the act emancipating persons held to service in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SUMNER also presented eight petitions of men and women of the United States, praying for the abolition of slavery, and such an amendment of the Constitution as will forever prohibit its existence in any portion of the American Union; which were referred to the select committee on slavery and freedmen.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas, presented the petition of Charles D. Maxwell, praying to be relieved from taxation as contemplated by the act of May 5, 1864, providing for the grading, paving, and cleaning the streets of the city of Washington, so far as it relates to certain lots owned by him in square No. 677 in that city, the same being incumbered with a nuisance, as is alleged, arising from the Government Printing Office and hospitals; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the memorial of Peter Hays, G. F. Randall, and P. Monseroon, praying to be compensated for loss of clothing and other personal effects, occasioned by the sinking of the United States steamer Sumter, June 24, 1863; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of Jesse F. Gray, praying for compensation for services rendered as clerk in the United States general hospital at Mount City, Illinois, in 1862 and 1863; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have had sent to me, with a request that I should present it to the Senate, a memorial signed by some six or seven hundred natives of Poland, most and perhaps all of whom are represented to have been refugees from that kingdom. They state (whether correctly or not I do not know) that although there is no statute or treaty upon the subject, many of their countrymen who have been enlisted into the Army and Navy of the United States, having escaped from what they call the thralldom of Russia, have been delivered up to the agents of the Russian Government by the naval and military authorities, acting as they suppose under the authority of the Executive. They ask that the matter may be inquired into, and relief, if relief can be had, in the future provided by Congress. It is not necessary, Mr. President, to say anything for the purpose of enlisting the sympathy of the American people or the American Senate in behalf of the men of Poland. The services of her sons during the war of the Revolution have always been held in so high an esteem that they have received, as they were entitled to receive, the national gratitude. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PATENT OFFICE REPORT.

Mr. MORGAN. The Committee on Printing have had under consideration a resolution reported from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office to print extra copies of the Patent Office report for the year 1863, and have directed me to report it with an amendment, and to ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate five thousand copies of the annual report of the Patent Office for the year 1863.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was to strike out "five thousand" and insert "ten thousand."

Mr. SHERMAN. As I offered the original resolution, I wish to ask if ten thousand is the usual number. I supposed five thousand was the usual number.

Mr. MORGAN. Ten thousand is the number that has heretofore been printed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I have no objection. The amendment was adopted, and the resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. NESMITH. I move to postpone all prior orders to take up for consideration the bill (H. R. No. 442) to authorize the President of the United States to negotiate with certain Indians of Middle Oregon for a relinquishment of certain rights secured to them by treaty.

Mr. HALE. We are near the end of the session, and I hope the ordinary course will be pursued. The Committee on Naval Affairs meet to-morrow morning, and I do not know but that it will be their last meeting this session. I desire to introduce a bill to-day for the purpose of reference to that committee. I am opposed to taking up bills in the morning hour till we get through with the morning business.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to call up the pending motion to print a communication from the War Department and the inclosures touching the McDowell investigation. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENDERSON] introduced the resolution calling for those papers, and he desires to have them printed. He is not able to be here, and probably will not be able to take his seat again during the session. I wish therefore to call up that motion, and insist upon a vote on the printing of the document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from Oregon to proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will not the Senator yield to me for the purpose of having the papers printed?

Mr. NESMITH. Let the bill be taken up first. Mr. HALE. I simply wish to say that I want to go through with the morning business. I want the privilege of introducing a bill in the morning hour. If I do not get it in this morning it will be too late. I hope the regular order will be preserved. I call for the yeas and nays on this motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered. Mr. ANTHONY. I wish to know if this bill is going to create debate.

Mr. NESMITH. I think not. It is a very brief bill, which has been passed by the House of Representatives, and only requires the sanction of the Senate. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that Oregon has occupied but a small portion of the time of the Senate during this session. This bill is of a good deal of importance to us, and I am very anxious to get it through. It would have been passed doubtless before this time if the Senate had taken it up when I made my motion.

Mr. HOWE. Why can we not take up the bill of the Senator from Oregon, and then, by unanimous consent, allow the bill of the Senator from New Hampshire to be introduced?

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 31, nays 5; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Carlile, Clark, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Harris, Hendricks, Hicks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wade, Wiley, and Wilson—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Davis, Hale, Ramsey, and Trumbull—5.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Collamer, Conness, Fessenden, Harding, Henderson, Howard, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Sprague, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Wright—13.

So the motion was agreed to.

MONARCHICAL GOVERNMENTS IN AMERICA.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Before the bill of the Senator from Oregon is proceeded with, I wish to offer a resolution for the purpose, not of present consideration, but that it may lie on the table to be called up hereafter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the people of the United States can never regard with indifference the attempt of any European Power to overthrow by force or to supplant by fraud the institutions of any republican Government on the western continent, and they will view with extreme jealousy, as menacing to the peace and independence of their own country, the efforts of any such Power to obtain new footholds for monarchical Governments sustained by foreign military force in near proximity to the United States.

Mr. SUMNER. Let it lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. DIXON. I have objected.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am not about to debate. I claim the privilege of saying to the President, and through him to the Senate, that I have introduced this resolution, which is the same resolution adopted at Baltimore, and that I propose to call it from the table at the earliest possible day, and see whether gentlemen on the opposite side of the Senate will indorse the views of their convention.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not know whether a record of it was made, but I understood the Senator from Connecticut to object to the reception of the resolution of the Senator from California.

Mr. DIXON. I did.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the objection.

Mr. DIXON. The Chair did not hear me, but I objected before the resolution was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the objection.

RECIPROCITY TREATY.

Mr. RAMSEY. With the consent of the Senator from Oregon, I wish to offer a resolution, and I ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations are hereby instructed to consider and report upon the expediency of extending the provisions of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain of June 5, 1854, commonly known as the reciprocity treaty, to central British America or the districts northwest of Minnesota hitherto described as the Selkirk settlement and the territory of the Hudson's Bay Company.

Mr. GRIMES. I have no objection to the consideration of the resolution, but when it is considered, I wish to amend it so as to direct the committee to take into consideration the propriety of abolishing the treaty entirely.

Mr. POMEROY. I object to the consideration of the resolution if it is to give rise to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 138) to regulate proceedings between landlord and tenant in the District of Columbia, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (H. R. No. 545) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of horses and other property destroyed in the military service of the United States;"

A bill (H. R. No. 546) to regulate the rank, pay, and emoluments of veterinary surgeons of cavalry regiments;

A bill (H. R. No. 548) to provide for the relief of James Lindsay; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 29) for the relief of the officers of the fourth and fifth Indian regiments.

OREGON INDIANS.

Mr. NESMITH. I ask now for action upon the bill called up on my motion.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 442) to authorize the President of the United States to negotiate with certain Indians of Middle Oregon for a relinquishment of certain rights secured to them by treaty.

The Committee on Indian Affairs proposed to amend the bill so as to insert after the date of the treaty referred to the words "by which they are permitted to fish, hunt, gather roots and berries, and pasture stock in common with citizens of the United States upon the lands and territories of the United States outside their reservation, and to defray the expense of said treaty and to pay said Indians for the relinquishment of said rights."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MONARCHICAL GOVERNMENTS IN AMERICA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires the opinion of the Senate upon the reception of the resolution offered by the Senator from California. The Chair did not hear any objection at the time, but he understands now that objection was made, and the question which the Chair desires to submit to the Senate is, shall the resolution be received?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I understand the President to refer to the resolution which I introduced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It was settled at the time, and I insist that it was properly settled, and when once settled it cannot be unsettled by any after consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I desire to understand what the question submitted is. What is the objection to the reception of the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution was out of order at the time, and could not be received but by unanimous consent. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Connecticut made an objection, though the Chair did not understand it, and allowed the resolution to come in and be read, and after it was read the Senator from Connecticut stated that he had made an objection.

Mr. McDOUGALL. How long afterwards?

Mr. DIXON. I stated it the moment I could get the floor. I could not interrupt the Secretary in reading the resolution, but I stated at once to the Chair that I had previously objected. I was heard by several Senators around me.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That being the state of the case, and the resolution being receivable only by unanimous consent, as it seems, and as I understand no action is asked for upon it, and as we are in the habit of giving unanimous consent almost every day for the reception of resolutions, I hope my friend from Connecticut will let the resolution be received and lie on the table. The Chair, it seems, did not hear the objection at the moment.

Mr. DIXON. I objected for a reason. I am opposed to the resolution, to everything of the kind, to any action upon it, and I shall always object whenever I can to anything of that sort. I consider it injurious to the public interests.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Connecticut is just as well aware as I am that he cannot object so as to prevent its being received. The Senator from California gives notice of it to-day, and then he will have a right to offer it to-morrow, and the Senator from Connecticut cannot help it. I hope he will not persist in objecting to receiving the resolution when the only effect is to take up time.

Mr. DIXON. At this time I have a right to object. What may be the case in the future I do not know.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I should like to understand the law for the conduct of business in the Senate. There should be a law about it. There should be at least in the Senate a rule of business. I asked the consent of the Senate for the introduction of a resolution, stating that I did not propose to consider it to-day, but to lay it upon the table for future consideration. No one objecting within the reach of the ear of the President, the President announced that there being no objection the resolution was received. I say that is a final judgment from which there is no appeal if there is any law or any rule governing our business. I did not hear the Senator from Connecticut object. If I had heard him, I should have recognized and yielded to his right.

MR. POWELL. Will the Senator from California allow me to say one word? If my memory is not greatly at fault, two or three days ago the Senator from California offered this resolution. It was objected to, and he then notified the Senate that he would at a future day offer it. That being the case, I do not think one objection will lay it over now, but he has a right to offer it under the rule.

THE PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that that does not alter the case at all.

MR. McDUGALL. I insist on this proposition, that a conclusion having been announced, no objection being audible enough to reach the ear of the President, and the resolution having been read, that is the end of that piece of business so far as its being before the Senate and subject to the Senate's consideration is concerned. I know upon principle that I cannot be wrong.

THE PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will take the sense of the Senate under the 6th rule. The question is, "Shall the resolution be received?"

The question being put, the resolution was received.

REPEAL OF FUGITIVE SLAVE LAW.

MR. SUMNER. I now move that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 512) to repeal the fugitive slave act of 1850, and all acts and parts of acts for the rendition of fugitive slaves.

MR. HALE. I gave notice several days since that at this time I should ask the Senate to consider bills reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I hope the Senate will give me that privilege now. I should like also, if I can have it by right or by favor or in any way, to be allowed to introduce a bill for the purpose of having it referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs to be considered by that committee at their next meeting.

MR. SUMNER. When this bill is taken up there will be no objection to allowing that to be done.

MR. HALE. I do not choose to ask as a favor what I think is my right. I object to this motion, and I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

MR. HENDRICKS. Before the vote is called I desire to say that I have agreed with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Wilkinson] to pair off with him on all questions in regard to the bill repealing the fugitive slave law. The Senator from Minnesota favors the bill as it is; I am opposed to it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 14, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Dixon, Foot, Grimes, Harlan, Harris, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Sumner, Wade, and Wilson—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Foster, Hale, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Nesmith, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Wiley—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Conness, Fessenden, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Howard, Sprague, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Wright—13.

So the motion was not agreed to.

MILITARY INTERFERENCE WITH ELECTIONS.

MR. POWELL. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 37) to prevent officers of the Army and Navy and other persons engaged in the military and naval service of the United States from interfering in elections in the States. I will state to the Senate that it is not my purpose to debate the bill; I wish to have a few amendments made to it, and then to have the vote taken.

MR. TRUMBULL. As the Senator from Kentucky is very persistent about that bill, I hope, if it is not to be discussed, that the Senate will take it up and vote on it and be done with it.

The motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the bill was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

MR. POWELL. I move to amend the bill by inserting after the word "America," in line nine of section one, the words "unless it shall be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States;" so as to make it read:

That it shall not be lawful for any military or naval officer of the United States, or other person engaged in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, to order, bring, keep, or have under his authority or control, any troops or armed men within one mile of the place where any general or special election is held in any State of the United States of America, unless it shall be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States.

MR. TRUMBULL. Manifestly that will not do, because in cities how are you going to determine that? A military force is stationed in a city. Your election precincts are all through the city. You do not put the armed force there for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. POWELL. In line twenty-two of the same section I propose to strike out after the word "fine" the words "of not less than $200, and;" and to strike out "twenty" in line twenty-three, and insert "five;" and in line twenty-five to strike out "two years" and insert "three months," and to strike out "twenty" and insert "five;" so as to read, "and on conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not exceeding $5,000, and suffer imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than three months nor more than five years, at the discretion of the court trying the same." This is to lessen the penalty.

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. POWELL. In section two, line nineteen, I move to strike out "twenty" and insert "five." The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the question was stated to be on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

MR. POMEROY. I wish to except the amendment which the Senator from Kentucky put in in reference to having the troops stationed a mile from the polls.

MR. POWELL. The amendment says nothing about troops being a mile from the polls.

MR. WADE. I wish to inquire whether this bill has been before the Committee on the Judiciary. It seems to be a bill eminently proper to be reviewed by that committee before it comes before the Senate.

MR. POWELL. It has not been before that committee. I desired to have it sent to the Committee on the Judiciary in the first place, but the Senate by a vote on the yeas and nays refused to send it to that committee, and referred it to the Committee on Military Affairs, which made an adverse report upon it.

MR. WADE. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MR. POWELL. I hope that motion will not prevail. I tried to get it to that committee, but the Senate refused to send it there. To refer it now will prevent a vote upon it at this session. The Senate voted me down on my motion to refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary, and sent it to another committee who reported, and it has been discussed, and I think we had better vote upon it.

MR. HOWARD. This bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs at an early period of the session; it there underwent a pretty full and thorough examination, and the committee reported back to the Senate a mass of facts connected with the bill and recommended that the bill do not pass. The bill, however, was called up by the honorable Senator from Kentucky, I do not exactly remember when; but at any rate he consumed the best part of two days in discussing the merits of the bill and urging his reasons, some of them certainly, why it should pass, and indulging in a very general and as I think a very unjust course of criticism upon the Administration, the President and the military men included, in relation to their alleged interference with elections in the States. I endeavored to reply to the honorable Senator from Kentucky at a subsequent day, and I occupied the best part I believe of two sessions of the Senate in my reply. I was followed by the honorable Senator from Delaware who, if my memory serves me, also occupied the best part of two days in the discussion. I merely state this as the chronological history of the bill and the discussions thereof. I do not think that I shall be able to add anything to what I have already said on this subject, and I rise merely to say in all brevity that the great object of this bill appears to be to prevent the Army of the United States, from giving battle to the enemy at any place within the circle of one mile around a place of election. If this bill shall pass, it will be a penal offense for the President of the United States or any general in command of the Army to have a battle with the rebels at any place within the circle of one mile around the place of an election. It is in short, sir, as I view it, an effort to make the poll in a border State the sanctuary of traitors and the sanctuary of men who are not entitled to vote, and to make it penal for the authorities of the United States to treat rebels, even open rebels, as enemies of the United States, by seizing and arresting them and keeping them away from the polls—a right which it is as much the duty of this Government to exercise as it is or as it ever has been to combat even the foreign enemies of the United States. I do not wish, sir, however, to spend any more time on this bill, and I hope we shall take a vote on it at present.

MR. WADE. Mr. President—

MR. POWELL. I hope the Senator from Ohio will allow me to say a single word.

MR. WADE. I have only one word to say. I find this bill has been discussed, I had forgotten the discussion of this subject at an early part of the session, but it has been discussed, and, as it now appears, considered by a committee. I therefore withdraw my motion to refer it to the Judiciary Committee.

MR. POWELL. I only wish to say a single word. The Senator from Michigan says that if this bill passes you cannot fight an enemy in arms against the United States within one mile of a place where an election is going on, on the day of election. The honorable Senator is mistaken, for an amendment I have just proposed obviates all that. The section, as corrected, reads, "It shall not be lawful for any military or naval officer, &c., to bring, keep, or have under his authority or control, any troops or armed men within one mile of the place where any general or special election is held in any State of the United States of America, unless it shall be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States." So that if there are armed enemies there, the troops of the United States can go and fight them on an election day as well as any other day. There is nothing to prevent any soldier voting in his proper precinct.

MR. HOWARD. I was not aware of the very insufficient and incomplete amendment which the honorable Senator from Kentucky has offered to the bill until this moment. Owing to the noise in the Hall, or from some other reason, I did not catch his voice; that amendment, however, by no means makes the bill acceptable to me, nor does it cure the very evil which I alluded to.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. President, when this bill was before the Senate at an earlier stage of our session, and of course after the report from the Military Committee had been made and laid upon our tables, and the honorable member from Michigan had made a very elaborate, and, as is the case with all his speeches, able speech in support of that report, I procured, with the consent of the Senate, permission to be heard on the subject on a subsequent day. It was my purpose at that time to avail myself of that permission; but the period of the session is now so near its close that I shall forbear from addressing the Senate at large.

Besides the general interest which the subject, presented and upon which I desired to be heard, there was in the report made by the honorable member from Michigan what I considered as rather a reflection upon myself; and, if he will permit me to say so, rather an unparliamentary reflection, and a reflection upon the Governor of my State, whose loyalty I know; it has been tested by every test by which loyalty can be tried; and I proposed to address the Senate in his defense mainly, though partly in defense of myself. The part of the report which affects me personally, and which I have ventured to characterize, with all the respect that I feel for the honorable member by whom it was presented to the Senate, as unparliamentary, is that part of it which alludes to what was said by myself in the Senate in debate on a prior day. And the honorable member, as I am sure, is not its author; it must have come from some other pen, or been suggested by some other mind and adopted without reflection. The honorable member in the report has thought proper to intimate that in the remarks which I made to the Senate upon the subject of this bill I was influenced by disappointment in the elections which were held under, as it was stated, the control of the military. The honorable member, I am glad to say, has already disclaimed any purpose to impute to me any such motives. I hope he knows me well enough to be satisfied that I am incapable designedly, in the consideration of any public measure, of being in any manner controlled or affected by any interested or disappointed consideration. I think I know—I will not ask the honorable member to say whether my thoughts are well founded or not—I think I know whence the imputation comes; and if I am right in my conjecture, where the author of the imputation and myself are equally well known, I am perfectly willing, more than willing, to abide the public judgment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must interrupt the Senator from Maryland to call up the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. JOHNSON. With the permission of the Senate and the Chair, I have but a word or two more to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator may proceed by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, we all agree, in the report presented by the honorable member he himself concurs in that opinion, that the military should not be used for the purpose of affecting in any way the free exercise of the elective franchise, and the only question which the case presented upon which the report was made was a question of fact—was or was not the military in the recent election in Maryland so used?

Mr. HOWARD. Will the honorable Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON. With pleasure.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not wish it to go forth to the country that the report to which he alludes goes so far in its defense of the freedom of elections as to allow a public enemy of the United States to vote, or to exercise any political right whatever. The report, so far as it contains argument, is based upon the principle of public law that it is not the right of an enemy of the country to vote or exercise any political functions, whether that enemy be a rebel, a traitor in arms against the country, and hence a domestic enemy, or whether he be a public enemy owing allegiance to a foreign Government. I hold it to be the duty of the military authority of the United States, and so the report holds, (the Senator will pardon me for this recapitulation of the sentiments of the report,) to expel from the polls and exclude from the exercise of all political rights persons who are known to the military authorities to be disloyal to the United States, and hence enemies of the United States. This is the doctrine of the report; but in respect to all persons who are friends of the Government, who wish to uphold the Government, but who may happen to differ upon questions of administration, the report does declare very properly, certainly, that there should be no interference either of the military or other persons in the free enjoyment of that valuable franchise. That is the doctrine of the report, and that is my doctrine.

Mr. DIXON. Is the unfinished business now in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland is entitled to finish his speech under permission of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have not misunderstood the report.

Mr. POWELL. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to read one clause of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON. I would rather finish, because I am detaining the Senate longer than I intended. I have not misunderstood the report; but the particular of which the honorable member now speaks as found in the report was a matter about which it was not my purpose to say anything. All that I said was that the freedom of election was not to be interfered with at all by the military authority of the United States. Now, I understand the honorable member as saying, and I know his report goes to that extent; that the limit of the authority of the United States, exercised by means of its military, is to keep from voting those whom the military authorities of the United States shall think proper to decide are not entitled to vote. Does not the honorable member see that that is placing the elective franchise of the States of this Union entirely under the control of the Executive of the United States, the military acting under the authority of the Executive of the United States? I say to the honorable member that the constitution of Maryland, and the laws passed in pursuance of it, and the authorities, all of whom are now loyal, are abundantly able to guard against the pollution of the ballot-box by having deposited within it the ballots of disloyal men. But what I protest is, if we are to have any freedom—I do not speak for Maryland alone, but for every State in the Union, for Michigan as well as Maryland—if we are to have any freedom in the exercise of the elective franchise, it is not to depend upon the will of the military authority of the Government.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the Senator allow me to put a query here?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. How does it happen that the election officers and agents of the State of Maryland are able to determine with more certainty whether or not a man is an enemy of the country, that is whether he is loyal or not, than the authorities of the United States on the spot? What is it that gives the authorities of Maryland this peculiar aptitude and unerring certainty in the decision of the question of loyalty above the authorities of the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON. I answer the question of the honorable member: the Constitution of the United States which denies to this Government the right to interfere and leaves the exclusive judgment on questions of elections to the State—

Mr. HOWARD. That is a proposition which, with great deference to the learned Senator from Maryland, I absolutely deny.

Mr. JOHNSON. I knew the honorable member did, and it was against the denial that I was protesting.

Mr. HOWARD. I should say in time of war.

Mr. JOHNSON. But I have said all that I designed to say when I rose except this: although for the reason I have stated I forbear now, and shall forbear at any other day during which the present session may continue, to answer the facts or the alleged facts, the law or the supposed law, to be found in the honorable member's report, I shall take an early opportunity, the first opportunity that may be afforded during the recess, to answer it in another form by an appeal to the people of my own State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will resume the consideration of the special order, which is Senate bill No. 167, to incorporate an insurance company in the city of Washington.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope the Senate will indulge me for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can proceed by unanimous consent. ["No objection."] The Senator will proceed.

Mr. HOWARD. It is due to me to say in reference to the report—

Mr. POWELL. If the Senator from Michigan will allow me, I desire to make a verbal amendment to the bill.

Mr. HOWARD. I rose merely to make a personal explanation.

Mr. POWELL. I notify the Senate that I shall ask to have one other verbal amendment made.

Mr. HOWARD. I think, sir, whatever impartial man shall read the history of these times and the history of Maryland, and the politics of Maryland at this time, and shall then read the report which has been so much criticised and denounced by the learned Senator from Maryland, will not be inclined to charge me, who am the author of the report, with having committed a breach of parliamentary courtesy and duty in the language or style of that report. I had occasion heretofore to remark, I did so with pleasure and repeat it now, that I did not intend to cast the slightest personal imputation against the honorable Senator from Maryland in that report. I believe he has accepted that assurance.

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. And is satisfied with it. And again, sir, as to the final appeal to which he proposes to resort to determine the great question whether the doctrine of that report is true doctrine or not, his appeal to the ballot-box itself, and to the freemen of the United States, to those who, and whose brothers and fathers, have participated in this great contest, and shed their blood in it, I can only say to him and to his good friends here and elsewhere, that I shall be happy to meet them in the discussion of that question upon the theater which he has thus selected; that is, before the good people of the United States, at the ballot-box, and I will guaranty that I will beat him there if I do not here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order is before the Senate.

Mr. POWELL. I desire to propose one simple amendment to this bill, and then I hope we may take the vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the Senator offering his amendment? It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. POMEROY. I have an amendment or two that I want to offer.

Mr. POWELL. I am going to propose the amendment that I think the Senator wants.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on continuing the consideration of Senate bill No. 37. The Chair hears no objection. The first question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, with the exception of the amendment reserved at the request of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. POMEROY.]

The other amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The excepted amendment will be read.

Mr. HALE. I move to postpone this and all prior orders for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of Senate bill No. 292, to provide for the efficiency of the Navy.

Mr. POWELL. I hope that will not be done. I think this bill can be disposed of in a minute or two.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I presume that if the Senator from New Hampshire will allow a vote to be taken on this question, which will not occupy more than five minutes, there will then be no objection to taking up his naval bills.

Mr. HALE. If I thought I could consent to allow three days for this bill, and we should then have a vote upon it, I would willingly give way.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Let us try five minutes.

Mr. HALE. Well, I will give five minutes. I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment inserting after the word "America," in line nine of the first section, the words "unless it shall be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States."

Mr. POMEROY. I wish to amend that amendment by adding to it "or to keep the peace at the polls."

Mr. POWELL. I object to that. It would destroy the effect of the bill. The State authorities can keep peace at the polls.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is the very pretext on which these outrages were committed in my State, and it is the very same pretext that will be put forward again.

Mr. POMEROY. I have had some experience in reference to military interference at the polls, and I have got some sore places in my history on that subject. When the party represented by the Senator from Kentucky had this Government in their control, in the Territory which is now my State, it was very common for the military authorities to take possession of the polls. The sheriffs in the counties had a way of getting a posse on that day and mustering them into the service of the United States, and surrounding the polls for the ostensible purpose of keeping the peace at the polls, but I have seen the time when I could not get within gunshot of the polls, and you could not get a ballot into the box unless you shot it in out of some revolver. I do not want any military interference at the polls, and I never did want it. I would not have troops there unless in some sensible way to keep the peace and to prevent contests which might be likely to arise. I think the Senator from Kentucky should be the last man and his party should be the last party to undertake, after what occurred in my State, to prevent men being at the polls to keep the peace and prevent collisions. In an excited political contest, in a new country especially, collisions between parties are very common at the polls, and it is very important that there should be some authority there to preserve peace, not to interfere with the election, not to prevent men from voting, but to see that every man is protected in his right to vote. That is the only purpose for which I want a force at the polls. I do not care to discuss the matter; but that is the most important part of the proposition to me.

Mr. McDougall. I am one of those who were taught to think that the weapon of the ballot in the hands of a free citizen was a better weapon than steel of the finest temper. That point of instruction in my youth has become the faith of my maturer years. The ballot, the free ballot, the uncontrolled ballot, is the only power possessed by a free people which enables them to overawe those in authority. Arbitrary power is most expressed by the presence of armed men, and I would not have them where the citizen was exercising this high privilege.

The Senator from Michigan says this bill would make the ballot-box a sanctuary for persons hostile to the Government. Let me say to him that there have been sanctuaries in all times. Among heathen nations there were places of sanctuary; in the old Hebrew times there were places of sanctuary, and in Christian ages there have been places of sanctuary; and if there be a place of sanctuary in a free republic, it should be where the ballot-box is open and where the free ballot of the citizen, uncompelled by force, may express his mind. I do know that force has been employed to control the free voice of citizens, and when it shall be so employed as to accomplish results, that is military despotism.

I say this much. I am for the measure in its substance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. POMEROY] to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas, called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Foot, Grimes, Harlan, Harris, Howard, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Wade—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Davis, Foster, Hale, Hendricks, Hicks, Johnson, McDougall, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Willey, and Wilson—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Conness, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Harding, Henderson, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Wright—13.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. McDougall. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. POWELL. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion.

Mr. McDougall. Very well; if the Senator wishes to press the bill in its present shape, I withdraw the motion.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. FOSTER called for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Davis, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Hendricks, Hicks, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Pomeroy, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Trumbull, Wade, and Willey—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Dixon, Foot, Foster, Harris, Howard, Morgan, Sumner, Ten Eyck, and Wilson—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Conness, Cowan, Doolittle, Fessenden, Harding, Henderson, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Morrill, Nesmith, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Wright—17.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HARLAN subsequently moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and the motion was entered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a resolution for terminating the present session of Congress by adjournment on Thursday, the 30th of June, instant, at twelve o'clock; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 265) to expedite and regulate the printing of public documents, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. No. 306) to grant to the State of California certain land for State prison purposes.

TRANSFERS FROM THE ARMY TO THE NAVY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday is the bill (S. No. 167) to incorporate an insurance company in the city of Washington.

Mr. HALE. I move to postpone that and all prior orders for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of Senate bill No. 292.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 292) to provide for the efficiency of the Navy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that any person enlisted in the military service of the United States who shall apply to the Navy Department to be transferred to the Navy or marine corps shall, if his application be approved by the Secretary of the Navy, be transferred to the Navy or marine corps to serve the residue of his term of enlistment therein, subject to the laws and regulations for the government of the Navy; but such transfer is not to release the transferred person from any indebtedness to the Government, nor, without the consent of the President, from any penalty incurred for a breach of military law.

Any seaman or mariner, or person who may have served as such, drafted into the military service, may, by order of the President, be transferred to the naval service, to serve therein, subject to the laws and regulations for the government of the Navy, for the term or residue of the term for which he was drafted. All enlistments into the naval service or marine corps during the present war are to be credited to the appropriate township, precinct, or district, in the same manner as enlistments for the Army. Persons hereafter enlisted into the naval service or marine corps during the present war are to be entitled to receive the same bounty as if enlisted in the Army. And the resolution approved February 24, 1864, entitled "A resolution relative to the transfer of persons in the military service to the naval service," is repealed by this bill; but such sums as may have been paid as bounty to persons transferred from the military to the naval service or marine corps are to be charged to and paid out of the proper naval appropriation, or appropriation for the marine corps.

The Committee on Naval Affairs proposed an amendment, which was in line six of section one to strike out the words "Secretary of the Navy" and insert "President of the United States."

Mr. HALE. This amendment is moved by the committee, not from any want of respect or confidence in the Secretary of the Navy, but, as this transfer affects both the Army and the Navy, it was thought proper that the power should be vested in the President of the United States rather than in the head of either the War or the Navy Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ANTHONY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 323) in relation to naval patients in the insane asylum; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CHANDLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 322) to change the name of the steamboat Magnet, of Buffalo, to Home; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HALE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 324) prescribing the punishment for enticing or aiding seamen to desert the naval service of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 325) to repeal the act of the 17th of June, 1864, prohibiting the sales of gold and foreign exchange; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GRIMES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 70) to authorize the acquisition of certain land for the use of the Government hospital for the insane; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to be placed on the Calendar.

CREW OF THE ESSEX.

On motion of Mr. HALE, the bill (S. No. 273) to compensate the officers and crew of the iron-clad gunboat Essex for the destruction of the rebel ram Arkansas was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $25,000 to enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay to the officers and crew of the iron-clad gunboat Essex, for the destruction of the rebel ram Arkansas, the bounty provided by the fourth section of the act for the better government of the Navy of the United States, approved July 17, 1862.

Mr. HALE. This bill is reported to enable the Secretary of the Navy to carry into effect a provision of law to be found in the fourth section of an act approved July 17, 1862, in the following words:

"That a bounty shall be paid by the United States for each person on board any ship or vessel of war belonging to an enemy at the commencement of an engagement which shall be sunk or otherwise destroyed in such engagement by any ship or vessel belonging to the United States, or which it may be necessary to destroy in consequence of injuries sustained in action, of $100 if the enemy's vessel was of inferior force, and of $200 if of equal or superior force, to be divided among the officers and crew in the same manner as prize money; and when the actual number of men on board any such vessel cannot be satisfactorily ascertained, it shall be estimated according to the complement allowed to vessels of their class in the Navy of the United States; and there shall be paid as bounty to the captors of any vessel-of-war captured from an enemy, which they may be instructed to destroy, or which shall be immediately destroyed for the public interest but not in consequence of injuries received in action, fifty dollars for every person who shall be on board at the time of such capture."

A petition, very numerously signed, was presented here, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. That petition was sent to the Secretary of the Navy, and he wrote a letter, which has been published, recommending it, and stating that the law would have been carried into effect, but that they had no appropriation for the purpose, and he asks for this appropriation to enable it to be done.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVY-YARD AT CAIRO.

On motion of Mr. HALE, the bill (S. No. 190) to establish a navy-yard and depot at Cairo, in the State of Illinois, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the President of the United States to select and purchase a site for a navy-yard and depot at or near the city of Cairo, and to erect such buildings and make such improvements thereon as may be necessary for the construction and repair, accommodation and supply, of vessels-of-war of the United States; and also to purchase any water rights which may be required to propel the machinery or supply dockage for the navy-yard, and to receive any donations of lands, water rights, or rights of way, which the trustees of the Cairo city property, or the authorities of the city of Cairo, or any other body-corporate, or any person or persons, may deem proper to make or grant to the United States for the purpose; and $200,000 is appropriated to the objects mentioned.

The amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was in line four, to strike out the words "select and purchase," and insert "accept from the corporate authorities of the city of Cairo, in the State of Illinois, or from any other person or corporation;" and in line seven, before the word "city," to insert "said" after "Cairo;" and in line seven to strike out "in the State of Illinois," and insert "if in his opinion the good of the public service requires it," so as to make the bill read:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept from the corporate authorities of the city of Cairo, in the State of Illinois, or from any other person or corporation, a site for a navy-yard and depot at or near the said city of Cairo, if in his opinion the good of the public service requires it, and to erect such buildings and make such improvements thereon as may be necessary for the construction and repair, accommodation and supply, of vessels of war of the United States, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended. Mr. HOWARD. I wish to inquire of the Committee on Naval Affairs whether there has been any examination of the ground at and about Cairo with a view to ascertain the suitability of that locality for such a depot. I am aware that it is in a central situation so far as the valley of the Mississippi is concerned, being near the junction of the Mississippi and the Ohio, but it has always struck me that it was not exactly the place for a naval depot. The land there, I understand, is very low, the climate unhealthy, subject to bilious diseases and to ague, and I have never yet seen any report or examination of that locality, or indeed any other locality in that vicinity, with a view to the establishment of a naval station there.

Mr. HALE. There were several communications made to the committee, and a good deal of evidence before them, and there was talk about the committee visiting the various proposed sites, but the committee thought it was utterly impracticable, and that it was not competent for them to form a correct judgment, and so they amended the bill in this way, leaving it entirely to the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Navy, who, it was supposed, would make such examination as would satisfy them. The committee felt incompetent to make a decision, and therefore they proposed an amendment, which the Senate has adopted, which is that the President is authorized to do this if in his opinion the good of the public service requires it, and we leave it to him, thinking he will order such examination as may be necessary.

Mr. BROWN. I ask the Senator what it specifies in regard to the location?

Mr. HALE. Nothing, but that he is authorized to accept from the corporate authorities of Cairo, or other persons, a site for a navy-yard and depot at or near the city of Cairo. There was some evidence that there was a place a little distant from the city of Cairo, called Mound City, and it was thought by the committee that Mound City was near enough to the city of Cairo to come within the purview of the bill as amended.

Mr. GRIMES. It may seem singular that I should be opposed to the establishment of a navy-yard in my neighboring State of Illinois, especially when my own State has no claim for any such place. As to whether there had better be a navy-yard established on the western waters or not is a question somewhat problematical to me. Perhaps a depot may be sufficient for all the purposes we want connected with the Navy, except during the pendency of the present war; but if it be an established fact that there should be one, I think it is not established that Cairo is the place where it ought to be located. I know very well that the naval officers, from the admiral now in command, so far as my acquaintance with them extends, are opposed to the establishment at Cairo. I have a letter from the admiral on that subject and I have conversed with a great many officers on the subject. I am not going to say where the navy-yard ought to be established, but my impression is, with the lights I now have, that if a yard is to be established at all on the western waters we had better go back to the place where it was originally established, Memphis. Although we professed once to cede away our interest in the navy-yard there, I am told by gentlemen who have examined the subject that the cession is void, and that we have a considerable amount of land there, and that the water is of a sufficient depth at all seasons of the year, as is not the case between Memphis and Cairo.

I do not think it would be wise for us at this session, without any investigation, to undertake to establish a navy-yard anywhere. If we are going to establish one, let us authorize the creation of a commission to go out and examine all the sites, that which is proposed at Carondelet, that at Mound City, that at Cairo, that at Memphis, and any other point, and let them report to us the facts, and then we shall be able to act intelligently. The proposition now is to leave the whole matter in the hands of the President of the United States, who is a citizen of the State of Illinois. I have no doubt he would exercise his judgment in the matter conscientiously, but I want to know how, and I want to provide by law how his judgment shall be instructed before he proceeds to settle that question. The proper way is for us to appoint a commission. If the Senate decide that we want a western navy-yard, the proper way for us is to authorize the creation of a commission to go there and examine all the questions, for there are hundreds of questions connected with this subject. It is not the mere location of a piece of ground. You want to know exactly the depth of water on all those streams that are converging toward the point where you propose to establish your navy-yard. You want to settle all the questions in regard to the facilities for procuring laborers, skilled mechanics, men who have got to be employed by the Government in keeping up the navy-yard after it shall be established.

I suppose it is not denied that Cairo besides being an unhealthy place is a very small place, and all the citizens and mechanics that are employed there are imported from other places, and only go there for a temporary purpose, returning to their domiciles elsewhere the moment their jobs are over. That is not the kind of place where you want a navy-yard established.

Mr. BROWN. Before the amendments are agreed to, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the character of this bill and to the character of the amendments. It is known that it has been a matter of a great deal of controversy throughout the West as to where the location of this navy-yard shall be. There are a good many States interested in it. As far as it involves their interests, there are a good many places that are competing for the location of this navy-yard, and that are offering inducements to the Government for its establishment. Yet, if I am correct in my interpretation, this bill proposes to confine it to a single locality, that of Cairo, without laying before the Senate any of the evidence on which that selection has been made, or without giving the opportunity of a fair investigation of the matter. I would propose, if it is in order, to amend the bill before it is passed upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order at the present time to amend the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, and it will be in order to amend the bill in other respects after that amendment shall have been disposed of.

Mr. BROWN. I should like to hear from the chairman of the committee the ground on which the bill has been predicated. I do not care to object to the amendment, but I desire to offer another as soon as the question is open for it.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to offer an amendment in the seventh line, after the word "Cairo," to insert "or at any other point on the Mississippi river."

Mr. HALE. That would make the bill rather incongruous. As it now reads it is, "that the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept from the corporate authorities of the city of Cairo, in the State of Illinois, or from any other person or corporation, a site for a navy-yard and depot at or near the said city of Cairo;" and the Senator proposes to add "or at any other point on the Mississippi river." It is not likely the city of Cairo will be apt to present a navy-yard elsewhere than at that place.

Mr. BROWN. I think the Senator is mistaken, and that I am correct in the amendment. The amendment of the committee proposes to accept a site from the corporate authorities of the city of Cairo, in the State of Illinois, "or from any other person or corporation," holding out the idea that there is to be a competition, and yet in a subsequent line it confines it to the city of Cairo. Now, I want to make the subsequent line correspond with the preceding line.

Mr. HALE. That was put in in that way by the committee from the idea that there might be land that it would be necessary to occupy if the yard was located at Cairo, owned by some other ownership than the city; there might be other persons or corporations owning land there that would be necessary for the yard, and that they would give for that purpose. That was the intention of that amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Do I understand the committee to take the ground that the President in making this selection shall not put it anywhere else than at Cairo, if, in his judgment, the good of the public service requires another location?

Mr. HALE. The bill is confined to Cairo or near it.

Mr. BROWN. You do not allow the good of the service then to determine the question at all; it is for the purpose of locating it at Cairo that the bill is introduced.

Mr. HALE. It is easy to misunderstand. The bill is based on the ground that it was necessary to take some action, and Cairo was selected, provided upon a suitable examination it should be found that the public service demanded it. If the public service does not demand it, if a commission reports against it, the whole thing falls to the ground. It does not institute a roving commission to go all over the country.

Mr. BROWN. But it does not authorize the selection of the best place either, does it?

Mr. HALE. The bill speaks for itself.

Mr. GRIMES. Will the Senator from Missouri withdraw his amendment for one moment? I offer the following as a substitute for the bill:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a commission of seven officers of the Navy to examine proposed sites for a navy-yard on the Mississippi river, and to report their conclusions at the next session of Congress.

Mr. BROWN. I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I regret that the Senator from Iowa should have thought proper to come forward with this amendment, though it is not unexpected. I have had some conversation with him, and I thought he would probably introduce some amendments which would prevent the establishment of a navy-yard at all during the time it is wanted.

This bill is no new proposition. It is no proposition that has not received examination. It was recommended by the Secretary of the Navy in as strong language as he could use two years ago. His recommendation is repeated in his last annual report, and I can send for those reports and read them for the information of the Senator from Iowa, if he has never heard of them; but I know he is familiar with them all. It has been repeatedly urged upon Congress to establish a navy-yard and depot in the West.

Mr. GRIMES. At Cairo?

Mr. TRUMBULL. On the western waters, and there is evidence to show that Cairo has been examined. The Senator will find this is no new proposition; but the Senator proposes delay; that is the way to defeat a measure indirectly. If this navy-yard and depot is ever needed, it is needed now during this time of war, needed especially now. A navy-yard and depot are needed in the West particularly, because we have now a large fleet upon the western waters, and in the improvements in naval affairs in the construction of naval vessels they are chiefly now made of iron, and these iron-clad vessels corrode very quickly in salt water. We need some place where they can be kept in fresh water for their preservation. We have a fleet upon the western waters at this time consisting of more than two hundred vessels, I think, costing to the Government many millions of money, and I have no doubt, and have so understood from persons connected with the construction of these vessels, that they have cost the Government millions of dollars more than they would if we had had a navy-yard somewhere upon the western waters.

Now, sir, in regard to the location of this navy-yard, the Senator from Iowa asks if Cairo has been recommended. No, sir, not by the Secretary of the Navy; he would not be likely to designate a particular point in his annual recommendation to Congress; but he has urged upon Congress the importance of the establishment of such a yard, the very thing which the proposition of the Senator from Iowa seeks to thwart. The very object of having a navy-yard, and at the earliest moment, is to have a rendezvous for our naval vessels already constructed and a place to repair them and construct others; and we want it at this time, if ever; but the Senator proposes a commission to make an examination and report. Now, sir, has not the Senate some knowledge of this locality? Is not every member of this body familiar with the Mississippi river? Does not every person here know, without an examination by naval officers, that the Mississippi river never freezes over at Cairo? Does not every member know that it does freeze over above Cairo? Does not every person at all acquainted with the history of the country know, and does it require any naval officer to report it, that only last winter, for weeks and I believe for months, the Mississippi river was hermetically sealed between Carondelet and Cairo, and teams were crossing it upon the ice? Do we not also know that the water between Carondelet and Cairo is so low that the very vessels constructed up at Carondelet have not been able to get down to Cairo for months.

I have before me an official map made by engineers who measured the Mississippi river and its waters, and it shows that the least low-water depth on the bars between the mouth of the Missouri river and Cairo is but two feet. There are times when there is only two feet of water between Cairo and Carondelet on the bars, and some of the vessels now upon the western waters which were constructed at Carondelet were tied up there for months.

We know all this. We know that the Mississippi and the Ohio unite their waters at Cairo, and we know that from Cairo to the Gulf of Mexico there is always a sufficient depth of water at all seasons to float the naval craft which we have upon the western waters. The Senator from Missouri shakes his head. I ask him to furnish me the evidence during this war of a single naval vessel that has been delayed in getting to Cairo by reason of low water.

Mr. BROWN. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that some of the worst bars in the Mississippi river are below Cairo.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator does not answer my question.

Mr. GRIMES. I can answer it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Name.

Mr. GRIMES. I can name to the Senator several vessels that struck on the bar just below Helena.

Mr. TRUMBULL. What were they?

Mr. GRIMES. Half a dozen vessels, iron-clads—the Baron de Kalb, the Carondelet, and others. There is one of the worst bars in the neighborhood of Helena that there is in the Mississippi river.

Mr. BROWN. That proves the necessity of further examination before we pass on the question.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let us see. I have the official report before me. The least low water on the bars between Cairo and Memphis is five feet.

Mr. GRIMES. Our boats draw eight feet of water.

Mr. TRUMBULL. You may have them loaded so that they will draw eight feet of water. But both the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Missouri have asserted that the worst bars in the Mississippi are below Cairo. Now I have got the official map of the engineers, which shows that there is never less than five feet of water below Cairo, and there are but two feet above it. Then what becomes of that assertion?

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator from Iowa did not assert any such thing as that the worst bars on the Mississippi river were below Cairo.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I misunderstood the Senator, and beg his pardon.

Mr. BROWN. I said that some of the worst bars in the Mississippi river were below Cairo, as every steamboat man knows.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then it is the Senator from Missouri who asserts it, and he says that every steamboat man knows what the engineers who measured the water and who report officially on the subject do not know. There is three feet more of water on the shallowest place below Cairo than there is above it. As I said, everybody at all acquainted with this locality knows that the river does not freeze below Cairo, that there is no obstruction by ice. I have before me an official report showing that the lowest depth of water on any of the bars between Cairo and Memphis is five feet.

Mr. BROWN. May I ask the Senator what he reads from?

Mr. TRUMBULL. From the official report of the engineer department. It may be true that there may, at some particular stage of very low water, be a time when some of the gunboats, loaded and armed, might not be able to pass some of the bars. The Senator from Iowa has mentioned such a case. I did not remember that any of the boats had ever been detained by low water below Cairo. It seems there has been such a case. I was not aware of it. I know that it is only in the very lowest stage of water, which very seldom occurs, that a vessel could be detained. If that be an objection to the establishment of a navy-yard at Cairo, it certainly would be an equal objection to the establishment of a yard anywhere above Cairo, and that would lead to the necessity of going below Helena, down, I suppose, to Memphis.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Helena is below Memphis.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Helena is below Memphis. It would then involve the necessity of going still below Helena. Does anybody propose to establish a navy-yard and depot below Helena? I am quite sure the Senator from Iowa would not propose any such thing now, and we want this yard and depot for war purposes. So much as to the question of the depth of water. The Senator from Michigan, I believe, started the objection.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not understand the Senator from Illinois. I have started no objection. He is entirely mistaken.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understood the Senator from Michigan to assert that this was an unhealthy location, subject to fever and ague. If I misunderstood him I have no reply to make in reference to it. There was, however, evidence before the committee in regard to the health of the locality.

Mr. HOWARD. I was making an inquiry of the Senator from New Hampshire in respect to the qualities of this location, and I said that I had so understood, but I did not urge it as an objection against Cairo. The Senator from Illinois, he must allow me to say, is entirely out of the record when he charges any such thing as that against me.

Mr. TRUMBULL. An inquiry was suggested in regard to the health of the locality. Now, sir, it was in evidence before the Committee on Naval Affairs that so far from being an unhealthy location, Cairo is one of the healthiest locations upon the western waters anywhere. It is at the confluence of the Mississippi and Ohio rivers. There is a large expanse of water and there is always a current of air at Cairo. The medical officers of the Army who for the last three years have been about Cairo, and some of the highest in position, sent letters which were laid before the Committee on Naval Affairs, testifying to the healthfulness of Cairo, and stating that it is one of the most healthy localities anywhere upon the western waters, and going into some reasons to show why it is so in consequence of the particular locality of the place.

The Mississippi river has been repeatedly surveyed. It has been surveyed with reference to improvement upon it. The corps of engineers have made several surveys, and I have now before me a map of the Mississippi river from St. Louis down to the Gulf of Mexico, made under the Topographical Bureau, I believe, some years ago, showing all the bars and the depth of water upon the bars, with a statement of the depth of water at the lowest stages on the bars.

In addition to this, the attention of the country, as I said before, has been repeatedly called since this war began to the establishment of a western naval depot by the Secretary of the Navy. He has called the attention of naval officers to it. I now hold in my hand—and on this alone, if there were no other evidence, I think it is not unreasonable to insist upon this small appropriation—a communication of A. H. Foote, rear admiral United States Navy, dated Washington, February, 1863. He says:

"The importance of a navy-yard at some point on the Mississippi river cannot be over-estimated, especially in time of war."

There is the opinion of one of your admirals, now deceased; an admiral who served with distinction, who discharged his duties upon the western waters to the satisfaction of the country and to his own credit. He says:

"The importance of a navy-yard at some point on the Mississippi river cannot be over-estimated, especially in time of war."

"Regarding the best location for a navy-yard, I must frankly confess that I am not at present prepared to give an opinion wholly satisfactory to myself, not having visited Memphis, nor given that attention to Carondelet, Cairo, and Mound City, which is requisite in one who is thus suddenly called upon for his views."

He states this with characteristic modesty in the commencement of his communication. He then goes on to speak in reference to the various places, giving the advantages and disadvantages of each as he conceived them to be. He speaks first of Carondelet:

"Carondelet, the first named, has a good water front, of sufficient depth, I believe, at all seasons of the year, for floating gunboats of any draught. The fact of this point having been selected in building four of the first iron-clad boats that were launched on the western rivers, and all the heavy iron-clads at present under contract on the Mississippi river, seems to show that this place contains many important advantages. Here there is no overflow in the highest stage of the river, to say nothing of the advantage of its being in the vicinity of so large a city as St. Louis, together with the great number of iron-clad gunboats constructed, and now being built, at this place."

"On the other hand, the disadvantages of Carondelet arise from insufficiency of water in the autumn and early part of winter, preventing, at times, the large boats from reaching Cairo. This obstacle may exist for three months in the year, as will be seen by the correct tide or water table. Of the tendency of the channel to diverge from its present course, I have no data sufficient to form an opinion. In the month of October, 1861, our four iron-clad gunboats built by contract, as well as the purchased gunboats Benton and Essex, could not be floated over two or three of the shoals until most of the coal, guns, and heavy stores were taken out to lessen their draught to five feet. I believe that during nine months of the year, as a general rule, gunboats of a draught not exceeding seven feet might safely reach Cairo without difficulty from shoal water. The city of Cairo contains many advantages for a navy-yard. It lies at the terminus of the Illinois Central railroad. It can be easily defended against an attack, and has, on the Ohio river part of the town, an extensive water front sufficient to float gunboats of the heaviest draught. But, on the other hand, the soil is alluvial, and in the highest stage of water it is difficult, at times, to prevent the overflow of the levee, involving serious damages of material and stores. This was the case in May last; the powder and shell could only be safely stored aboard of steamers lining the levee, while it affords no safe place for a magazine or even storehouses containing perishable articles."

"Mound City, a distance of nine miles up the Ohio river from Cairo, has rather more elevation than Cairo. Already three iron-clad gunboats have been built there, and this place has 'ways' for hauling up and repairing steamers. Like Carondelet, it also has facilities, though in a lesser degree, for building and repairing steamers. Still the soil here is alluvial also, and it is not well adapted for the preservation of stores. A branch of the Illinois railroad extends to Mound City, but the place is not so well adapted to defense as Cairo."

"I make no reference to the city of Memphis, other than to say I had no opportunity of visiting it, and therefore am unable to appreciate its comparative advantages for a navy-yard."

"If Carondelet should be selected for a navy-yard, a subsidiary or auxiliary yard at Cairo or Mound City is believed to be essential while the water between St. Louis and Cairo is at its lowest stage."

Thus Admiral Foote in any event, even if Carondelet were selected as the place for a navy-yard, says that an auxiliary or subsidiary yard at Cairo or Mound City is believed to be essential. Now, what do we ask in this bill? We ask an appropriation of $200,000 for a navy-yard at or near Cairo. This bill will embrace Mound City; it was intended to embrace both points; they are only some six or seven miles apart; Mound City is up the Ohio river a short distance. The bill as reported by the committee would authorize the establishment of a navy-yard at either place. We have the opinion of Admiral Foote, who served on the western waters, a man having the confidence of the whole country, modest and unassuming in his report as we see he is, that a yard at one of these places is essential in any event. And yet we find the Senator from Missouri opposing this bill because nobody has made any examination or knows anything about it!

Again, sir, it is said in that report that at Cairo the soil is alluvial and liable to overflow. That is true so far as the natural soil at Cairo is concerned; but most of the Senators know that Cairo which now contains a population of six or seven thousand inhabitants, is surrounded by a levee over which the water never comes. We had in 1844 and in 1849 floods in the Mississippi river unprecedented before that time so far as anybody knew. The highest floods we have ever had since the settlement of the country, or of which there is any record, occurred in 1844 and 1849. At neither of these periods did the water rise to the top of the levee at Cairo. Before the levee was perfected, water came into Cairo, and I am not sure but that water came into Cairo in 1844; but since the levee was perfected the papers show that the water has never been over the levee at Cairo or within several feet of the top of the levee. It is as well protected from an overflow as any other portion of the country. There is not only the levee, but in building up the city of Cairo they are filling up the streets. In regard to the keeping of ammunition of which Admiral Foote speaks, it would dampen it to keep it in the ground perhaps anywhere there, but there is no difficulty in constructing buildings in Cairo in which to store ammunition. There are structures in the city of Cairo three or four stories high, built of brick, with stone foundations, heavy buildings which have stood there for years. The foundation at Cairo is as solid as anywhere in the country. There is no sinking of the buildings there—no trouble in that respect.

Now, sir, even if the yard were not permanently to be established at Cairo, and one should eventually be established at Carondelet, or any other point, a subsidiary or auxiliary yard is deemed essential in the opinion of Admiral Foote at Cairo. It is but a small appropriation that is asked by this bill, $200,000, and it is only to be used at the discretion of the President, if in his opinion the good of the public service requires the establishment of a navy-yard there. Without the passage of this bill you have got to expend probably this amount of money and perhaps more in providing the means of repairing your vessels at Cairo. During this war, naval vessels have repeatedly come to Cairo to be repaired and improved; and when there are no conveniences there for making repairs, it is attended with very great expense. It will be a matter of economy to make this appropriation. You will have then some permanent place, and not have to provide at great expense for the repair of each vessel as she comes up.

Besides, sir, the corporate authorities of the city of Cairo propose to donate to the Government forty acres of land for the purposes of this navy-yard and depot. Now, the Government has to pay for the ground it uses, has to rent it, and perhaps pay an extravagant price for it. Let the Government have a location of its own. It is but a small sum that is asked for the purpose. It is at the point where, without any fostering by the Government, all the great expeditions for the Southwest have been fitted out. It is the center of commerce. It is the point of convergence of rivers reaching thousands of miles in different directions. It is the terminus of the Illinois Central railroad. It is convenient to timber, it is convenient to coal, and has all the advantages that could be asked for as a location for a navy-yard or any Government work.

Under these circumstances, I hope the Senate will not adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, which amounts to doing nothing at all, which postpones the work at the very time when we want it, puts it off indefinitely, because if we are to wait for the report of a board of naval officers, we cannot get that report until the next session of Congress, and when the report comes we are then to make provision for it, and then another year is to transpire, so that that proposition will require at least two years before we can avail ourselves of the benefit of a naval depot, and I trust this war is to be over sooner than two years.

Mr. GRIMES. Mr. President, it is very natural that both Senators from Illinois should feel a very deep interest in the passage of this bill, because it is the nucleus around which is to be built up a very large establishment that will greatly inure to the advantage of the State which they have the honor to represent.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No more than yours.

Mr. GRIMES. It may not be any more than to mine, as the Senator from Illinois seems to think; but I do not entertain the opinions in that regard that the Senator does. I suppose the Senator does not intend, of course he does not intend, to create any incorrect impression as to the depth of the Mississippi river, nor does he intend to convey a wrong idea when he refers to the map which lies before him and intimates to us that that is a map published upon the authority of the Engineer Bureau. I think the Senator is mistaken in that; it is not a map published by authority of the Engineer Bureau. The Engineer Bureau never made any such survey as that of the Mississippi river. Colonel Humphreys, now brigadier general, and Mr. Abert made a survey of the Mississippi river, but they never made such soundings of the river as purport to be laid down on that map. All there is on that map which refers to Messrs. Humphreys and Abert is a mere attachment, a piece of paper written and stuck on to it, the map itself being nothing more nor less than Lloyd's map of the lower Mississippi, and they have adopted in that map what are generally understood as the soundings of the river, neither more nor less. They may be accurate or they may not be. It is very important for us to know what the soundings of the river are before we proceed to establish a navy-yard that is to be a permanent institution of the country.

The Senator says that it is a very small appropriation which is asked for. True, the amount is not large as we look at things now, when we are expending money by the million every day; but it is the entering wedge by which the Senator and the friends whom he represents expect to rive the Treasury open hereafter to pour it out to assist in building up the swamp in the neighborhood of Cairo.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Perhaps I ought to have read the letter sent to me from the Department with this map; I see that the Senator from Iowa is laboring under a misapprehension. The Department took this map and marked upon it the depths. Lieutenant Woodruff, who was then in charge, says in his letter:

"The low-water depths on the sand-bars of the Mississippi river from St. Louis to the Gulf will be noted upon the map of the lower Mississippi (Lloyd's) which he delivered to me, and it is sent to you with the information."

Mr. GRIMES. They have taken what are considered and published in the pilots' charts as the ordinary water-marks. The engineers have made no such survey. They do not know what high-water marks or low-water marks are.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I can refer the Senator to the report.

Mr. GRIMES. I have read the report of Colonel Humphreys. They do not profess to tell and no man can tell in a fresh-water stream what the average depth of the water is at particular seasons of the year. You cannot go into the Mississippi river and sound it and come here and speak accurately as to the depth of water as you can in salt-water streams, where the tide ebbs and flows, and you have the same amount of water from year to year.

But, Mr. President, the Senator relies, in his support of the measure, upon a letter written by Admiral Foote. Now, let us see what this letter of Admiral Foote is. First, the Senate will remark that it was written at Washington, after he had retired from the command of the Mississippi flotilla, and after he had had a year and a half's experience in the Mississippi and the confluent streams; and what does he say? He says:

"Regarding the best location for a navy-yard, I must frankly confess that I am not at present prepared to give an opinion wholly satisfactory to myself, not having visited Memphis, nor given that attention to Carondelet, Cairo, and Mound City which is requisite in one who is thus suddenly called upon for his views."

Admiral Foote, after he had been engaged in commanding that flotilla and going up and down those streams for eighteen months, frankly confesses to his correspondent (and this correspondence is published to convince us) that with all his observation and experience he is not able to give an opinion satisfactory to himself; and yet the Senator from Illinois and the Naval Committee of the Senate, without making any investigation at all, except to elicit inquiries from interested people who came here before them, have not any doubt as to the propriety of establishing a naval depot and navy-yard at Cairo. How much reliance can we place on this report and this assumption on the part of the Senator from Illinois, when a man as capable of judging of that question as Admiral Foote, who had had eighteen months' experience running up and down these streams in various kinds of vessels, confessed frankly that he was incapable of coming to a correct conclusion, because his mind had not been directed to the particular subjects of inquiry which it was necessary for him to pursue in order to reach a correct conclusion?

The Senate will have observed as the Senator from Illinois read this letter that it was written to Hon. J. W. Noell, a member of the House of Representatives. The issue at that time seemed to be between Carondelet and Cairo, and a contrast is drawn in the letter by Admiral Foote between these two points. Now, I wish it to be borne in mind by the Senate that there are other points than Cairo and Carondelet. There are points all along the lower Ohio and on the Mississippi river that ought to be investigated.

When Admiral Foote spoke of the necessity of an auxiliary yard at Cairo if there should be one established at Carondelet, he only spoke of that as being necessary in case the yard was established at Carondelet. He says:

"If Carondelet should be selected for a navy-yard, a subsidiary or auxiliary yard at Cairo or Mound City is believed to be essential while the water between St. Louis and Cairo is in its lowest stage."

But suppose that some other place is selected than Carondelet for the yard of construction, then he does not pretend that it will be necessary that there should be any auxiliary yard at Cairo. It is only in case one of these two rival points shall succeed that he says it will be necessary there shall be two yards, an auxiliary yard to the main one. Admiral Foote's idea was, I suppose, in that connection, that there should be a yard of construction in the vicinity of St. Louis, where mechanical labor could easily be obtained and where there was not dampness, and where timber and material for naval purposes could be kept and stored without deterioration, because he tells us in this letter that the soil at Cairo "is alluvial, and in the highest stage of water it is difficult at times to prevent the overflow of the levee, involving serious damages of material and stores. This was the case in May last."

The Senator told us that the highest water that had ever been known was in 1844 and 1849, and that in neither of those years did the water break over the levee.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Admiral Foote does not mean to say that the water came over the levee, but it was difficult to keep the stores.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us see what he says: "And in the highest stage of water it is difficult, at times, to prevent the overflow of the levee, involving serious damages of material and stores. This was the case in May last?"

I submit that the legitimate conclusion from that language is that it did overflow and did destroy the stores.

Mr. TRUMBULL. He did not mean that.

Mr. GRIMES. He says that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. He says it would be difficult to prevent it, and it was last May.

Mr. GRIMES—

"It is difficult at times to prevent the overflow of the levee, involving serious damages of material and stores. This was the case in May last—the powder and shell could only be safely stored aboard of steamers lining the levee, while it affords no safe place for a magazine or even storehouses containing perishable articles."

And yet this is the place where it is proposed to establish a permanent navy-yard of the United States! Is it not known to every man here that in consequence of the difficulties attending the post of Cairo and the destruction of public property that there has been there in consequence of this dampness and from other causes, the ill-health of the place, it has been necessary to remove the naval depot to Mound City? Is it not known that the whole profession connected with the Navy believe that Cairo is the last place in the world at which to establish it? Has not our own experience found that it was necessary to take it away from there? Why is it that you propose to place it at this point which has been tried by our experience and found wanting, instead of putting it at Mound City where we now have our naval depot? It is said that Mound City may be included in this bill. I do not believe it will be included in the bill. I am perfectly well satisfied if this bill shall pass the yard will be established at Cairo, the very place of all others that the men who have had the most experience in connection with the subject, who know most about it, say is the last place in the world to establish it.

Mr. President, Admiral Foote says:

"The importance of a navy-yard at some point on the Mississippi river cannot be overestimated, especially in time of war."

The Senator dwells with a great deal of emphasis on this declaration of that gallant commander, as though that had something to do with this question as to the particular location of that navy-yard. I admit the truth of this declaration; I assent to every idea embraced in it; I admit that it is absolutely necessary that we should have a naval depot in the West in time of war; but I venture the prediction that if this war were closed to-day and you establish a navy-yard at Cairo, in less than ten years after peace was declared you would abandon it. But in time of war we do need a yard; but how are you going to use it in time of war? How long is it going to take to establish a permanent navy-yard? We are going to appropriate only $200,000 by this bill. Next year the demand will be for a million, and you will go on increasing and increasing until you have spent millions in establishing a navy-yard there. Before you can make your yard effective to any particular degree I trust this war will be closed, for it will take at least four or five years to make the yard effective. What do you want of a navy-yard? You now are employing mechanics at Pittsburg, at Cincinnati, at Louisville, at New Albany, and at St. Louis to construct your boats. The purpose of a navy-yard is to concentrate as many as possible of these in and about the yard. The Senator has intimated that that was the idea, for he has told us that if this navy-yard had been built the Government would have saved an immense amount of money. Now, I want to know of the Senator how long he supposes it would take to concentrate mechanics, to establish your machine houses, to construct and put in running order the machinery that will be required to turn out the kind of work that is now being turned out by the mechanics at the various points I have indicated. Three or four years would be necessary. Is that a preparation for the conduct of this war, or is it for some future war that the Senator has some idea of overtaking this country, that he proposes to establish a navy-yard at Cairo?

Mr. President, there is nothing unfair in the proposition I have submitted. There is something that is peculiarly fair in it, and the proposition, it seems to me, ought to commend itself to the judgment of every Senator present. It is to authorize seven experts, men who are familiar with their profession, who know what the wants of the Government are, to go upon the ground and there thoroughly investigate the subject, to see what may be the depth of water at the different points in the Mississippi river, to see what may be the facilities with which labor and workmen can be obtained, to see what may be the character of the soil upon which it is proposed to erect the navy-yard, to examine as to the health of the different locations proposed; in a word, to examine everything in connection with the subject, and then report to Congress at its next session. In that way our minds will be enlightened. We shall not further have controversies in regard to the depth of water, or whether Cairo is a bog or not and overflowed. We shall have something authoritative before us upon which to act, and then we can act for the public good and not as at present, in my opinion, for the good of a particular locality.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, while this appropriation professes to be a very small one, we all understand that it is the beginning of a very large one; and I submit whether Senators have that information before them, whether they have that knowledge of the adaptability of various points, that will justify them in beginning an expenditure that may amount to millions of dollars before it is done. Let me say furthermore that while I should be glad, representing my own State, to have this establishment so placed as to benefit its mechanics, I am free to say that if such location is not for the good of the service, if it is not best for the service, I do not want it placed there. I value the good of the service as of more consequence than any benefit that we might partially derive from such a location. But I want to call attention to the argument which the Senator from Illinois has made in regard to the urgency of this matter; he says it will not do to put it off and to appoint a commission to find out the best place, because you want it now. If that argument proves anything it proves fatal to the bill, because it is well known that all the vessels which are now defending your western waters, all your iron-clads and gunboats, have been constructed not at Cairo but at Carondelet.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Not at all.

Mr. BROWN. The iron-clads have nearly all been built at that point, and what were not built there the material has been furnished from the rolling-mills of St. Louis. I call the attention of the Senate furthermore to the fact that the largest works of iron that are used constantly day and night for the equipping and furnishing and constructing of these gunboats are now in operation at the city of Carondelet. If, therefore, it is present necessity that you demand, the proper plan would be to take possession on the part of the Government of these works which are located where you have coal and iron and men and artisans all conjoined, all collected, and not put it in a remote bog where there have been three different attempts to build a city, and all of them have failed. I think that disposes of the urgency of this matter, and if it did not the bill itself disposes of the urgency. As has been well said by the Senator from Iowa, you propose to expend $200,000; but how far will the expenditure of $200,000 go toward erecting a navy-yard for the naval purposes of the western waters between this and the time that the commission now proposed could report and have action taken upon its report? It would be nothing; it would not be sufficient to equip a vessel. It therefore really has no bearing on the case at all, and there is no obstacle to a thorough and a scientific investigation of the merits of the various localities on our western waters for such an establishment as is here contemplated.

But, sir, what I want to call further attention to is the manifest injustice of this bill as it stands. The Naval Committee are not content with putting this matter in the discretion of the President, but they are not willing that the President shall use that discretion for the public good; they are not willing, even if his own judgment and the judgment of the head of the Navy Department should say that this is not the most suitable point, that he shall then select others; but he is tied down in the bill to this one particular spot that is buttressed around with a levee to keep out the water. I do not think that that betrays the desire to benefit the service, but rather betrays the desire to benefit the simple locality; and I do not believe that Senators will do justice to the service or justice to themselves if they insist upon the passage of a bill such as this, and refuse an amendment which is so clear in its justice, which is so eminently calculated to produce the best results for the country, and which can be attended with no possible damage to any one or to any section.

I do not desire to enter into the discussion of the relative merits of Carondelet, or of Mound City, or of Cairo. I do not desire to do so for the reason that all that might be offered to the Senate on those points would simply be the expression of opinion from the Senators who might be interested in behalf of the one locality or the other. Now, I do not think that representations of a character like that are those which should determine this body in the disposal of such large amounts of money as are going to be expended by the establishment of a navy-yard on the western waters. I think that Senators of the United States should have more ample detail of fact, more thorough knowledge, and should above all have the judgment and the opinion of those men of the Navy of the United States whose education has fitted them for a knowledge of this subject, and whose honor is interested in making the best selection possible.

So far as the difference of two feet of water between Cairo and Carondelet is concerned, I think it matters very little; because though the Senator insists, with all his accustomed force, that Cairo has a depth of water of five feet always, and I might be disposed to differ with him on that point, yet his own confession is, or rather the confession of a Senator who is on the Committee on Naval Affairs, that these gunboats draw eight feet of water, and I believe if you will refer to the report of Admiral Foote you will find that he confirms the statement that for three months of the year Cairo would not be suitable for this purpose; in other words, he says that for nine months it would be, leaving the inference that for three months it would not be.

I am, of course, solicitous that this matter shall not be pressed through in this shape. I am solicitous in behalf of those I represent, and solicitous in behalf of large interests which have been established and which are being conducted now in view of the prosecution of naval construction in my own State. How far the speedy passage of this bill would go to destroy all those interests, to draw all the artisans who are now employed in naval construction not only from the city of St. Louis but also from the city of Pittsburg and from all other points on the Ohio and Mississippi and western waters which are now isolated, and concentrating them at Cairo, I must leave to the determination of those more familiar with naval matters than myself. But I am very certain that before we do that, before we strip all these western cities of all that business and of all that manufacture, it would be well for us to know whether, when placed at the point proposed, they will not sink into the bogs that have made it a pestilence heretofore.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. President—

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. With the permission of the Senator from Illinois I wish to move an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa, or a modification of it, to insert simply after the word "Mississippi" the words "or Ohio," so as to embrace an examination of sites on the Ohio river.

Mr. GRIMES. I am willing to accept that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY.) The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Both the Senators who have objected to this bill agree that there ought to be a naval depot upon the western waters. They object to the place. They say that this is not the appropriate place. If I understand the argument of the Senator from Iowa, the contest, in his mind, is between Cairo and Mound City, a point six miles distant.

Mr. GRIMES. I did not say or intimate that the issue was between those places.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was very unfortunate, then, in misunderstanding the Senator's remarks.

Mr. GRIMES. I said this, however, that the Navy officers who were in charge of that depot, at the head of whom was Admiral Porter, had decided that Mound City was infinitely a better place than Cairo, and they had moved their naval depot from Cairo up to Mound City, which is nine miles off, as I understand.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, six or nine miles. It is in the immediate neighborhood. So far as the argument goes of the two Senators, the one from Iowa and the other from Missouri, that you cannot take care of stores and munitions at Cairo, it is sufficiently replied to by our own experience. When the boats are constructed at Carondelet, with a very few exceptions, before the armor is put upon them, before the munitions and the cannon are loaded upon them, they are taken to Cairo or Mound City. The Government to-day have to make provision there to take care of those very articles which the Senators say cannot be taken care of there.

The argument of the Senator from Iowa seemed to lean in favor of Memphis. We all understand and have understood for years and years that from Cairo to the mouth of the Mississippi there is one class of water that will float one class of boats. When you approach the Ohio river, then you come to the navigation of another class of stream. Between Cairo and Louisville and Cincinnati, for a large portion of the year, ice obstructs the Ohio river, and when that does not, low water does. So far as the argument that it is as dangerous navigation below Cairo as it is above on the Mississippi river, there is no man who has traveled on the river that does not know that the danger of navigation is between St. Louis and the mouth of the Ohio river.

Mr. BROWN. I will state to the Senate as illustrative of that point that since this discussion began a Senator has stated to me that some time since he had occasion to make a trip to New Orleans, and that on account of low water he was detained five days in getting to Cairo and twelve days in getting from there down. That is the difference between them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. From St. Louis to Cairo it is one hundred and eighty miles, and from Cairo to New Orleans a thousand. The obstruction to the navigation of the Mississippi river is below

Helena, and Helena is one hundred miles below Memphis. There is no obstruction from the mouth of the Ohio river until you approach Helena. You have one class of water, always easy of navigation, never obstructed by low water, never obstructed by ice, for a distance of upwards of four hundred miles from Cairo south, and the same objection that is urged to the navigation in reference to Cairo applies with equal force to Memphis. These are the points, I believe, that are now being discussed.

I state the fact to be that the entire supply of munitions of war, both for the Navy and the Army for the entire western country, has been at Cairo. Gentlemen talk about the overflow and all that sort of thing. Formerly that was true. The construction of the Central railroad to that point, terminating there, resulted in building up a levee high enough to exclude all high water, and when they come to build the city, the foundations for the houses are already excavated and dug.

Mr. GRIMES. Two or three stories deep.

Mr. RICHARDSON. As many as you want. You can go down two or three stories deep, till you get to the rock after a little.

Mr. GRIMES. Pretty deep.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not so very deep either. If this objection existed, if you could not take care of your munitions of war, your provisions, your ammunition, and everything of that sort at Cairo, why have the Army and Navy both concentrated there for the last three years? That is an argument, I apprehend, that the Senator from Iowa will not undertake to deny. They have had, as I repeat, at Cairo, the provisions, the munitions of war, quartermaster's and commissary's supplies for three years, both for the Army and Navy in the West. Yet the gentleman tells us here, in reply to that very experience that we have all had, that you cannot preserve them there.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not say so. It is Admiral Foote who says so. I recommend the Senator from Illinois to hear what Admiral Foote says. I will refresh his memory with it:

"But, on the other hand, the soil is alluvial, and in the highest stage of water it is difficult at times to prevent the overflow of the levee, involving serious damages of material and stores. This was the case in May last; the powder and shell could only be safely stored aboard of steamers lining the levee, while it affords no safe place for a magazine or even storehouses containing perishable articles."

The Senator must quarrel with the admiral, who is cited here to sustain his side of the case, not with me.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am not disposed to quarrel either with the admiral or with the Senator from Iowa. I certainly understood the Senator from Iowa to use the argument. I did not look around to see where he found it. I think he was pretty hard pressed to find an argument; he seized upon this and made the most of it. Take to-day the amount you have paid for constructing steamers for war purposes and the amount paid for transporting the munitions you have upon them, and you would have saved money by having a navy-yard at Cairo. You pay every month for such purposes more than the $200,000 appropriated by the bill; and yet gentlemen insist on going up to a place where you cannot complete your vessels, but from which you now bring them at enormous expense to Cairo to be completed.

I have but a word to say in reference to Memphis. I will not vote a dollar, certainly not now, to construct public works at a place where you must send armies and navies to defend them. I want them certainly in a safer place than that.

If Senators desire to have places in their own immediate neighborhood considered, be it so, and when they are brought before the Senate for consideration I shall endeavor to dispose of them according to the best interests of the country. I certainly do feel some anxiety for the passage of this bill, but not that it will benefit the people of the State of Illinois more than it will benefit the people of the entire country. I hope I have taken a more liberal view than that. I say to the Senator from Iowa now, that if he will show me anywhere a place that combines more advantages than either Mound City or Cairo, a place with the same amount of water and with all the conveniences of timber and everything needed to make up a vessel-of-war, I will vote with him, I care not whether it is in his State or mine. I am not wedded to this particular place. The unanimous opinion of the Senate seems to be that we ought to have a naval depot on the western waters. In my judgment—and by that I am to be governed—the point named in the bill is the best point at which we can make an expenditure of money for this purpose now. So believing, I am in favor of the bill. If I believed there was a better point, I certainly would go for that. I am not wedded to a particular locality inside of the State of Illinois. I have voted since I have been in Congress for improvements far away from my own State, and I have not asked for anything for my own section of the State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRIMES. On the adoption of my amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 13, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Clark, Grimes, Hendricks, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Pomeroy, Riddle, Sumner, Ten Eyck, and Wilson—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Carlile, Chandler, Conness, Dixon, Doolittle, Foot, Hale, Harris, Hicks, Howard, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Saulsbury, Trumbull, Wade, and Willey—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Fessenden, Foster, Harding, Harlan, Henderson, Johnson, Morrill, Sherman, Sprague, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Wright—15.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN. I move to insert after the word "Cairo" in the seventh line of the bill the words "or at such other place as may be found best suited to its location." This amendment will at least give the President the opportunity of selecting a site which in his judgment shall be the best. Gentlemen have predicated this bill on the idea of a reference to the President of the United States. If it is going to him for selection, I think he should be unfettered in regard to its selection along the Mississippi river. I can see no reason why, if he is to be intrusted with the duty of selection, he should be confined exclusively to the city of Cairo or near by. I trust the amendment will be adopted. I ask for the yeas and nays on it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. Any one looking at the map can see that there is but one place for this naval depot. The Senator from Missouri proposes just what we do not wish to do. We wish to settle the point ourselves, to place the depot where it belongs, the only spot on either river where it ought to be located. We wish to leave no discretion anywhere, but to put it where we know it ought to be. You might as well put it in a barn-yard or above the falls of St. Anthony as at St. Louis, where there is not water enough to float your steamers one half the year. Let us settle this point, and settle it so that it will stay settled, and leave no discretion anywhere.

Mr. BROWN. I am thankful to the Senator from Michigan for enlightening me on this subject. He professes to know all about it, to have his own mind fully made up, and I have no doubt it is fully made up; but I think it very strange that the Committee on Naval Affairs in determining on so important a matter, upon which each Senator has to pass his judgment, has given us no report of the facts or the grounds or the evidence upon which they arrived at such definite conclusions. It is a very strange proceeding, sir, and I should like to know on what ground it can be justified.

Mr. CHANDLER. On the ground of common sense and a view of the map: that is all that is requisite. We require no report from that or any other committee: a look at the map will settle it.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator seems to monopolize common sense. He ought to give us the benefit of it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 11, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Clark, Cowan, Doolittle, Grimes, Harlan, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Pomeroy, and Ten Eyck—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Carlile, Chandler, Conness, Dixon, Foot, Hale, Harris, Hicks, Howard, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Powell, Richardson, Saulsbury, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, and Wilson—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Collamer, Davis, Fessenden, Foster, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Morrill, Ramsey, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Wright—17.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time. On its passage Mr. BROWN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Carlile, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Dixon, Foot, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Saulsbury, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, and Wilson—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Doolittle, and Grimes—3.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Collamer, Davis, Fessenden, Foster, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Morrill, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Wright—18.

So the bill was passed.

RELIEF OF SEAMEN OF LOST VESSELS.

On motion of Mr. HALE, the bill (S. No. 246) for the relief of officers, seamen, and others borne on the books of vessels wrecked or lost in the naval service, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the accounting officers of the Treasury, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, in settling the accounts of officers, seamen, and others, borne on the books of any vessel in the Navy, which shall have been wrecked, or which shall have been unheard from so long that her wreck may be presumed, or which shall have been destroyed or lost, with the rolls and papers necessary to a regular and exact settlement of such accounts, to fix a day when such wreck, destruction, or loss shall be deemed and taken to have occurred, and to adjust and settle the accounts on principles of equity and justice.

Whenever the officers, seamen, or others, borne on the books of a vessel of the Navy, shall have lost their clothing or other personal effects by the wreck, destruction, or loss of such vessel, the Secretary of the Navy may appoint a board of three officers of the Navy, including a paymaster, to make a careful examination and scrutiny of claims for losses so incurred, and the board is to have power, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, to award to the officer, seaman, or other person, who may have incurred such loss, without neglect or fault on his part, the value of the property lost to an amount not exceeding two months' pay, in the case of an enlisted man, nor one month's sea pay in any other case. The benefit of the act is to be extended to the officers, seamen, and others, borne on the books of any vessel of the Navy wrecked, destroyed, or lost during the present war, whose accounts shall not have been settled, or who have not heretofore been compensated for clothing or other property lost by the wreck, destruction, or loss of such vessel.

The Committee on Naval Affairs proposed to amend the bill by striking out the word "officer," before "seaman," in line ten of section two, and inserting after "person" the words "not an officer;" and in section three by striking out, in line two, "officers," and after "others" inserting "not officers."

Mr. HALE. The bill was prepared at the Navy Department and sent to the committee for the purpose of enabling the Department to settle these matters without coming to Congress for a special act in every case. They inserted the word "officers" so as to extend this relief to officers; but as the uniform practice of the Government has been the other way, against compensating officers under such circumstances, the committee did not deem it advisable to make that departure at this time.

The amendment was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia:

A bill (No. 121) for the relief of William P. Richner, seventy-seventh regiment of Ohio volunteer infantry;

A bill (No. 543) to increase the efficiency of the medical corps of the Army;

A bill (No. 545) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of horses and other property destroyed in the military service of the United States;"

A bill (No. 546) to regulate the rank, pay, and emoluments of veterinary surgeons of cavalry regiments;

A bill (No. 548) to provide for the relief of James Lindsay;

A joint resolution (No. 23) for the relief of the officers of the fourth and fifth Indian regiments; and

A joint resolution (No. 103) for the relief of Mary Kellogg.

ERICSSON'S FLOATING BATTERIES.

On motion of Mr. HALE, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 95) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to amend the contract with John Ericsson for the construction of two impregnable floating batteries, the Dictator and the Puritan, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It is recited that the Navy Department, on the 28th day of July, 1862, entered into contract with Captain John Ericsson, of the city of New York, for the construction of two impregnable floating batteries, the Dictator and the Puritan; and that experience with a similar class of vessels in actual conflict and during a varied service of more than two years has demonstrated that many improvements could be made to render them more complete and efficient as vessels of war; and that these improvements have added largely to the cost of construction of each of these vessels, rendering it impossible for the contractor to complete them under existing arrangements; and that it is of the utmost importance to the honor and interests of the country that they should be finished and ready for service at the earliest moment; and it is therefore proposed to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to amend the existing contract for the construction of these vessels, so far as it relates to the Puritan, and to appoint a competent board to ascertain the present value, as far as completed, of that vessel, and of the material on hand deemed actually necessary to her construction, and to pay to Captain John Ericsson, the contractor, the amount of valuation so ascertained, deducting therefrom any sums already advanced toward the completion of the vessel; and upon this payment being made by the Secretary of the Navy the rights of the contractor to the vessel and material, or any portion thereof, are to cease, and be vested wholly and absolutely in the United States, which shall thenceforth proceed to complete the vessel under such arrangements as may be deemed most advantageous. The Dictator is to be completed by the contractor upon the same terms and conditions as if this resolution had not been passed. No action is to be had under the resolution until the contractor shall have signified to the Secretary of the Navy, in writing, his acceptance of its provisions and his willingness to superintend to completion the construction of the Puritan; and it is not to take effect until the completion and delivery of the Dictator. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy in carrying the resolution into execution to apportion and apply to the Dictator, in payment for that vessel, only such portion of the gross contract price of $2,300,000, for the Dictator and Puritan, as the Dictator would justly be entitled to if both vessels had been completed at the price and in the mode of construction specified in the contract, special reference being had to the difference of cost between the two vessels, arising from the difference in their construction provided for in the contract.

Mr. HALE. As this resolution provides for a modification of a contract and the advancement of considerable money, I will simply state the facts and then leave the matter to the Senate. A memorial was sent to the Senate by Captain Ericsson asking for relief. That memorial was transmitted by the Naval Committee to the Secretary of the Navy with the request that he would make any suggestions which occurred to him in regard to it. He sent this letter to the committee:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, May 30, 1864.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 20th instant, inclosing the petition of John Ericsson asking an additional allowance on his contract to construct the Dictator and Puritan, and requesting the views of the Department on the subject.

The memorialist is the well-known inventor of the turreted class of naval vessels which have been recently constructed and which have rendered invaluable service to the country. For harbor and coast defense, the turreted vessels are unequalled, and although but briefly in service, their great strength, wonderful capability of endurance, power of resistance and efficiency have been abundantly proven. The first of this description of vessels, the Monitor, won for herself a reputation that is since borne by vessels of her class. Tried as an experiment, the success of which was doubted by no inconsiderable portion of those who were deemed competent judges, she nevertheless proved eminently successful, and in conflict with the Merrimac, at a critical and highly interesting moment, rendered memorable service to the country, and acquired for herself historic renown. One of her successors, the Weehawken, also built by the memorialist, performed a feat second only to that of her predecessor, in the capture of the formidably armored steamer Atlanta.

The prowess and success of the Monitor, which was of only about seven hundred and seventy tons burden, led to an arrangement for the construction of two vessels on similar principles, but vastly greater proportions—vessels that could and would in conflict overcome the most formidable armored ships afloat.

The conflict between the Monitor and Merrimac, in Hampton Roads, took place in March, 1862, and on the 28th of July, following, a contract was made with the memorialist for the Dictator and Puritan, (both included in one contract,) whose united burden is six thousand two hundred and ninety tons, and the price for the two vessels was stipulated at $2,300,000, to be completed in nine months, and the other in twelve months, from the date of contract.

These vessels, as stated, are of the same general character as those for harbor defense. The memorialist was aware of the different conditions to be fulfilled, the plans and specifications having been deliberately and carefully prepared by himself. In making this contract the Department endeavored, as was its duty, to secure terms favorable to the Government, but without inflicting loss upon the contractor.

So far as the work is completed, it is but justice to say that it is in all respects creditable to the memorialist and satisfactory to the Department; but the memorialist claims that in consequence of the increase in the cost of material and labor, and of the improvements that have been made as the work has progressed, great pecuniary loss has befallen him. Some of the stipulations in the contract cannot be fulfilled until the vessels are completed and tested. Among the stipulations proposed by the contractor, and which is embodied in the contract, is one that the vessels are to make sixteen knots per hour for fifteen consecutive hours. Should this part of the agreement be accomplished it will be a great feat; but only when the work is completed can this important result, one of the essentials to the efficiency of these vessels, be realized.

Alterations and improvements have, as stated in the memorial, been suggested and introduced; but it should also be stated that all which were not embraced in the specifications of the original contract are being paid for as extra as the work progresses. It should also be stated that the Department has not ordered any additional work causing delay, and is not, therefore, in any degree responsible for any advance which may have taken place in the cost of labor or material since the work was commenced.

That the memorialist and his associates, or sub-contractors, are liable and likely to sustain a loss on the vast expenditure that has been made under the original contract is not questioned. The Department, knowing some of the embarrassments attending this great outlay, has extended its favorable consideration to this case. The work was novel; unanticipated delays intervened; great changes have taken place in our monetary concerns affecting prices and every business interest—for none of which, however, was this Department responsible, and could therefore afford no relief. But the reservation on this, as on previous contracts, for the security of the Government and for the faithful execution of the work, is one fourth of the whole amount. In order to aid the memorialist, the Department, in the case of the Dictator, which is nearest completion, has reduced the amount of this reservation to the one sixth part, and has paid over the difference to the contractor. When the remaining vessel, the Puritan, shall have attained a corresponding state of completion, a similar payment will be made on that vessel, provided the sureties, who as well as the Government are interested in the reservation, consent, and are not thereby relieved from their liability.

One of these hulls with its motive machinery, and the turrets for both vessels, are being made by Mr. Delamater, of New York, for the contractor. The hull of the other vessel is built for him by the Continental Iron-works of Brooklyn, and the motive machinery by the Allaire works of New York. Each and all of these are likewise doing other work for this Department under direct contract with it. The Department has no information in relation to these sub-contractors, either as to the price or manner in which the labor is paid—or when or from whom the iron or other material was purchased with which to execute the contract—or whether the losses are to fall wholly on the memorialist or are to be borne in part by the sub-contractors, who, if sufferers, may hereafter appeal to Congress for compensation.

These are matters properly to be considered in connection with the merits of the claim presented in this memorial.

While, as remarked, it is not questioned that in consequence of changes which have taken place since this agreement was made, its completion is hard of fulfillment, it is due to the Department to say that it entered into this contract with the memorialist on terms fixed by himself and considered fair to all, and all work not specifically included in the original specifications proposed by the memorialist himself is paid for as extra by the Department.

There are no professional or technical points involved in the case.

I am aware of no complaint against the Department of severity or illiberality.

The case is one that presents itself to Congress for fair and liberal consideration. The memorialist has been a public benefactor, and in the fullness of patriotic zeal has freely given to his country the productions of his genius and the labors of a remarkable mind. In doing this and undertaking to furnish the Government with vessels that should give it maritime supremacy, he does not appear to have been influenced by pecuniary motives. His work has been well done and is worthy of the Government and country. The machinery to execute his contract has, to some extent, had to be made by the memorialist in order to construct his vessels, which are themselves novel in naval architecture. These and other causes, partly at least governmental, contribute to make this case an unusual one. Of the wisdom and propriety of making it exceptional, and of extending relief to the memorialist, Congress can alone decide and must be the exclusive judge.

The memorial is herewith returned.
I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
GIDEON WELLES,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. JOHN P. HALE, Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate.

I will now read Mr. Ericsson's statement, and leave the question with the Senate:

NEW YORK, June 12, 1864.

SIR: The honorable Secretary of the Navy in his reply to your communication of the 20th of May, requesting the views of the Department on the subject of my petition for additional allowance on the contract for constructing the Dictator and Puritan, has been pleased to recommend my case to the favorable consideration of Congress; but the honorable Secretary, in his zeal to curtail the expenditures of the Department, has not been so liberal in paying for extra work as his communication would indicate, for notwithstanding the positive recommendation of Admiral Gregory to pay the whole amount claimed, and notwithstanding the awards in my favor of two separate boards of naval officers and engineers, more than one third of the work enumerated in my supplemental specification for extra work has been ruled out by the Department under the assumption (most erroneous, in my humble opinion) that it formed part of the contract. Nor is this all, for the prices in my supplemental specification were fixed a year ago, since which an increase of thirty per cent. on labor and materials has taken place. Again, the payment of the difference of eight and a third per cent. of the reservation, which the honorable Secretary promises when the work on the Puritan shall have advanced as far as the Dictator, namely, when the vessel is nearly ready for trial, will come too late. But the frank statement of the Secretary of the Navy "that the memorialist and his associates, or sub-contractors, are liable and likely to sustain a loss on the vast expenditure that has been made under the original contract is not questioned," together with his forcible remark that "the work was novel; unanticipated delays intervened; great changes have taken place in our monetary concerns affecting prices and every business interest"—these statements of the honorable Secretary would appear to be all-sufficient to entitle me to favorable consideration. Congress, I feel confident, will not refuse to grant relief in view of the peculiar merits of the case, as set forth by the chief of the Navy Department.

The suggestion of the honorable Secretary that sub-contractors "who, if sufferers, may hereafter appeal to Congress for compensation," I deem it my duty to dispose of at once, and to assure you that unless I could show that all claims had been liquidated, I should not have petitioned for relief.

For the satisfaction of the Naval Committee and Congress I have now the honor to transmit acknowledgments from the builders of the ships and machinery, together with their bonds releasing the United States.

I have also the honor to transmit the cashier's statement marked A, duly sworn to, showing that up to June 11 the sum of $2,415,449 has been paid out in cash for the two ships. In addition to which amount I owe to the sub-contractors $94,543, (see statement marked B.) together, $2,509,991. To meet this expenditure I have received from the Navy Department the sum of $1,819,134, as per statement marked C. It will be seen, therefore, that the cash actually paid out in excess of receipts, together with the money now due to the sub-contractors, amounts to $690,857. One year's interest on this sum, at seven per cent., would amount to $48,359. Mr. Babcock has, however, not included in his statement the disbursements attending the negotiations connected with raising funds; but as the building of the vessels has occupied over twenty-two months the outlay on this account will somewhat exceed $40,000, which, added to the before-named $690,857, shows the actual outlay in excess of receipts to be $730,857.

To complete the Dictator agreeable to contract will require, at current rates of materials and labor, $193,747. The Puritan, with her two turrets, will require $20,279, as shown by Mr. Delamater's certificates, marked E. The foregoing sums, added together, will amount to $1,447,883. To meet this outlay, I have the balance to be paid (after completion) by the Navy Department on the original contract, and the balance due on extra work, together $865,446. (See statement D.) Accordingly there will be a deficiency of $581,437 to be made good by myself and associates. But as the reservation will not be paid until several months after delivery, and since the two last payments under the contract will not be paid until after delivery of the two ships at the navy-yard, the sum of $1,447,883 must in the mean time be raised by myself and associates. It will hardly be necessary for me to assure the Naval Committee that it is wholly out of our power to furnish such an amount, and that therefore the ships cannot be furnished unless relief is granted by Congress.

I am, sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,
J. ERICSSON.
Hon. JOHN P. HALE, Chairman of Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate.

This joint resolution proposes to grant the relief asked for, which is substantially that he shall go on and perfect the ship that is nearest to perfection, and that the Government shall take the other at an appraisement.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs whether these vessels form a part of the twenty monitors that it is understood will not float with the turret and armament.

Mr. HALE. No, sir, these are very different things.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am in favor of the purpose of this resolution, but I have had some difficulty to understand whether the resolution accomplishes precisely what was intended, or whether it does not go beyond what was intended. No man in the country, I am sure, can have a higher admiration for the genius and patriotism and devotion to country of Mr. Ericsson. I do not think that in this war any man has entitled himself more to the public gratitude. I have no doubt that these vessels have been built faithfully, and that their construction has resulted in great loss to Mr. Ericsson and those associated with him in this work, and I desire that they should be made whole. I desire that the contractors should receive from the Government for these vessels every dollar which they have expended, and which I have no doubt has been well expended, and then I desire that Mr. Ericsson should have a suitable reward for his exertions and discoveries. But I wish to ask the chairman of the Naval Committee a question in regard to the effect of this resolution. These vessels were contracted for two years ago. I suppose the iron and machinery and large portions of the work were contracted for at the prices then prevalent, gold being a great deal lower than it is to-day certainly. Now, are we to take the Puritan at a valuation based on the present prices of materials and labor? I suppose iron is worth now more than double what it was when the iron in this vessel was bought. Is it meant that we are to pay for the vessel what it would cost to build it now, or what it did cost at the time the materials were purchased? The latter, I think, every Senator would be in favor of allowing. I think it would not be fair to the Government to pay what it would cost to build it now.

I feel great reluctance in making this statement, because I am very desirous that Mr. Ericsson and the very honorable gentlemen who have been associated with him in performing a public service should come out of it well. I wish the resolution explained in the particular to which I have referred: I suppose the chairman of the committee can do it.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is a very important proposition. I desire to know if it has any connection with the bill for the relief of the contractors for the double-enders.

Mr. HALE. Not the slightest in the world. This stands by itself; it has no connection with any other bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is something in the point made by the Senator from Rhode Island. The appraisement of the present value of the iron alone might give to the contractors an enormous profit. They undoubtedly purchased the iron much lower than the present rates. An appraisement of the vessel now might give them an enormous profit instead of simply making them whole. I am disposed to vote for a proposition to make Mr. Ericsson whole; not to allow him to lose anything, because it was an experiment. I am doubtful whether the resolution as it stands would not give too much. Not being a member of the Naval Committee I am not sufficiently informed to say how that is.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have prepared an amendment to be submitted if it meets the views of the chairman of the Naval Committee, so as to make the joint resolution read thus:

*Be it resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to amend the existing contract for the construction of the Dictator and the Puritan, and to appoint a competent board to ascertain their cost as far as completed, and of the material on hand deemed actually necessary to their construction, and of interest on the same, and to pay to Captain John Ericsson, the contractor, the amount of valuation so ascertained, deducting therefrom any sums already advanced toward the completion of said vessels; and that on said payment being made by the Secretary of the Navy, the rights of the contractor to said vessels and material or any portion thereof shall cease, and be vested wholly and absolutely in the United States, which shall thenceforth proceed to complete said vessels under such arrangements as may be deemed most advantageous: *Provided, That no action shall be had under this resolution until said contractor shall have signified to the Secretary of the Navy, in writing, his acceptance of its provisions and his willingness to superintend to completion the construction of said vessels.

And be it further resolved, That upon the completion of said vessels, and their delivery to the Government, and their acceptance, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to pay to John Ericsson, in addition to such compensation as may be agreed upon for his services in superintending the completion of said vessels, the sum of — dollars.

I do not know that this is exactly right, but I have felt it my duty to suggest it to the Senate. I would rather pass the resolution as it is than not pass any at all, for I think some relief is due to him and his associates. I understand it is their opinion—and they are gentlemen who would make no misrepresentations on the subject—that the resolution does not make them whole; but at the same time they would rather have it than a better one, because it is late in the session and they fear that any amendment adopted here may not be acted on by the House of Representatives. There is also another consideration of very great importance, and that is that the vessels ought to be immediately prosecuted to completion; but still I do not think the Government ought to pay the present valuation of iron and labor that was bought and performed two years ago.

Mr. DIXON. I like the original proposition better than this amendment. It seems to me this complicates the matter, and I do not see that it protects the Government more than the original proposition as passed by the House of Representatives, and reported by our committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me that to pay Mr. Ericsson and his associates the present value of these vessels would be to give them a profit of at least one hundred per cent. on the entire cost of the work. That cost was disbursed by them a year or two ago. Probably some of the contracts were made immediately after the contract with the Government. To give them the entire present value would be to give them an enormous profit on their work. They ask for relief. Ordinarily they would not be entitled to relief. They made a contract with the Government which they were bound to perform, and if it were an ordinary case I would not extend any relief to them. But the case of Mr. Ericsson is rather peculiar. Here was a new invention, a species of vessel demanded by the wants of the Government, useful for the Government, and I think the Government ought to bear the burden of the loss, if there has been any, in the experiment. There is no reason why the whole burden should be thrown on Mr. Ericsson and his associates. I am willing to make them whole and allow him a reasonable compensation for his services while superintending these vessels. I have no objection to that; but, under color of estimating these vessels at their present value, to give to the gentlemen who built them an enormous profit, I think would be grossly unjust to the Government. I hope we shall not do so. I am perfectly willing that an account shall be rendered, and that we shall take the vessels off the hands of these gentlemen at their cost, allowing Mr. Ericsson a reasonable compensation for his personal services. I think that is all the relief we can properly render, especially in the present condition of our money affairs.

Mr. HALE. There is no mistake about this matter, and if Senators will give me their attention for a few moments I think I can make them understand it. There is only one vessel to be appraised. The Dictator is nearly done, and Mr. Ericsson is to go on and finish it at his own cost and in his own way. To appraise the other at its actual cost, without taking into consideration its present value, would be no relief at all. Mr. Ericsson states to you that he is actually behindhand in money that he has paid out on these two vessels, over and above what he has received from the Department, without casting interest, over six hundred and ninety thousand, nearly seven hundred thousand, dollars; and he tells you further, that to complete the Dictator, which he has got to complete, will require $196,000, and upon that there will be an enormous loss. How is it to be made up? The Government does not interfere in the case of the Dictator; he is to go on and complete it, and complete it at an enormous loss. How is that to be made up to him? By taking the other vessel off his hands at its present value.

I do not understand exactly the logic of the Senator from Rhode Island. He says he is willing to make Mr. Ericsson whole, and to pay him a bonus in addition, which bonus is left blank. One of the gentlemen, of very high respectability, who has been associated with Mr. Ericsson, and is one of his sureties to the Government, stated to the committee that if you passed the resolution in the form in which it now is he would be very glad to be let off with a loss of $100,000 under the resolution as it now stands. You should remember when you come to estimate the value of these vessels—there are two of them—that there was to be $2,300,000 paid for them, which would be $1,150,000 for one, allowing them to be equal.

This resolution proposes simply to give Captain Ericsson for the $690,000 that he is now actually deficient in money advances what can be made by estimating the value of the vessel at its fair price. That is all the relief proposed. It will not make him whole. Such was the testimony before the committee; but still as it is a great undertaking and involves immense capital he is willing to take this rather than to wait for anything further. Let me ask my friend from Iowa if he thinks it possible that the increase in the price of iron on a vessel that is to cost a little over $1,100,000 can be such that Mr. Ericsson can make a profit. We know that he is now out of pocket for money actually advanced $690,000, and nearly $200,000 are required to finish the Dictator. That will be $900,000 that he will be out of pocket; and is it possible that he can make that amount or anything like it out of the increased value of the iron which is now in the Puritan? for that is all there is of it. The other vessel we do not interfere with.

It seems to me if we are going to do anything we had better do this. If the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island should be adopted it will be a total defeat of the measure. It is of immense consequence that these vessels should be prepared and ready for service. The Government wants them, and wants them immediately. If we are going to do anything we had better do it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. I thought it was on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand the amendment to be pressed.

Mr. ANTHONY. I shall not press it. I merely wished to bring the matter to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading. I simply desire to offer the amendment suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to strike out the words "present value" wherever they occur and to insert "actual cost." I am not familiar enough with the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island to offer it. If he will explain it, I will offer it.

Mr. ANTHONY. That I think will not answer the purpose, because undoubtedly there has been a loss upon the Dictator, and if Mr. Ericsson is compelled to bear the whole loss upon the Dictator and then is only paid the actual cost of the Puritan, he will be largely out of pocket. The amendment I suggested was that he be paid the actual cost of both vessels with interest upon that sum.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator's amendment is prepared and he will hand it to me I will offer it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is there nothing in the amendment offered by the member from Rhode Island that does not go beyond that?

Mr. GRIMES. Yes; there is another section giving a gratuity.

Mr. JOHNSON. I thought so.

Mr. GRIMES. What do I understand to be the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no question now before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will offer my amendment in order to test the sense of the Senate by inserting the words "actual cost" for "present value" where they occur in the sixth line, and if the Senate should adopt that as the rule it will be very easy then to make it apply to both the Dictator and the Puritan.

Mr. JOHNSON. I may be incorrectly informed, but I learn from gentlemen in whom I think I have every reason to rely, that even with the resolution as it came from the House of Representatives there will be a loss, and if that is so, the amendment proposed by the honorable member from Ohio and included in the amendment suggested by the honorable member from Rhode Island will make that loss the greater.

The facts, as I understand them, are, that in consequence of alterations in the vessels, not included in the original contract, the expense of their construction has been very greatly enhanced, and that that expense has been still more enhanced by the expense of all the material that they have been obliged to purchase in consequence of the depreciation of the currency. The resolution as it came from the House of Representatives assumes that we are to pay for these vessels only what they are worth to us, no more. We do not propose to give anything to Mr. Ericsson or the sureties of Mr. Ericsson beyond the value of the vessels to us, and I submit that if the vessels are worth so much to us, and if by giving that amount to Ericsson we still leave him the loser, that it is exacting a very hard bargain upon him to reduce it by the amendment proposed by the honorable member from Ohio so as to make that loss the greater.

Mr. President, I had some experience in feeling the great boon that Ericsson conferred upon the nation by the discovery of what are called his monitors. The Legislature of Maryland was in session when the Merrimac made her appearance at Fortress Monroe, and when she destroyed two of the finest ships of the Navy, and if she had not been worsted she would evidently have been able to destroy all the rest. There was a great deal of uneasiness at the head of the Chesapeake as to the result. When the morning papers conveyed to us the tidings that that little vessel called the Monitor, under the command of Worden, had met the Merrimac, whose size was double her own and more, and we found that she had been able to drive her back and to save the fleet, there was not a member of that Legislature, if it had been asked as a condition upon which the safety then felt had been procured, would not have voted millions to the inventor of the Monitor.

But these two vessels are not monitors such as is the one of which I have spoken. They are magnificent ships, and he who is destined to command the one, selected by the Department for his gallantry and skill, has told me, not in a spirit of boasting, weeks and weeks ago, when he anticipated to be afloat upon her, that upon this Dictator which we are to get under this resolution he would not be afraid to meet the naval armaments of England and France combined, and I have confidence in his judgment. He may have overrated her ability, but he could not have overrated it to such an extent as not to authorize us in relying upon his judgment that she is more than an equal to any two of the ships that belong to either of the Governments to which I have adverted.

I want them afloat. This resolution puts them afloat; and why are we doubting about it? Upon what ground are we doubting about it? Not upon the ground that the vessels are not worth to us every dollar at which anybody could appraise them now, but because if we give to that inventor who has placed us in a situation to defy the navies of the world what they are worth to us, it is possible that he may gain rather more than he has expended.

Mr. HALE. I want to set the Senator right on that point. He seems to labor under the impression that we are to appraise for both vessels. We only propose to pay for one.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand that. The honorable member reminds me, and I have not forgotten it, that we are to get the Dictator without any appraisement, and the only one that is to be appraised is the Puritan. Appraised how? By what standard? Appraised by the standard which the appraisers may suppose to be her present value; and should we halt in seeking to enforce a hard bargain, as the result has proved it to be, as between the United States and this inventor, when we must all admit that with those two vessels New York will be safe, and every other port of the United States will be safe as against any incursion of any naval foe coming either from England or from France? I hope not, sir.

Mr. GRIMES. I have not looked into the matters of fact connected with this resolution, but if I understand it the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island has altogether a different effect from that contemplated by the Senator from Rhode Island. I think it was stated here that Captain Ericsson, if this resolution passed as it came to us from the House of Representatives, would at any rate be the loser to the amount of $160,000.

Mr. HALE. One hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. GRIMES. If the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island be adopted?

Mr. HALE. I speak of the particular amendment now before us.

Mr. GRIMES. It is the same one. I believe that the Senator from Ohio adopted it. It would refund to Captain Ericsson every dollar he has advanced, making him entirely harmless, and then he has another amendment which he proposes to put on to pay a gratuity to Captain Ericsson. I will read the resolution, as I understand the Senator from Rhode Island proposes to amend it:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to amend the existing contract for the construction of these vessels, and to appoint a competent board to ascertain the actual cost, as far as completed, and of the material on hand deemed actually necessary to their construction, and to pay Captain John Ericsson, the contractor, the amount of valuation so ascertained, deducting therefrom any sums already advanced toward the completion of said vessels; and that upon said payment being made by the Secretary of the Navy the rights of the contractor to said vessels and material or any portion thereof shall cease and be vested wholly and absolutely in the United States, which shall thenceforth proceed to complete said vessels under such arrangements as may be deemed most advantageous, &c.

That applies to both the Puritan and the Dictator. Then it directs the board to examine the accounts of Captain Ericsson and his sureties, see exactly the amount that has been expended for material and for labor and the amount of material that may be on hand, and pay it to him and his sureties. There is no particular loss, as I understand it. If there is, I should like to have some gentleman tell me where. Then it proposes after this has been done, after we have paid to Captain Ericsson everything that he or his sureties have advanced, and paid him for all his labors, that we shall go on and complete the vessels, and the Senator proposes to give him a gratuity besides. It seems to me—I may be rather obtuse and not see it—but if it be true, as no doubt it is, that Captain Ericsson would be the loser to the amount of $100,000 by the original proposition of the House of Representatives, he will be certainly saved that $100,000 by the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then we should pay more.

Mr. GRIMES. But we do pay more. We want to do justice to Captain Ericsson, I take it; we want to do exactly what is right, and if it costs more let us pay it. It is saving Captain Ericsson harmless, and we are getting our vessels at what they actually cost. That is all there is in the amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me, Mr. President, that there are two substantial objections to the amendment, either of which by itself would induce me to vote against it. The first one is that it would produce delay; these vessels would not be completed nearly as speedily as if we passed the resolution reported by the committee; and that is to me a fatal objection to the amendment, for I consider promptness as it regards the completion of these vessels as more important than money. In the next place, I believe the Government would lose money by adopting the amendment. As it stands at present the board to be appointed by the Secretary to estimate the value of the Puritan will not, as I believe, place on her any fanciful but her real value; and that, it seems to me, the Government ought to be willing to pay. No doubt her present value will be somewhat more than she has cost her builders, and if that were the only ship, if it stood there alone, there might by possibility be an objection; but when we take into account that here is the Dictator by the side of the Puritan, which has cost her builders vastly more than the contract price, they having lost upon the construction of that vessel already something near half a million dollars, and that loss is to be borne by the present builders, they to go on and complete the Dictator according to the contract without additional allowances, it seems to me but fair that we should allow something to the contractors on the price of the Puritan. Estimating her at her present value will not by any means be hard upon the Government, while it will certainly not be extra liberal to the builders when we take into account the two vessels.

The principle of the amendment proposed is that we take both the vessels at the present time at their cost, ask these builders to show their accounts for material and labor, and pay them so that they are made whole, and we then take the material which they have on hand necessary for the completion of the two vessels and pay to the builders a fair price for that. We cannot do that as I believe without a greater expenditure of money than the amount which we shall have to pay by passing this resolution. Besides, the more fatal objection is the delay which we shall undoubtedly encounter if we adopt this amendment, making it necessary for the resolution to go back to the House of Representatives and endangering the passage of any resolution as between the Houses between this and the time of the adjournment, and unless something is done these vessels will stop where they are. These builders have gone to the utmost of their ability. They have exhausted their means and exhausted their credit, and there is required a million dollars or thereabouts to complete the vessels, which they cannot raise. The result therefore will be that these vessels will be unfinished, and in that condition they are as useless to the Government as though not a blow had been struck upon them.

Under these circumstances we are, as it seems to me, to decide between a speedy completion of these vessels, with a possible payment, it is true, of a little more money than we might get them completed for, and a delay of their completion an indefinite time. Get them completed speedily is the best policy—the truest economy. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] has very justly observed upon the obligation of the country to Captain Ericsson. Suppose we go beyond the strict construction of this contract and pay far more liberally than we should be compelled to do, we do nothing more than what we ought to do for a man who has done so much in a time of peril and panic to save large portions of our naval and commercial marine from destruction, and to protect from bombardment and ruin the most flourishing cities along our coast. I shall vote very cheerfully for the original resolution and against the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to submit a motion that the Senate at half past four o'clock take a recess until seven o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time having arrived at which the Senate has ordered a recess—

Mr. HENDRICKS. I hope we shall suspend action on that for a couple of minutes. I desire to move that the business brought before the body by the Committee on Naval Affairs be the special order for the night session to-night.

Mr. SUMNER. That motion is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If such a motion were agreed to it could be repealed the very moment the Senate came together again, and it would be competent for them to take up any other business.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Nobody would think of repealing it after we had all agreed to it.

Mr. WADE. Mr. President, the time fixed for the recess has arrived.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will now take a recess until seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven o'clock p. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of May 29, a copy of the preliminary report and of the final report of the American Freedmen's Inquiring Commission; which was referred to the select committee on slavery and freedmen.

PETITION.

Mr. POMEROY presented additional papers

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1864.

NEW SERIES....No. 199.

in support of the claim of Henry C. De Ahna; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

GOVERNMENT INSANE HOSPITAL.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that all previous orders be suspended in order to take up a little resolution that I introduced before the recess in regard to a piece of land connected with the insane hospital in this city. It will take only long enough to read it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. No. 70) to authorize the acquisition of certain land for the use of the Government hospital for the insane. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to deed to John Perkins a portion of the extreme south point or angle of the farm of the Government hospital for the insane in exchange for two acres of land more or less now owned and occupied by him, and situated near the middle of that side of the hospital farm which fronts upon the public road, but not more than three acres are to be given for one contained in the piece of land belonging to Perkins or in that proportion, on the condition that Perkins is able to give and does give to the United States a good and sufficient title to the piece of land now owned and occupied by him. The Secretary of the Interior is further authorized to defray the expenses of moving the dwelling-house on the present Perkins tract to the tract exchanged for it, and of digging and walling a well out of any appropriation already made or that may hereafter be made for inclosing the grounds of the hospital.

Mr. GRIMES. If any Senator wishes an explanation of the resolution I am ready to give it. The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDLORD AND TENANT LAW.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 138) to regulate proceedings in cases between landlord and tenant in the District of Columbia, and

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, it was

Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the said bill, and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. MORRILL, Mr. HARLAN, and Mr. HENDRICKS.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. BUCKALEW asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 326) for the relief of C. F. Johnson, of Alabama; which was read twice by its titles and referred to the Committee on Claims.

EXPORTATION OF ARMS.

Mr. WADE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President, if not inconsistent with the public interest, be requested to communicate to the Senate any orders issued by the Secretaries of War and the Treasury in regard to a general prohibition to export arms and munitions of war from the United States, and especially to the Mexican republic, and any orders in regard to the exportation of articles contraband of war for the use of the French army invading Mexico.

REPORT ON IMMIGRATION.

Mr. POWELL. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform the Senate the reasons why the report of the Commissioner of Immigration has not been transmitted, as requested by the resolution passed on the 25th day of March last.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. SUMNER. I think the form of the resolution is not according to the usage of the Senate.

Mr. POWELL. If the Senator will allow me, I will suggest that the Senate on the 25th of March passed a resolution simply requesting the President to transmit to the Senate the report of the Commissioner of Immigration, but I dare say that resolution has been mislaid or overlooked, and this is merely to remind him of it.

Mr. SUMNER. I think the usual words, "if not incompatible with the public interests," ought to be inserted.

Mr. POWELL. I have no objection.

Mr. SUMNER. I think we had better follow the usage.

Mr. GRIMES. I have no objection to following the usage, but that never has been the usage until within the last three years, except in relation to diplomatic correspondence.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon. I think always in a call upon the President those words have been inserted.

Mr. POWELL. I have no objection to the words being in.

Mr. GRIMES. I have no objection to their being put in, but I insist upon it that that is not the rule.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to know if this is a call upon the President.

Mr. POWELL. Yes, sir, merely inquiring the reasons why he has not transmitted a report that was asked for by a resolution of the Senate of the 25th of March.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest to the member from Kentucky that perhaps he had better alter the phraseology of his resolution. The objection I have to it is that it assumes that the President has designedly omitted to answer that resolution. I think he had better put it in another shape.

Mr. POWELL. I am perfectly willing to put it in any form the Senator may desire. All I want is the report. I will accept any suggestion made by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let the resolution be read again.

The Secretary read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the Senate the reasons why the report of the Commissioner of Immigration has not been transmitted, as requested by the resolution passed on the 25th day of March last.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest that it be amended so as to read in this way:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to transmit to the Senate the report of the Commissioner of Immigration, as requested by the resolution passed on the 25th day of March last.

I do not believe he has known anything about it. Mr. SUMNER. I think it very likely it has been forgotten. The Senate is probably aware that there is a list occupying some fifteen or twenty pages of resolutions passed by this body addressed to the President and never answered.

Mr. POWELL. I suppose that our resolution of the 25th of March has been neglected in that way, and hence I wish to remind the President of it. I am willing to accept any phraseology, I do not care what it is. I am not sticking about the phraseology. I really think, however, that the words "not incompatible with the public interests" are not proper in this resolution, because it is really asking why he has not answered the other resolution; but I will not object to it.

Mr. CARLILE. How did those words get into the resolution? I object to their being inserted.

Mr. HALE. I call for the order of the evening.

Mr. FOSTER. Wait a few moments longer.

Mr. CARLILE. Who can imagine it incompatible with the public interests to publish that report?

Mr. POWELL. Let it go; it does not matter.

Mr. CARLILE. The Secretary has inserted those words in the resolution, and I want the judgment of the Senate whether they will put those words in or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read as modified.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to transmit to the Senate the report of the Commissioner of Immigration, as requested by the resolution passed on the 25th day of March last.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to strike out the words "if not incompatible with the public interests."

Mr. SUMNER. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland that it has always been the usage in addressing the President to put those words in.

Mr. JOHNSON. Not in relation to such a resolution as this.

Mr. SUMNER. I think so, in every resolution upon a public matter, one affecting the public interest.

Mr. POWELL. The original resolution did not contain those words.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was adopted.

ISAAC ALLEN.

Mr. FOSTER. There are two or three pension bills upon the table reported from the Committee on Pensions. They are private bills. They are very short, and I believe meritorious. I do not think they will occasion any debate, and with the consent of the Senator from New Hampshire I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 453, to increase the pension of Isaac Allen.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which directs the Secretary of the Interior to raise the pension of Isaac Allen from a half to a full pension, and to pay him such increased pension from the 26th of April, 1864, and to continue during his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES A. HICHBORN.

On motion of Mr. FOSTER, the bill (S. No. 303) for the relief of Charles A. Hichborn was read a second time, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Charles A. Hichborn, of Boston, in the State of Massachusetts, (orphan son of the late Alexander Hichborn, a contract surgeon in the seventh regiment United States infantry, who was killed at the battle of Chancellorsville, on the 3d of May, 1863,) upon the list of pensioners, at the rate of twenty dollars per month, to commence from the 1st of January, 1864, and to continue until he is sixteen years of age.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

C. A. HAUN.

On motion of Mr. FOSTER, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 466) for the relief of the widow of C. A. Haun, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment in line six to strike out the words "with the passage of this act," and to insert "on the 11th day of December, 1861," and in line eight to strike out the words "natural life or," before the word "widowhood;" so that the bill will read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place the name of Mrs. C. A. Haun, of the county of Greene and State of Tennessee, on the pension roll at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 11th day of December, 1861, and to continue during her widowhood.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to ask the Senator from Connecticut if that is in accordance with the general laws that are applicable to other persons under like circumstances. It seems to me that in relation to the duration of the pension it is not.

Mr. FOSTER. It is "during her widowhood," which is the usual rule.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Or during life if she remains a widow. I thought the law was ten years.

Mr. FOSTER. During widowhood is the rule now.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

MARTHA JANE SKAGGS.

On motion of Mr. FOSTER, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 347) for the relief of Martha Jane Skaggs. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Martha Jane Skaggs, widow of Alfred Sykes Skaggs, late a private of company E, of the twenty-seventh regiment of Kentucky, and who died at Elizabethtown, Kentucky, on the 27th of January, 1862, upon the pension roll from that date, to continue during her widowhood.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment in lines ten and eleven to insert the words "at the rate of eight dollars per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF LAND IN IOWA.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 301. It is to provide for a settler in Iowa. It is a Senate bill, and if it should not pass now the probability is that it cannot pass during the session. It will not take a minute.

Mr. HALE. I must insist on the order of the evening. I have given way long enough.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If this occupies more than two minutes I will withdraw from the field.

Mr. HALE. I have given way a great deal, and if I give way now I must give way to others. I am pressed all around.

The motion of Mr. HENDRICKS was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 301) for the sale of a lot of land in Iowa, in the Fort Crawford reservation, was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that it may be lawful for the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause to be sold after public notice the tract described as lot No. 1, in township ninety-five north, of range three west, of the fifth principal meridian, in the State of Iowa, situated in what is known as the Fort Crawford military reservation, subject to such minimum price per acre as the Commissioner may establish as fair and reasonable, not less than $2 50 per acre; and in the event of the lot not being disposed of at public sale the Commissioner is authorized to reoffer it at public sale, or after the second offering to dispose of the lot at such minimum as he may establish, and for the sale so made a patent is to issue as in ordinary cases.

The second section provides that if it shall appear that there are any other lots in the reserve not disposed of by the United States it may be lawful for the Commissioner to dispose of them in the manner provided in the foregoing section.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIRECT TAX OF WASHINGTON COUNTY.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 299) authorizing the levy court of Washington county, in the District of Columbia, to levy and collect its portion of the direct tax imposed by the act of Congress of August 5, 1861. It will not occupy a moment.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senate, if they ever propose to proceed with the order of the evening, will begin some time or other.

Mr. MORRILL. This bill contains but a single section, and can be disposed of in a moment.

Mr. HALE. If I give way to every appeal, I should give way all night and to-morrow too. I call for the order of the evening.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no order of the evening.

Mr. HALE. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business at the time of the recess.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is not in order until the motion of the Senator from Maine is disposed of.

Mr. HALE. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senate will allow this little bill to be taken up and passed now, so that it may go to the House of Representatives for action there.

The question being put, there were, on a division—yeas 13, noes 8; no quorum voting.

Mr. POMEROY. I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. I will withdraw the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. It will be necessary to call the yeas and nays any way in order to get a quorum.

Mr. MORRILL. Then, as the yeas and nays must be called, I will insist on my motion.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Fessenden, Grimes, Harris, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Morgan, Morrill, Powell, Riddle, Van Winkle, and Wade—17.

NAVS—Messrs. Anthony, Carlile, Dixon, Foster, Hale, Harlan, Howard, Lane of Kansas, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sausbury, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wiley, and Wilson—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Conness, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Foot, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Nesmith, Richardson, Sherman, Sprague, Wilkinson, and Wright—16.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the levy court of Washington county, in the District of Columbia, to levy and collect, in the same manner as other county taxes in the county of Washington are levied and collected, a sum sufficient to pay the county's proportion of the direct tax imposed on the District of Columbia by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, and the expense and cost of collecting the same, and the aggregate of direct tax imposed by that act is to be distributed and apportioned between the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and that part of the county of Washington lying outside the limits of those cities, according to the assessed valuation of property made in the jurisdiction of each by the assessment last prior to the date of the passage of the act of August 5, 1861.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ERICSSON'S FLOATING BATTERIES.

Mr. HALE. I now move that we proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 95) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to amend the contract with John Ericsson for the construction of two impregnable floating batteries, the Dictator and the Puritan, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. SHERMAN, in line six, to strike out the words "present value" and to insert "actual cost."

The amendment was rejected.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTRACTORS FOR DOUBLE-ENDERS.

Mr. HALE. I now move to postpone all prior orders, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 59.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. No. 59) for the relief of the contractors for the machinery of the side-wheel gunboats known as double-enders, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. GRIMES to strike out all of the joint resolution after the word "that," where it first occurs, and to insert:

All claims based upon or arising from the contracts of persons who contracted with the United States Government for the machinery and engines of the side-wheel gunboats, commonly known as double-enders, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for examination and adjudication.

Mr. GRIMES. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not see what propriety there is in referring these contracts to the Court of Claims. I do not see how the Court of Claims can take any jurisdiction over them unless we pass a special law on the subject. The Court of Claims can only give them what they are awarded under the contracts. We might as well refer the resolution we have just passed for the relief of Mr. Ericsson to the Court of Claims; much better, I think. They are entitled to nothing under their contracts but what they have received.

Mr. President, I will state briefly what this case is. These contractors have built the engines for the gunboats known as double-enders. They allege in their memorial to Congress that they did not seek these contracts, but the Department sought them; there was a great necessity for the immediate construction of these engines; and they were told that the engines would be like those of the Paul Jones. They allege that after having agreed to build engines of that construction they were required by the Department to build engines of a very different and more costly character. They ask that if they have built engines more costly than those they were expected to build when they commenced their preparations for building, there may be a board of investigation to decide how much they are entitled to, or rather that is the resolution that the committee report. These contractors came before us as Mr. Ericsson came, and asked for relief; but the Committee on Naval Affairs did not think that they were qualified to judge of the measure of relief, and perhaps not exactly qualified to judge if any relief at all was due. If the allegation of these gentlemen is correct, and I believe it to be correct, because I know some of them and they are highly honorable men, then they have built for the Government different engines from those that they contracted to build, and the difference in cost has all been for the advantage and benefit of the Government. If they had known when they commenced the work what kind of engines they were to build, they would have contracted at a different price, and the Department would have conceded different terms.

The committee, not feeling that they were a proper tribunal to decide this question, have reported this joint resolution proposing that the question shall be left to a board to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy; not, as usual in the case of referees, one of the referees appointed by the one party and another by the other and an umpire by both, but that the whole board shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy; that when the board shall have examined into their allegations, shall have decided, in the first place, if they are entitled to any relief, and, in the second place, how much, they shall report to the Secretary of the Navy, and if the Secretary of the Navy shall approve the finding of the board, then they shall be paid. I ask if that is not fair. I ask if that is not due to men who have contracted with the Government and have performed a work different from what they contracted to perform. I think the good faith of the Government is pledged to this measure.

I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will not be adopted. To send them to the Court of Claims is to send them nowhere, because the Court of Claims can only pay them what is due under a contract. They do not profess to be entitled to anything under a contract.

Mr. GRIMES. I intended to record a silent vote on the passage of this resolution, and to vote against it, but the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island constrain me to say a few words in opposition, and in explanation of the vote which I shall give.

Some two years and a half ago the Government contracted with certain parties for the construction of twenty-eight different double-enders. Written contracts were entered into with each one of the parties in relation to the construction of each one of those boats. They were told, and told truly, that they were to be built upon the plan of the Paul Jones, which one of these contractors built and furnished to the Government for $44,000. Specifications were furnished to these contractors at the time the contract was entered into, specifying in detail every particular that was to compose the engines and machinery. They were to receive $82,000 for each one of these engines—not $44,000 which was received by Mr. Quintard or Mr. Boardman, I forget which, for building the Paul Jones, but $82,000, showing that they must have expected to build a different engine from that which was in the Paul Jones. They built exactly similar engines to those in the Paul Jones, save that they built engines corresponding and in compliance with the specifications which required that they should be made of heavier material. That was the only variation, the only difference.

These contractors now come before Congress and ask us to go behind their written contracts. If you will look at the resolution you will observe that the committee have stricken out the words "contracted for" in the twenty-first line and inserted the words "bargained for." I have conversed with these gentlemen. They have been to see me about it, and I have listened to their stories. They say that some person came to them who represented that he was the friend of the engineer-in-chief of the Navy, and told them they would be required to build under these contracts such and such engines. Although after that time, long after, they say, they entered into a written contract, yet they want to be permitted to go behind that written contract, and they say they ought not to be compelled to fulfill the written contract, because some considerable time anterior to its execution they had some conversation with some other party whom they attempt to identify as being connected with the Navy Department.

Mr. WILSON. Who was that other party?

Mr. GRIMES. Some gentleman, they told me, who they said was a friend of Mr. Isherwood. That is what one of the committee that came on here told me. What do they do? They go before the Committee on Naval Affairs and ask them to report a resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to appoint a commission of three persons who shall go behind these contracts and determine how much is due to each one of them. There are twenty-eight of them, and they now say that the amount that will be due to each one of them will be not to exceed $20,000 on the average. That would amount to a very round sum; but how much it will be by the time the investigation is closed nobody can tell.

This resolution does not specify any term of office that these commissioners are to hold. It gives them no compensation. It does not require them even to take an oath. It defines no place in which they shall take testimony. It does not specify in what manner the testimony shall be taken. It authorizes them to make a report in this most informal of all manners, and then upon that report the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to pay that amount whatever it may be, without coming to Congress and asking Congress to make an appropriation.

One great objection that I have to this resolution is the precedent that it will establish. I do not know of any reason, if we pass this resolution, why the man who made wagons for the Army, the man who made the hulls into which these engines were put, every man who has done anything for the public service, either the Army or the Navy during the pendency of this war, will not be permitted to come to us and make just as strong a claim, urge it just as forcibly, and be entitled to the same sort of relief that these gentlemen are. I do not think we are prepared to listen to all these gentlemen upon such a basis as this.

It has been said that these contractors were deceived in regard to the work they were to perform. Every man of them had the specifications. They say they had not any drawings. It is not usual to furnish drawings; it never is usual to furnish drawings. The specifications, every particular of each one of the engines was given to them in detail in connection with their contract. As to their building the engines in exact correspondence with those of the Paul Jones, that is sufficiently disproved, first, by the fact that the specifications showed the contrary, and, in the second place, by the fact that they were to receive $82,000 each for these engines, while for the Paul Jones only $44,000 was paid; and some of those engines are not delivered to-day.

An attempt was made the other day to show by the letters of Mr. Isherwood that he had extended the time to these men. Let me read the letter that was then read:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF STEAM ENGINEERING,
September 12, 1862.

GENTLEMEN: Your letter of the 11th instant has been received, in regard to the time of completion of the machinery of the two paddle-wheel steamers.

The Department being fully aware of the difficulties under which all contractors for this species of work now labor, authorizes me to inform you that it will not exact a rigorous compliance with the strict terms of your contract, in regard to time and forfeiture for delay, but, in considation of this liberality on its part, will expect you to remit no effort and to use all possible means to complete the contracts in the least time practicable.

B. F. ISHERWOOD,
Chief of Bureau.

MESSRS. BOARDMAN, HÖLBROOK & Co., Neptune Works,
New York.

Upon the condition that they will go on and do the best in their power, the Department told them they would not hold them to a strict performance in point of time or in regard to forfeiture for delay. I have here another letter written by the same chief of bureau to Nelson Curtiss, Esq., of the Atlantic Works, Boston. He says, and these, I understand, are the only two letters that have been written on this subject:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF STEAM ENGINEERING,
September 18, 1862.

SIR: Some time since you informed me that on further consideration you might decide to build the machinery of a paddle-wheel engine of fifty-eight inches diameter of cylinder and eight feet nine inches stroke of piston.

There still remains one of those engines untaken, and you can have it on the same terms the others have been accepted, namely: seven months time and $82,000 price. It is proper to add that in consideration of the difficulty of procuring materials and labor, the Department will not be rigorously exacting in the matter of time and forfeiture, provided the parties have faithfully endeavored to execute their contract.

I inclose herewith a blank contract for your information.

B. F. ISHERWOOD,
Chief of Bureau.

NELSON CURTISS, Esq., Atlantic Works, Boston, Massachusetts.

It has been said that the Department was exceedingly anxious to secure the taking of these contracts. You will perceive by this letter how anxious they were. They merely sent the papers with the specifications and with a blank contract and told them if they saw fit to accept it on such terms and such time they could have the contract; if they did not see fit to accept them on those terms they need not do so. They had the contract written out; the specifications were connected with it. There was no trouble then in connection with it.

If I deemed it necessary on this motion I would go on and explain this thing further and analyze what I understand to be the principles upon which the report is based as I am prepared to do it if it becomes necessary; but I trust that the amendment I have submitted will be adopted. If these parties have any claims, any equities at all, I want them to go to the Court of Claims, where is some machinery by which testimony can be taken, where the rights of the parties can be properly adjudicated, and there have it determined. If we have not given that court jurisdiction in such cases, amend the resolution and let them have jurisdiction. I want to deprive no man of his just rights. If these parties are entitled to a single copper, in God's name let them have it, but let us not establish a precedent here that will be, in my opinion, most dangerous to the Treasury.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Iowa objects that these commissioners have no compensation, have no definite powers, are required to take no oath, and that the mode in which they shall take testimony is not prescribed. I remember that a few hours ago the Senator from Iowa moved to amend a bill by appointing a commission of precisely the same character.

Mr. GRIMES. What bill?

Mr. ANTHONY. The bill to establish a navy-yard at Cairo. The Senator from Iowa moved to amend it by providing for a commission. Nothing was said about compensation, nothing was said about an oath, but it was left to the Navy Department to determine, and that is where it is left by this joint resolution.

It is objected that this establishes a precedent. If it does, I think it is time we established such a precedent. What have been our precedents heretofore? At this very session we have paid away large sums upon the opinions of a committee no better informed than the opinion of the Naval Committee in this case, without the intervention of any board whatever. Not long since we gave, I think it was $15,000, to a contractor who had furnished Army wagons. The contractor offered the wagons to the quartermaster, who refused to receive them on the ground that they were unsuitable for the Government service, although they had passed the inspection prescribed in the contract. The Government never received one of those wagons, never received one dollar of value from them, and yet this Senate, by a very decisive vote, in which I fully agreed, paid to the contractor the whole price of his wagons.

Mr. WILSON. It has not passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. ANTHONY. It has passed the Senate. In another case a contractor agreed to deliver a large amount of corn at Baltimore; he brought the corn to Baltimore; the quartermaster refused to receive it; the corn was left on the hands of the contractor; the market fell; and a bill was introduced here and passed, the Senator from Iowa, if I mistake not, advocating it, to pay the contractor the deterioration, which was some thousands of dollars.

Mr. GRIMES. Oh, no; I did not vote for it.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator's colleague introduced it, and I thought the Senator always voted with his colleague.

Mr. GRIMES. He is responsible for his acts, and I for mine.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think I may safely say that in this case the Committee on Naval Affairs have no doubt whatever that these men are entitled to relief, but they do not think that they are the proper judges of the amount of relief that should be granted; they do not think they are the best judges of the fact whether they are entitled to relief or not, and they propose to leave it to a board of experts. The board is to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, and their award is to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy before any money can be paid out. Can anything be fairer than that?

The statement which the Senator from Iowa makes upon this subject differs in many respects from that which is made by the persons interested in this resolution, whom I believe to be very honorable men, and men who are not willing to deceive the Senate; but if the statement of the Senator from Iowa is strictly true, if he has not been misinformed or mistaken about it, then the board would award nothing, and ought not to award anything. They allege that they commenced all the preparations for the construction of these engines before the contract was drawn up, before the specifications were given, and that they did this at the request of the Department; the Department was in great haste and could not wait; and that when they received the contracts and specifications they had gone so far forward in the work of preparation that to break off would expose them to as much loss as to go on. It is to be taken into consideration also that the value of engines when the Paul Jones was built is very different from the value of engines now.

Mr. GRIMES. But these were contracted for two years ago.

Mr. ANTHONY. After having just passed the resolution previous to this, and I called the attention of the Senate to what I thought was a very faulty provision in it, I do not see how the Senate can refuse to submit to a tribunal of our appointment the allegations of these men. They comprise a large portion of the mechanical skill of the country. They have given their services to the Government expecting in the way of honest business to make a profit, and they have been very useful to the Government. They have been disappointed in their profit, and I do not think they ought to have any; but I do not think they ought to suffer any loss. Although I believe neither these men altogether nor any other men in steam navigation have done anything for the country like what Mr. Ericsson has done, I think, on a bare statement of this contract, allowing nothing to the personal character and services of the applicant, it is a far more meritorious case than the one we have just passed. I would not ask the committee, do not ask the Senate to make any appropriation. They merely ask for a board of our own appointment to examine and decide whether these contractors ought to have anything.

To send them to the Court of Claims is to send them nowhere. You might as well send them to the board of aldermen of the city of Washington. The Court of Claims has no sort of jurisdiction of the case. The Court of Claims could only award to them what they are entitled to under their contract, but that is not what they want. They do not profess to be entitled to anything under their contract, but they allege that they are entitled to something for the services they have rendered the Government. It is not as in the case of the Army wagons and of the corn to which I have alluded, where we paid men for losses they had sustained in which the Government received no corresponding advantage, but for every dollar that these contractors have expended beyond the amount that they contracted to be paid the Government has the full advantage; or if it has not, then the board will award them nothing and ought to award them nothing.

Mr. CLARK. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Rhode Island what it is that these men claim, whether they claim that they have done work beyond their contract and not specified in their contract.

Mr. ANTHONY. They do.

Mr. GRIMES. Oh, no.

Mr. ANTHONY. They so claim.

Mr. CLARK. And they have done it by order of the Department?

Mr. ANTHONY. They so allege.

Mr. CLARK. Then I submit if that be so the Court of Claims is ample for their remuneration because it would be a claim founded upon a contract express or implied. They would have a claim for what they had done under the express contract and also a claim for what they had done under the implied contract beyond the express contract, if they prove the work; and if they prove they did it by express order of the Navy Department, though it might not be a written contract it would be an express verbal contract, and the Court of Claims now by law has jurisdiction over all such cases, and there is no necessity for passing this resolution.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think there is a claim equitably, not legally. There is no legal claim whatever.

Mr. CLARK. Then it cannot be on the ground on which the Senator states it and on the ground stated in the resolution. If they claim larger pay for work done under a contract and for which the contract does not provide, and if they, in equity, ought to have that, that is another and a distinct matter; but if that be so I never would allow a commission to be appointed to examine such a number of claims as these, twenty-eight or twenty-nine, and then make their report to the Secretary of the Navy, and if he approve it he shall order the Secretary of the Treasury to pay all those claims.

I think I shall submit a few remarks to my colleague if he is the father of this resolution upon the indefinite appropriation of money. I desire before we appropriate the money or authorize anybody to pay it that we should know what is the amount we are to pay. The most that I would do with a commission of this kind would be this: possibly—I am not certain that I would do that—I would authorize the raising of a commission to examine into these claims and see what in equity and justice these men ought to receive, if anything, beyond their contract, if they have done work beyond their contract, or if they did not have a fair and equitable pay, and then let the board report to the Secretary of the Navy and he send the report to Congress to let Congress determine what is to be paid after we have ascertained what they have done and precisely what they claim.

Now we are in this position, as I understand it, no Senator yet tells us what this claim is. The Senator from Rhode Island first states that the claim is a legal one and then says it is an equitable claim. Before I will consent that this commission shall determine upon that, I want to know what the claim is; I want to have the claim examined; I want them to make a report of what they find to be the facts and the equities of the case, and then let us pass upon it. I do not like this appropriation in advance and then an examination afterwards. I do not think it wise.

I do not mean to prejudice these claims. I do not mean to say that these men are not entitled to something, for I do not know anything about it. If they are entitled to anything under their contract, or for work done by order of the Secretary of the Navy beyond the contract, then the Court of Claims is ample for them. It is a court where testimony can be properly taken, the parties heard, a regular judgment had, and the money paid.

If they claim upon equitable grounds that they have not been fairly paid for the work they have done, that the work cost them a great deal more than they expected, and claim in such a way that we ought to pay them something, then I want to know the ground of the claim before I vote the pay. I do not want to vote the pay first and examine it afterwards. I want to know how much these gentlemen are entitled to have. An equitable claim of this kind, especially of so large an amount, because there are twenty-eight of them, will take a great deal of money out of the Treasury, and we pass it blindly if we pass this resolution giving them just what this commission on the approval of the Secretary of the Navy shall say they ought to have.

I submit whether they should not first come to Congress and let us see what they are entitled to have and let us pass upon it. I think in a case of this kind we ought to hold the purse-strings and not the Secretary of the Navy. He has made his contracts, the contracts have been executed, and probably paid the contract price. I do not know how that is; but we are asked now for something beyond the contract price on some equitable ground or for some reason or other or these parties would not be here. I desire to know on what ground they stand, what amount they desire, and what their claim is to that amount before I vote it. As I said before I do not know but that they are entitled to it, and I shall cheerfully vote for it if they are. I will not hold any of these men down to any rigid, iron rule, if they have served the country and are deserving, because they unfortunately for themselves made a contract. I will be harsh to no man, but at the same time I desire to see that they do not defraud the Government. Let them state their case fairly and equitably to the Government before we vote to pay it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I must confess my surprise that after the vote we have just passed giving, I suppose, $600,000 or $800,000 in addition to the contract price, these objections of every kind, not one of which was raised in the preceding case, should be brought to this. The Senator from New Hampshire says I have stated that the case was both legal and equitable. I do not understand it to be a legal claim at all. I understand it to be purely an equitable claim. For a legal claim they have their legal remedy; for an equitable claim they have no remedy except here. They have served their Government and their country faithfully. They have given their mechanical skill, their capital, and their time to the service of the Navy. Of course they have had a hard contract, as almost any contractors must have for materials and work under the constant depreciation of the currency; but for that they neither ask nor are they entitled to ask for any consideration. But if, as they allege, they have rendered to the Government different and more valuable work from what they agreed to do, I submit that we do not do them justice, we do not do ourselves justice, we do not do the country justice if we turn them from our doors without a hearing.

These parties ask for relief; they ask us to do for them as has been done for Mr. Ericsson, as was done in the case which my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. CLARK] examined, and which I concurred in, for the contractor for the Army wagons, as was done in the case brought forward by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARLAN] for the corn contractor; but the Committee on Naval Affairs have not followed those precedents. We have not given them the measure of relief that we think they are entitled to, because we do not think we can fairly estimate it; but we ask that a tribunal of the Government erected for that purpose shall report to the Secretary of the Navy what, after a full examination, in the opinion of experts they are entitled to, and then, if the Secretary of the Navy concurs with that opinion, they may be paid for the amount of work they have furnished to the Government beyond what they agreed to do.

Mr. HENDRICKS. According to the statement of the facts of this case made by the Senator from Iowa it presents just this question for the decision of the Senate: whether, where men have made a contract with the Government during this war, and the contract has not resulted in a profit to them, we will make it up and give them a profit outside of and beyond the contract; in other words, whether the Government insures every man that contracts with her during this war that he shall make a profit. If the Senate is ready to take that position, which is a plain one and a naked one, then we can vote for this resolution upon the statement of facts presented by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRIMES. Lest I may have been mistaken in my statement of facts, will the Senator allow me to send to the Secretary and have read a letter from the Secretary of the Navy? It will be seen from that whether I am right or whether the Senator from Rhode Island is right.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It can be read in a few minutes. If we take the case as stated by the Senator from Rhode Island it is this: a contract was made between the Government and these parties for the construction of these engines at a stipulated price according to specifications, or at least the engines were to be made of the size and style of a certain engine agreed upon as the model and standard; but after the contract was made the Government required the engine to be larger and a better work. If that be the case, then how do these parties stand? I do not claim that in such a case they would be required to do the work at a greater cost upon a different model than the contract contemplated at the same price; but the law would be simply this: there is an implied contract between them and the Government that they shall have beyond the contract price the difference between the model and the work as required by the Government, but the original contract price shall be the standard so far as it can be applied even to the additional work. That would be the law between individuals. Then if this is an implied contract between the Government and the contractors, as it would be in a like case between individuals, the parties have now under the existing law adequate and complete relief in the Court of Claims, because it is founded upon contract, and jurisdiction is given to the Court of Claims already over claims growing out of a contract; and this is an implied contract between the Government and the parties that the Government will pay for additional work required beyond the model which was the standard in the contract.

I do not think it is necessary even to vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa, because these contractors have their remedy in the Court of Claims under the implied contract, and the Court of Claims in numerous decisions, as I understand, although I have not read them—I have received my information mainly from the chairman of the Committee on Claims on that subject—have recognized implied contracts between the Government and citizens that the Government is to pay what a thing is reasonably worth, where, in the same state of facts between individuals, the party benefited would be required to pay. It is plain law. If a man contracts with a mechanic to build him a house according to specifications and plans and drawings, and afterwards by agreement between the parties the house is required to be made of larger dimensions or of a different style of work, the additional cost must be paid, but the price agreed upon is to be the standard so far as it can be applied, and there is an implied contract for the payment of this enhanced price of the work. That applies between the Government and individuals, and it seems to me these parties have adequate relief in the Court of Claims according to the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Then, Mr. President, if they have a relief in the Court of Claims, ought Congress to create an extraordinary tribunal for the decision of their case? Why, sir, the Court of Claims has its machinery by which it can ascertain the rights of the Government as well as the rights of the claimants; it has its solicitors, its means of bringing testimony before it; and I think it is the proper tribunal to try a case where the claim rests upon contract. I am not in favor and do not expect to vote to pay a party by special legislation or to create special and extraordinary tribunals where the party has a complete and adequate remedy in the Court of Claims. Let him go there where the general law sends all citizens.

Mr. JOHNSON. The controversy, as I understand it, between those who support the resolution as recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs and those who oppose it is not so much against the propriety of making an allowance as in relation to the tribunal which is to decide it. The resolution selects as that tribunal a commission to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy. Those who oppose it say that the proper tribunal is the Court of Claims. But the opposition, as well as the resolution itself, admit that a state of facts may exist, and possibly does exist, which should entitle these claimants to some relief. Now, so far as the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims is concerned, I do not see, unless you confer it upon them by statute, that the case presented by this resolution is one in which they have jurisdiction. I think the Senator from Rhode Island, speaking in behalf of the committee, has misapprehended the resolution; and the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Indiana also misapprehended the resolution in that particular. The resolution states that these parties entered into contracts to furnish machinery for the side-wheel gunboats known as double-enders. It does not proceed to say that what they did afterwards was done under any other contract than the original contract; but it proceeds to say that a board of competent persons is to examine the claim of the contractors. What for? "For additional compensation for constructing the same, [the engines,] and to report to the Department what losses have been suffered by said contractors upon their contracts." That is all. It does not assume, it does not state directly or by implication that any other contract has been made than the original contract; but it states that in the execution of the original contract the contractors have sustained losses. If that be so it is perfectly clear that the Court of Claims has no jurisdiction at all.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator does not understand me as assuming that state of facts.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know, but I am saying that that is the state of facts set forth by this resolution. It is not alleged on the face of the resolution that anything was done by the Navy Department as between the Navy Department and the contractors which alters in any way the contract originally entered into, but the resolution states that in the performance of their contract the contractors have incurred losses. The board are first to ascertain if losses have been incurred in point of fact, not whether the United States are bound by contract to make good the losses, but whether in point of fact the contractors have suffered pecuniarily in an honest endeavor to comply with their contract. Having ascertained that, then they are further to ascertain, if there were losses, whether those parties are justly entitled to relief, and what, if any, relief—"what, if any, additional allowances ought in equity to be made to them by the Government;" that is all.

It is an appeal to the equity of Congress, not founded upon the existence of any contract creating in the sense of the law an equity in which a court of chancery, or in which the Court of Claims, if it had chancery jurisdiction, could give any relief, but an equity founded in the justice of Congress, founded upon the fact, if it shall turn out to be the fact, that this contract has been honestly complied with upon the part of the contractors. But it has been complied with by their incurring losses, and whether the Government will indemnify them as against those losses, whether it is just that they shall be indemnified, and to what extent they shall be indemnified, is a matter to be submitted to this board and nothing else; and when that is done the decision of the board is not to be conclusive by this resolution. It is to go to the Secretary of the Navy for his approval. His approval of what? His approval of the decision of the board. First, has the board correctly decided that losses have been sustained? Secondly, have they decided correctly the amount of the losses? And thirdly, have they decided correctly whether under all circumstances in a controversy as between an individual who has rendered a service of this sort to the Government under a contract which has left him a loser, it is just and equitable that the Government should make him good?

I know, Mr. President, that the principle which is involved in this resolution, if carried out in all cases, will lead to mischievous results; but that was equally true of the resolution which we passed just now. We have, by a resolution passed a short time since, discharged the contractor who undertook to build the new vessels, the Puritan and the Dictator, from responsibility under that contract, and we have gone further and have told him that we will take one of the vessels at its present value; for everybody knows, and the honorable member from Ohio was right in supposing, that the present value of the Dictator, that is to say, the value of her materials as they are now in her, and the value of the workmanship as the workmanship is now in her, is to give these contractors perhaps fifty per cent. more than they were entitled to by their contract price; but yet we have done it. Why? Because a great Government when dealing with its citizens in a matter of this description, where they have aided them in placing them in a condition to meet the exigency in which the country is, will never be influenced by these nice and strictly legal principles which govern contracts as between man and man or govern ordinary contracts as between the Government and individuals.

But how is it as between individuals? I do not now speak of all; but how would it be as between the honorable member from Indiana or the honorable member from Iowa and another person? I assume—I hope the assumption is true in point of fact—that they are millionaires. They enter into a contract with a builder to put up a house. They are strict in the provisions of their contract. It is to be built for $20,000. It turns out that the builder has expended $40,000, and that the house which my friend from Iowa and my friend from Indiana, according to the assumption, will be the owner of, is worth $40,000; would they let the builder who contracted with them be ruined, or would they make an allowance, a generous allowance? And if a generous man would interfere and save the party from ruin, a fortiori will a generous nation interpose and prevent a contractor from being ruined.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator from Maryland has put this matter upon precisely the right ground. It is an appeal to our generosity. He understands the case exactly. There is not the slightest claim on the part of these contractors that there has been the slightest deviation from their contracts. They have not been required to do anything in connection with this machinery that they did not stipulate to do in their contract. They admit it; the Secretary of the Navy says it, and it is true as he has said that this is an appeal to the liberality, the generosity, and the beneficence of Congress. It is also true that if we grant it in this case we shall have appeals made to us day after day and day after day, upon the authority of this precedent, just as we have had appeals made to us because we have already this evening decided in favor of the Ericsson claim, or because on a prior day of the session we decided in favor of some man who furnished the Government corn, and another man who furnished it wagons.

If the Senator from Maryland will permit me, I want to call his attention to some slight difference between the Ericsson case and this. I voted in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] but that was unsuccessful; but still there is a vast difference between the Ericsson case and the case now under consideration. In the Ericsson case they were very large iron steamers, sea-going vessels. The iron was the principal article that was used in them. By the direction of the Navy Department very material changes had been made in the construction of those vessels since the original contract was entered into. The term of completion, therefore, has been protracted in consequence of those changes, and the loss that Ericsson and his surties were likely to sustain, and would have sustained but for the passage of the joint resolution, grew out of and was in consequence of the act of our own Administration in changing the form of the construction of the vessels. But that is not the case in relation to the vessels now under consideration. There has not been the slightest change from the original contract; the specifications have been implicitly followed so far as the machinery has been constructed by the contractors. They have never been required to change them, and they have not changed them in the smallest degree. The Secretary's letter says so, and the contractors themselves say so.

One word in reply to the Senator from Rhode Island. He thinks that I am guilty of a great inconsistency because I proposed to refer the question of the location of a naval depot at Cairo to a commission of seven commissioned and sworn officers of the Navy to investigate and report and I am unwilling to create a new judicial tribunal (for it is neither more nor less than that) for the purpose of investigating questions in connection with these claims. I think the Senator upon reflection will see that there is all the difference in the world between directing our own servants to go out and investigate a given subject for us and report to us, where there is no money involved, where there is no necessity for taking testimony, where there is no necessity for passing a judicial opinion, but merely to investigate certain physical facts, with which they are supposed to be, as experts, perfectly familiar, and creating a new tribunal to proceed to investigate facts and then render a judgment upon the facts that shall be found.

Mr. HALE. If the statement made by the Senator from Iowa be correct, there cannot be the slightest harm in passing this resolution, for nobody can give them a cent under it under his statement, because it will be seen that the closing provision of the resolution is in these words:

Provided, That such additional compensation shall in no case exceed an amount which, compared with the price stipulated in the contract, shall be in due proportion to the excess in weight of the engines built over such as were contracted for, except for alterations in form or material made by express order of the Government.

That is all they can get.

Mr. COWAN. If the Senator will allow me—

Mr. HALE. I do not give way. I have given way all the evening.

Mr. COWAN. I should like to have an explanation, how it comes that these engines were built of a different size from those contracted for, unless it was by express orders of the Government. Is there any evidence of that?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator will allow me to observe that I think on his motion the word "contracted" was stricken out and the word "bargained" inserted.

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir, and I will explain the reason why that was done. The reason was this: these contractors went to the Navy Department and made a bargain for the construction of this machinery, but the contract was not reduced to writing, and it never has been and it never is the practice of the Department, as I have been informed, to reduce them to writing. They send out a contract and allow the man who is to perform the work to sign it, and then it is returned to the Department, and they put it on file and keep it; but the contract is never what it purports to be and what it ought to be, a contract signed by two parties. After they made the bargain, before the contract was issued, they went to work and by the time the contract was sent to them for signature they had proceeded so far that they could not back out; they would have to abandon the whole of it; they were at the mercy of the Government; they must either take such a contract as the Government would give them, or else throw up the work, by which they would have lost infinitely more than they now do.

The allegation that they make is that they were to build engines similar to those of the Paul Jones, and their allegation further is that they were assured by the chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering that the weight of the engines that they were ultimately ordered to make would not exceed the weight of those of the Paul Jones above ten or fifteen per cent. at the most, whereas in point of fact they did exceed them by nearly eighty per cent. This resolution is so constructed that no board can give them a cent over and above the weight of the engines which they did build, over and above those which they contracted to build, except the alterations that were made by the express order of the Government; that is all.

This is not a case of special pleading; it is not a case for legal technical niceties; but it is a fair, equitable, honest claim for the excess in weight of the engines that they built over those they contracted to build, and for alterations made by the express directions of the Government. It is impossible for one of those contractors to contend with the Government. I remember reading of some English judge—I do not remember precisely who, but my friend from Pennsylvania can tell me—when it was proposed in a court of law to send a party to a court of chancery, said, "Would your lordship send a fellow-being there?"

[Laughter.] When these parties come here with such a claim as this, clear and explicit, such as I think will commend itself to the unbiased judgment of every candid mind, are they to be told that they must go and make out a legal case in the Court of Claims? Sir, we are spending money very fast indeed, faster than we can afford; but I tell you we can expend money faster than we can afford to treat these contractors with injustice, with oppression, or even with harshness. They are the men who combine the mechanical skill and enterprise and industry of the country. They are the men we have to rely upon. If we ever make the attempt to construct light-draught monitors that will float, they are the men that have got to do it; and we ought not, to say the least of it, so conduct ourselves toward them that they shall feel that of all places on earth where they will go for business the Government of the United States is the last.

Mr. President, I do not want to be lavish with the public Treasury; I do not want to be liberal at the expense of the public Treasury; but I want to be just; and I think justice requires that we should give them the relief they ask. What do the Navy Department want? Are the Navy Department afraid to trust themselves? We propose that the Secretary of the Navy himself, the man who made the contract, shall appoint the board, and he may take, as the Senator from Iowa says he proposed to take, in his proposition for a commission a short time since, sworn officers of our own. He can have these men sworn just as much as he pleases; but let me say right here I would not give a cent for the oath of any man living. It is not worth the paper upon which it is written. A man whose moral nature does not bind him to what is required and expected of him will not find the sanction of an oath weigh very heavy upon him; and where you have got a man that you think you require an oath of, you have got a man whose integrity you do not fully trust, and for such a man as that an oath has no obligation.

I have no feeling and no interest in this matter except what I think the very best interest of the Government requires. Sir, we cannot afford to quarrel with the mechanical industry, with the mechanical ingenuity, with the mechanical enterprise, and with the mechanical capital of this whole country on such an issue as this. They simply ask that the very Department that has employed them, the Department that knows all about it, the Department that has in its own breast the knowledge of how this transaction is, shall take such means as they see fit by a board to inform themselves of the true state of fact, and then to pay them what they are entitled to over and above their contract, and for what was done by the express order of the Government. It seems to me the Government that is not willing to do that is not willing to do what is right, is not willing to do what is just and equitable between man and man. Having said this much, I leave the subject.

Mr. SHERMAN. The great diversity of opinion among the Senators who have favored this resolution, in my judgment shows that it ought not to pass. The Senator from New Hampshire says it is simply a legal claim growing out of the fact that the Government undertook to change the contract or the specifications after the contract was entered into, by enlarging the character of the work and making it more expensive, and therefore these parties have a right to additional compensation. If that claim is true, the Court of Claims would undoubtedly assess the increased cost of this work caused by the changes made at the Navy Department. But I am told there is a paper upon the Secretary's desk from the Secretary of the Navy, in which he denies that there were any changes made since these contracts were entered into.

Mr. GRIMES. I will read it with the permission of the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should be glad to have it read.

Mr. GRIMES. I will read for the information of the Senate a portion of a letter addressed by the Secretary of the Navy to the Committee on Naval Affairs on this subject. Speaking of these contracts, he says:

"The contracts in question were made under a public advertisement fully expressing all the requirements, and all the offers under this advertisement will be found on page 729 of the documents accompanying the President's message of December, 1862."

It will thus be observed that they were made two years ago.

"From that exhibit it will be seen that the Department accepted the offers made by responsible ship-builders who were well acquainted with such matters. Some of the offers were at most exorbitant rates, and the average price, to which the petitioners refer, is no guide as to the value—it happening that the lowest bidders were parties of great experience and known reputation."

Again, he says:

"The hulls were all completed within the time specified in the contract, and none of them were liable from delay. Whatever rise there may have been in materials or labor took place within the time contemplated by them for the execution of the work. All these parties voluntarily accepted the offer of the Department, and applications were made for contracts on the same terms by other parties, after the Department had agreed for all the vessels it wanted. The parties knew the vessels were to be completed in every respect for naval service, and their contract stated, as they say it does, that there were to be no extra bills on that account."

"With regard to the steam machinery of these vessels, it is of a well-known type, and many of the petitioners had already constructed similar machinery for the Department. The specifications were so complete, and the form of machinery so well known, that it is believed the builders in this case, as they did in that first referred to, could without difficulty have made their own drawings. It is well understood that the estimate of cost is always made from the specifications. The advertisement was very full, and the Department has exacted no more than what was expressed in it and the specifications. A considerable number of these engine contracts were taken after the work had been commenced by other parties."

Again, he says:

"The Department makes and sanctions no contract with the understanding that its conditions are not to be complied with, and it always furnishes the fullest information as to the quantity and quality of its work, and the petitioners have on these points only expressed their own views and wishes."

"These contracts were made with care and deliberation for the true interest of the Government, and only reasonable offers of experienced persons well known and competent to do such work were accepted. The Department has not increased the cost of this work by any action of its own, and if by any causes beyond its control these contractors have, as they state, suffered a loss, it is for Congress to exercise such liberality as in its wisdom it may see proper. This Department has no funds and has made no estimate to supply any such cost as this exercise of liberality will occasion, and it is unwilling to assume the position of encouraging additional expenditures after having taken all proper means to obtain the work on the best terms for the public interest."

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, Mr. President, the case made by the Secretary of the Navy shows that these men engaged in this contract with their eyes open; the specifications were written; they were intelligent men, and they knew the character of the work; they had been engaged in similar work; they had built similar engines; other parties agreed to do the same work at the same or similar prices; and other parties did do the same work at the same prices. It is the clearest possible case of a contract not varied in the slightest particular. We have here the statement of the Secretary of the Navy that there was no additional expense put upon these contractors. They were simply required to perform a contract reduced to writing, perfectly familiar to them, they being intelligent men, knowing all about the nature of the business, there being no experiment about it—a simple contract for the building of steam engines; but it seems, or at least they claim, that they have suffered loss. It is purely and simply a claim growing out of a contract not varied in the least.

But suppose what the Senator from New Hampshire claims is true; suppose the contract has been varied by orders of the Navy Department; in such a case the Navy Department are bound by the law and bound by the contract to give additional compensation, according to the well-known rule laid down by the Senator from Indiana; and in such a case, if the Navy Department should refuse to give this additional compensation, it is the duty of the Court of Claims to enforce the contract against the Government, and to render judgment against the Government for the increased expenditures put upon these parties by the change of the contract; so that their remedy is plain.

The truth is the Senator from Maryland very frankly stated the only ground upon which this claim can be justified; and that is, that perhaps they have lost money by their contract. If we are going to act upon such a rule there will be no end to the claims that will be brought before Congress. There is no equity in this claim that cannot be made in favor of every contractor who has contracted with the Government and lost money. I know of hundreds and thousands of contractors who have lost money on particular contracts, but have more than made up that loss on other contracts. I have no doubt these very contractors have had contracts with the Government on which they have made large sums. It is a well-known fact that nearly all the contractors with the Government, especially for this kind of work, have made large sums of money. They select this particular contract on which they claim to have suffered a loss, and they ask the Government to make good that loss; but they will not refund to the Government any of the exorbitant profits they have made on other contracts.

There never was a claim presented in Congress, in my judgment, more groundless than this. There is no equity in it, because these parties simply stand upon their own contract; they have no right to claim anything more. They made this contract with their eyes open, being intelligent men. They were not, like Mr. Ericsson, engaged in an experiment in which the Government have got the benefit of the experiment, but they engaged in a business with which they were perfectly familiar, and every item of their work they could estimate beforehand. I say there is no claim either in law or in equity to these parties; and if you extend this rule now any further, Congress will be flooded from all parts of the country with claims. The man that has sold corn to the Army for a price less, probably, than he could deliver it at, would have a much stronger claim, because he could say that he could not anticipate that the price of corn would rise so much in the market and he would lose by his contract—precisely the same kind of claim.

Mr. ANTHONY. We have paid one such claim at this session.

Mr. SHERMAN. If we have made such a precedent we ought to trample it under our feet. I voted against that case, and against the case of the wagons. There was another wrong precedent. Those wagons and that corn and this contract to-day will cost this Government millions of dollars, because the precedent will not be forgotten. We must correct those precedents. Those precedents, if followed, and this precedent, if followed, would compel the Government to make good the loss of every contractor, whatever might have been the nature of his contract.

Mr. HARLAN. If the Senator will allow me, I think he misapprehends the corn contract.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not go into it at all, because I do not know the particulars.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to state, as my name has been coupled with it—

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust the Senator will wait until I get through.

Mr. HARLAN. It will take but a moment. The parties contracted to deliver a large quantity of corn at Baltimore, and they delivered it in pursuance of the contract at the time and place named in the contract; but the Government officers were unable or refused to receive it. The contractors stored it at their own expense for several months, appealing to the head of the Department, but the Government still refused to take it, and they then sold it at the highest price it commanded in the market, and claimed the difference between what it sold for and the contract price, charging nothing for storage or the interest of the money or their time and trouble.

Mr. SHERMAN. That makes a perfectly clear case of claim against the Government; and the only controversy that could arise in such a case would be whether it ought not to have been sent to the Court of Claims. Undoubtedly the Court of Claims would have administered justice. But here is a case where there is no such claim whatever; where the Secretary of the Navy informs us the contract has not been varied to their injury in the slightest degree.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio a question.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. Suppose it shall appear that the contractors were informed by the Department that the engines would weigh from ten to fifteen per cent. more than those of the Paul Jones, and they undertook the construction of the engines with that understanding, and suppose it shall appear that the engines really did weigh from fifty to eighty per cent. more than the engines of the Paul Jones, does he deny that there would be any claim on anybody for that, and if there is a claim, on whom?

Mr. SHERMAN. I know the fact, and the Senator knows it, that the specifications for these engines give the size, the length, the form, and the shape; and the Secretary of the Navy informs us that some of these contractors built identically the same kind of engines provided for in this contract.

Mr. ANTHONY. But the contractors had commenced constructing the engines and had committed themselves in the work so far that they could not discontinue without a loss equal to that which they would sustain by completing it, and in which case they would have had no claim on the Government. They had done all this before the contracts and specifications were presented to them. That is their allegation; and if that allegation is not true, if they do not prove that before the board, they will not be entitled to anything; but if they do prove it, they ought to have something.

Mr. SHERMAN. Here is the reply: If they make out the kind of case to which the Senator refers, of a change of contract or even a deception, at any rate a change of contract, we have provided by law a tribunal before whom they can appear. We pay the judges of the Court of Claims, and we have lawyers there to protect us; and shall we for every claim asserted against the Government pay a new tribunal of men who are not provided for by law, with no protection whatever for the Government, no way in which you can obtain the evidence? I think not. How would these commissioners ascertain the claim? You would appoint three commissioners and they would go mousing along the Atlantic coast, wherever these double-enders have been built. How would they ascertain the cost of these double-enders? How would they know that these parties have lost money? How would they know what money they lost by the contract? What rules of evidence would they have? What means of cross-examining witnesses? They would go from port to port, entertained everywhere by the contractors themselves, with no means to examine witnesses, no opportunity to examine even these contractors under oath, no power to administer an oath. It is now proposed to create this wandering tribunal of irresponsible men, without any checks thrown around it by law, to ascertain and adjudicate a claim against the Government, which the Secretary of the Treasury is bound to pay volens volens, without any authority of Congress hereafter to supervise their action! Why, sir, it is a monstrous proposition, it seems to me.

Mr. ANTHONY. I beg the Senator's pardon; the Secretary is not bound to pay it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Secretary is bound to pay it "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. ANTHONY. I beg the Senator's pardon. If he will read the resolution he will find that the Secretary of the Treasury is not bound to pay one cent of the award.

Mr. SHERMAN. "The Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to said contractors, severally, the sums adjudged to be due them in equity by said board." It is his duty to pay it.

Mr. ANTHONY. If he approves the award.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Secretary of the Treasury has no power over the award; the Secretary of the Navy approves the award.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should say the Secretary of the Navy. Of course the Secretary of the Treasury will pay it on the order of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why organize this commission? We have a letter from the Secretary of the Navy on our table stating that these parties have no claim whatever on account of any change of the contract; that they made their bids with their eyes open. Why then appoint this perambulating commission in order to bring up facts to bear on the Secretary of the Navy about it? It seems to me there is no ground for it.

There is another point which seems to me is very strong. Our purpose in inviting bids is to induce competition and to get the lowest responsible bidder. But if a man can put in a low bid and get a contract with a full knowledge that if he loses money by it he can come to Congress and have a roving commission to examine into the amount of his losses and have those losses repaid, the consequence will be that you will always have fraudulent bidders. They will bid any price whatever, an inadequate price, and they will rely upon the precedent established in this case to come in, and that Congress will make good their losses, that they will vote them a commission, and they will escort them to their factories or foundries and show them their books, and probably mislead them as to the cost of the articles furnished. I tell you, sir, the times are so ripe that we must guard all the avenues which approach the public Treasury.

The Senator from Maryland was very happy and very eloquent to-day about the services of Mr. Ericsson, and moved our pity and our sympathy very much on his account; but he could not excite any pity or sympathy for these contractors who made these bids with their eyes open. He told us that a millionaire would not allow a workman to work for him and lose money. The Government of the United States is not in the condition of a millionaire. It may disburse millions of money, but it borrows all that it disburses now. It is in no condition to be magnanimous or liberal; it must be just, and no more.

I hope therefore this resolution will be referred to the Court of Claims; and if these parties have got any just claims as a matter of course they will there be adjudicated. If that motion should not prevail, I shall submit some amendments I have prepared to the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa to the resolution reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. GRIMES. I have modified my proposition, and I ask the Secretary to read it as I now propose it.

The Secretary read the amendment, to strike out all of the joint resolution after the word "that" where it first occurs, and to insert:

All claims based upon or arising from the contracts with persons who contracted with the Government of the United States for the machinery and engines of the side-wheel gunboats commonly known as "double-enders" be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for examination and adjudication; and said court is hereby authorized to examine and report to Congress what amount of work said contractors have done, and what amount of materials they have furnished in addition to their contract, and what is the fair value of the same.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 18, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Pomeroy, Powell, Sausbury, Sherman, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wilson—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Dixon, Hale, Harris, Johnson, McDougall, Morrill, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, Sprague, Sumner, Wade, and Wiley—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Carlile, Conness, Davis, Doolittle, Fessenden, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Nesmith, Wilkinson, and Wright—16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. The view I take of this claim is, that if the resolution stands as amended by the Senate, the Court of Claims will have no jurisdiction over the matter at all, and if the honorable member from Iowa will so modify his amendment as to give the court jurisdiction—

Mr. GRIMES. I understand from all the lawyers around me that it does give jurisdiction.

Mr. JOHNSON. The opinion of the court is a very different one, or has been in the past.

Mr. CLARK. I will read the section of the law, with the permission of the Senator from Maryland:

"That all petitions and bills praying or providing for the satisfaction of private claims against the Government, founded upon any law of Congress, or upon any regulation of an Executive Department, or upon any contract, express or implied, with the Government of the United States, shall, unless otherwise ordered by resolution of the House in which the same are presented or introduced, be transmitted by the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives, with all the accompanying documents, to the court aforesaid."

I drew the addition to the amendment for the purpose of giving that jurisdiction.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

RANK OF WARRANT OFFICERS.

On motion of Mr. HALE, the bill (H. R. No. 470) to authorize assimilated rank to be given to the warrant officers of the United States Navy, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the President of the United States to give assimilated rank to the warrant officers of the Navy, namely, boatswains, gunners, carpenters, and sailmakers, as follows: after five years of service to rank with ensigns; and after ten years' service to rank with masters. They are hereafter to be known as "warrant officers in the naval service of the United States," and to be so entered on the Naval Register. The bill also provides that in all cases where it has been or may be found necessary during the present war to detain in confinement persons found on board of captured vessels, the expenses of the detention of such persons, when not chargeable to the proceeds of prize or other fund, shall be paid out of the appropriation for defraying the expenses of suits in which the United States are concerned, and that the expenses of prisoners sentenced by naval court-martial to confinement in a penitentiary shall be defrayed from the same fund. The bill also authorizes the following addition to be made to the clerical force now authorized by law in the Navy Department: Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, two clerks of the third class and two of the first class; Bureau of Ordnance, one clerk of the third class; Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, one clerk of the second class and one clerk of the first class.

The Committee on Naval Affairs proposed to amend the bill in section one, line three, after the word "authorized," by inserting "if in his judgment it shall be conducive to the interests of the service," so as to read:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized, if in his judgment it shall be conducive to the interests of the service, to give assimilated rank to the warrant officers, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

KITTERY NAVAL HOSPITAL.

On motion of Mr. HALE, the bill (S. No. 308) repealing so much of an act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1864, and for other purposes, approved March 14, 1864, as appropriates $25,000 for erecting a naval hospital at Kittery, Maine, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire what are the reasons that led the Committee on Naval Affairs to report that bill.

Mr. HALE. I will state them very briefly, for I do not want to go into a long statement. There has been a controversy as to where this hospital should be put; I will not go into that contest. Unfortunately, the chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery had formed and expressed an opinion upon it, that the hospital ought to be built within the precincts of the present navy-yard, and he had further expressed not a very complimentary opinion of the action of Congress in taking a different view of it, as may be found in the letter from which I will read. In a letter dated January 9, 1863, he said:

"It will be noticed the bill locates the hospital legislatively, without reference to the question whether the island be the most or least judicious situation for it, and postpones all work upon the needed improvement until the irrelevant subject of purchase of the island be adjusted. It will thus be seen that all the delay in regard to the erection of a hospital has arisen from the unfortunate commingling of public with private interests, and it will doubtless continue till these interests are separated."

In the deficiency bill this year Congress appropriated $25,000 for building the hospital; and this Dr. Whelan, who had expressed an opinion adverse to its location on Seavey's island and in favor of building it in the yard, addressed a note to the Secretary of the Navy suggesting to him the appointment of a board to locate the hospital, and that board, he very modestly suggested, should be composed of himself and two or three surgeons. I will read the letter; it is a very singular letter:—

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

BUREAU OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY, March 18, 1864.

SIR: An act of Congress (No. 24) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864, appropriates $25,000 for erecting a naval hospital at Kittery, Maine; and according to the debate in the Senate, as reported in the Daily Globe of the 13th ultimo, it was the understanding that the site was to be selected within or without the limits of the navy-yard, as might be found most judicious and expedient.

As considerable feeling has been manifested on the subject, as the selection of a site may or may not involve additional outlays of money, I have the honor to suggest that this subject may be confided to a board consisting of Commodore John Pope, United States Navy, Surgeon Charles Chase, United States Navy, the surgeon of the navy-yard, Portsmouth, the chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, subject, of course, to the final approval of the honorable Secretary of the Navy. The board to meet at the navy-yard, Portsmouth, on Friday, the 25th instant.

Commodore Pope and Surgeon Chase are selected because of their long service at Portsmouth station, and consequent familiarity with the topography.

It is important the work should be commenced as early as practicable, to have it completed, if possible, before winter sets in.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. WHELAN.

HON. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy.

Dr. Whelan, having given an opinion on the case, suggests to the Secretary to appoint a board of four members and to put upon it himself and two of his subordinates; and a report was made favorable to his views, which is not at all strange.

The Secretary of the Navy intimates in a letter which I have before me that he will await the action of Congress, and if there is no legislation he will build the hospital within the yard. It is the opinion of those conversant with that yard that that would be injudicious and they would rather it should await the action of another session of Congress; they would rather not have any hospital there than have it built in the present yard, which in effect would destroy the yard. After it was understood what was going on, a memorial was addressed to the Secretary of the Navy in which it was stated:

"We should much prefer seeing the law making the appropriation for the hospital repealed to having it thus expended. Besides, we cannot conceive what can induce the Government to place this hospital on this particular yard, when it has not been done in any other navy yard, so far as we are advised, in the United States."

That memorial was signed by L. M. MORRILL, Senator from Maine; F. A. PIKE, Representative from Maine; DANIEL CLARK, Senator from New Hampshire; JOHN H. RICE, Representative from Maine; E. H. ROLLINS, Representative from New Hampshire; S. PERHAM, Representative from Maine; J. W. PATTERSON, Representative from New Hampshire; J. G. BLAINE, Representative from Maine; DANIEL MARCY, Representative from New Hampshire, and myself. This remonstrance against building the hospital within the yard was signed by every member of Congress from Maine and New Hampshire, with the exception of Mr. SWEAT, the Representative from the first district of Maine, and the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN.] The latter appended to the memorial the following:

"I am of opinion that no new hospital should be erected within the present limits of the yard, and that the law of Congress should be executed, if it can be, consistently with the best interests of the Government. As, however, it is merely an appropriation, I think the whole matter is within the discretion of the Secretary."

I am authorized by Mr. SWEAT, who at the time this memorial was signed was out of the city, to say that he fully concurred in it, and he wanted to sign it afterwards, but I told him the papers were out of my hands. The members from the two States particularly interested in the work think the public interests will be subserved by postponing the appropriation till the next session of Congress rather than by erecting it within the yard.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not feel disposed to interfere with the action of the Committee on Naval Affairs, from whom this bill comes, if they have investigated it. In pursuance of my duty as a member of the Committee on Finance I reported the bill containing the appropriation which it is now proposed to repeal. If there had been any land owned by the Government outside of the yard and connected with it on which this hospital could be placed I should have preferred to limit it in that way, according to the general idea I have on the subject. It was expected that such land might be purchased, and with that view the appropriation was worded as it was, to leave the whole matter in the discretion of the Navy Department to act, they having already authority to purchase certain land outside of the yard if they choose to do so. I have a general opinion—and that was the opinion I meant to express in signing that paper—that it is not good policy as a general rule, especially where a yard is quite limited in its extent, to put a hospital inside of the yard or very near it. I was of opinion, however, that under all the circumstances of this case, an appropriation having been made for the purchase of land outside the yard on Seavey's island and a hospital being needed, it was best to make the appropriation and leave it to the discretion of the Department, they not being obliged to spend the money this year or next year. I so expressed myself in the opinion I appended to the paper which had already been signed by my colleagues, with one exception, I believe, before I saw it, and by the delegation from New Hampshire.

Under these circumstances, I shall interpose no sort of objection to the opinion expressed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, which is perhaps the more proper tribunal to judge of this matter. I leave it to the judgment of the Senate upon the statement that has been made. I think a hospital is very much needed there, especially at the present time. The result of the repeal will be to postpone the erection of the hospital for another year. The Senate can judge perhaps better than I can what it is advisable to do in relation to the matter; but I make no objection to the bill.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PUNISHMENT FOR ENTICING TO DESERT.

Mr. HALE. After the Senate met this morning, I received a communication from the United States district attorney for Massachusetts, suggesting an amendment in the criminal law. The bill (S. No. 324) was introduced and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The committee have instructed me to report it back with an amendment, and as it is very brief I ask to have the bill considered now.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 324) prescribing the punishment for enticing or aiding seamen to desert the naval service of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that any person who shall entice, or procure, or attempt, or endeavor to entice or procure any seaman or other person in the naval service of the United States, or who has been recruited for such service, to desert therefrom, or who shall in any wise aid or assist any such seaman or other person in deserting or in attempting to desert, or who shall harbor, conceal, protect, or in any wise assist any such seaman or other person who may have deserted from the naval service knowing him to have deserted, or who shall refuse to give up and deliver any such person on the demand of any officer authorized to receive him, shall be punished by imprisonment not less than six months nor more than three years, and by fine not more than $2,000.

The amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was to add to the resolution, "to be enforced in any court of the United States having jurisdiction."

The amendment was agreed to.

NAVAL PENSION FUND.

Mr. HALE. I rise now to present the last piece of business which the Naval Committee have to offer. After the meeting of the Senate this morning I received from the Secretary of the Navy a joint resolution relating to the investment of the naval pension fund. It was introduced and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and they have unanimously instructed me to report it back and ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the joint resolution (S. No. 69) regulating the investment of the naval pension fund was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Navy, as trustee of the naval pension fund, to cause to be invested in the registered securities of the United States on the 1st of January and 1st of July of each year so much of the fund then in the Treasury as may not be required for the payment of naval pensions for the then current fiscal year; and the interest, payable in coin, is to be exchanged for legal currency at the current rates of premium on gold, the amount to be placed to the credit of the fund. There is a proviso that nothing contained in the resolution is to be so construed as to interfere with the payment of naval pensions by the Secretary of the Interior as now regulated by law.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPEAL OF FUGITIVE SLAVE LAWS.

Mr. SUMNER. I now move that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the House bill No. 512.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will not oppose the Senator's motion to-night; but there are several very important bills from the Committee on Commerce which I shall ask the Senate to consider to-morrow. Some of them have to go to the House of Representatives; others coming from that House are to be perfected, and it is important that early action should be had. I will spend to-night with great pleasure with the Senator from Massachusetts on his bill, but to-morrow I shall demand the day for the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well; let us proceed, then.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the Senate do now adjourn. Let us have one day without the "nigger."

Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—ayes 8, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Carlile, Cowan, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, and Wiley—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Dixon, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Howard, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—38.

ABSENT—Messrs. Collamer, Conness, Davis, Doolittle, Fessenden, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Howe, Nesmith, Wilkinson, and Wright—13.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 512.

Mr. SAULSBURY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the bill will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. "A bill (H. R. No. 512) to repeal the fugitive slave act of 1850, and all acts and parts of acts for the rendition of fugitive slaves."

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. DAVIS] had the floor on that bill. I am just informed that he is too sick to be in attendance to-night. I suggest, therefore, to the honorable member from Massachusetts that he ought not to press the bill to-night.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from Kentucky has had ample notice. He knew that this bill would be moved as soon as I could get the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. The honorable member did not hear me, I am sure, or he would not have made such an answer. I said the Senator from Kentucky was sick.

Mr. SUMNER. What he has to say is, as he has announced, a second edition of a speech on Massachusetts. He can make that as well on any other bill as on this.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know what he is going to say.

Mr. SUMNER. He announced that yesterday. We understand it on this side.

Mr. WILSON. We shall have up another bill on which the Senator from Kentucky can make his speech.

Mr. JOHNSON. Speaking from an experience of some years before the honorable member from Massachusetts became a member of this body as well as since, I have never known a bill pressed in the absence of a Senator who had the floor upon the bill and expressed a desire to debate it.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator is entirely mistaken if he supposes any one had the floor on this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator from Kentucky had the floor when it was up before.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand it to be so; and he is sick and unable to be here.

Mr. SUMNER. The public business cannot wait. Again and again has this measure been postponed in deference to the Senator from Kentucky. He was aware when he went away this afternoon that it would be pressed this evening if I could get the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. That I understand.

Mr. SUMNER. And further, he had the goodness to announce to us yesterday the subject of his speech, which was the second edition of a speech on Massachusetts.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is not Massachusetts a very good subject to make a speech about? All I mean to say is, that I understand that when the Senator from Kentucky was advised that an effort would be made to-night to take up the bill he intended to be here; but since he left the Senate Chamber he has become so sick that he cannot be here. I have no particular desire to hear the Senator from Kentucky or the Senator from Massachusetts debate this bill; I certainly have no desire to debate it myself; but under all the circumstances I think the courtesy which we owe to each other would rather require that the bill should go over until the morning. It will not be a neglect of the public business; there is plenty of other business. I do not think the country will suffer much if the act of 1793 is permitted to remain on the statute-book. It will not be operative; it is a mere matter of sentiment with the honorable member from Massachusetts; the bill can have no practical effect in the world.

Mr. POWELL. In addition to what the Senator from Maryland has said, I will state to the Senate that my colleague left the Chamber unwell this evening, and he requested me particularly, if this bill should be called up (which he hardly expected, supposing the night would be occupied with the bills of the Senator from New Hampshire) to inform the Senate that he was too unwell to remain in the Chamber, that he desired to discuss the bill, and would be ready to proceed with the discussion to-morrow.

The question being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Howard, Howe, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wade, and Wilson—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wiley—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Collamer, Conness, Davis, Doolittle, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Nesmith, Wilkinson, and Wright—11.

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. There are some executive messages on the table which I think should be referred.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope not. I hope the Senate will vote on this bill. Let us settle it, and then we can go into executive session.

Mr. POWELL. You cannot get a vote on it to-night.

Mr. SUMNER. Let us try.

Mr. McDougall. I will say to the Senator who has the bill in charge that it is not possible to take a vote on it to-night.

Mr. SUMNER and others. We will try.

Mr. HOWARD and Mr. WADE. We can get it by morning.

Mr. McDougall. It cannot be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

A division was called for, and the yeas were 16 and the nays 19.

Mr. POWELL asked for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Foot, Foster,

Grimes, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wiley—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Dixon, Fessenden, Harlan, Harris, Howard, Howe, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wade, and Wilson—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Collamer, Conness, Davis, Doolittle, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Nesmith, Wilkinson, and Wright—12.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The question being put, there were, on a division, 8 yeas and 18 nays.

Mr. POWELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SUMNER. I rise to a question of order.

Is it not too late to call for the yeas and nays after the result has been declared?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOSTER.) The Chair was announcing the decision at the time the yeas and nays were demanded. The Chair would prefer taking the sense of the Senate as to ordering the yeas and nays rather than refuse to entertain the call.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McDougall. I ask the Senator from Kentucky whether he was instructed by his colleague to ask for a postponement.

Mr. POWELL. I was requested to announce that he was sick and unable to be here to-night, but would be ready to proceed with the discussion at any time after to-night. I have already so stated to the Senate, but it affords me great pleasure to restate it.

Mr. McDougall. I did not understand it before. I think that statement should be sufficient.

Mr. SAULSBURY. All we want is to give the Senator from Kentucky an opportunity to be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware to postpone the bill indefinitely.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 11, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Johnson, McDougall, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, and Wiley—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Clark, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Howard, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Collamer, Conness, Davis, Doolittle, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Wilkinson, and Wright—13.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope not.

Mr. SHERMAN. As the motion is debatable to a limited extent, I desire to say a word. It is manifest that a majority of the Senate desire action upon this bill; it is right that they should have it; the majority should control in all deliberative bodies. The session is drawing so near to a close that unreasonable time ought not to be wasted. If I supposed the debate on this bill would not be prolonged merely for the purpose of exhausting time unreasonably, I should undoubtedly vote to go into executive session for the purpose of giving the Senator from Kentucky a right to be heard at a time when he will be able to be here; but if we are to have a prolonged contest over this bill, and dilatory motions are to be resorted to, we may as well have the contest to-night as at any other time.

If Senators who are opposed to the bill, and who desire to vote against it, will say that that is not their purpose, but that they simply desire to secure to the Senator from Kentucky the right to be heard to a reasonable extent, I shall vote with them to go into executive session. If it is proposed to renew this contest again by dilatory motions and the like at a future time after the Senator from Kentucky shall have been heard, we may as well have the contest now. My vote, therefore, will depend entirely on what Senators say about it. If they propose to resort to these parliamentary tactics, these interminable propositions for delay, merely to defeat a vote upon a bill which the majority have a right to pass, I am perfectly willing now to go into a contest of physical endurance; but if they simply wish to secure the right of discussion to an absent member, I will vote with them to go into executive session.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to say that so far as my course to-night is concerned, I am governed entirely by the wishes of the Senator from Kentucky, who desires an opportunity to be heard on this subject. That is my sole reason for my action so far.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from Delaware, then, if after the Senator from Kentucky shall have been heard he desires or intends to resort to any dilatory motions.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not. I never dreamed of such a thing.

Mr. WILLEY. I am one of those who voted against taking up this bill. I did so with some reluctance, but I did so simply because I was told by the friends of the Senator from Kentucky that he desired to be heard on this question. I had no other purpose than to afford him an opportunity to be heard. I am not very well versed in such matters; but I had supposed that when a Senator of the age, ability, and standing of the Senator from Kentucky (however much I may differ from him on many fundamental questions) announced through a friend on this floor that he desired to be heard, the ordinary courtesy of the body would require that opportunity should be allowed for that purpose.

I desire to say, however, that I am willing at any time to have this question decided. I do not want to be understood as interposing anything in the way of a speedy decision upon it. The decision has got to come. The majority of the Senate have a right to record their votes, and I do not wish to be understood as interposing any factious opposition to it. Of course I am opposed to the bill on principle. There is nothing practical in it at the present time. It is simply a matter of sentiment, nothing more. If it is now understood to be the sentiment of the majority of the Senate, on the other side of the Chamber, that they do not intend to let the Senator from Kentucky be heard, but intend to press this bill to a vote to-night, I suggest respectfully to those with whom I have acted to submit at once and let that result come now which must inevitably come sooner or later. I do not wish to be understood as standing here to detain the Senate, or contributing by my vote to detain it, from any factious motives. I have been operated upon simply by my sense of obligation and courtesy to the honorable Senator from Kentucky, who, I understood in good faith, had advised his friends on this floor that he desired to address the Senate on this subject. Now, if a majority of the Senate say that this matter is to be pressed to-night, I will yield at once. I see no advantage in protracting a bootless contest.

Mr. SUMNER. I think I can meet the Senators half way. I propose that we shall go on to-night and perfect the bill, but suspend taking the vote on its final passage in order to give the Senator from Kentucky an opportunity of being heard. It seems to me that is fair.

Mr. JOHNSON. Permit me to ask the Senator how he proposes to perfect the bill. It is to repeal the former laws.

Mr. SUMNER. That is all.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is perfect.

Mr. SUMNER. I regard it as perfect, but I did not know but that the Senator from Maryland might have some proposition to offer which might add to its completeness.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator from Kentucky might wish to be heard on the amendment if one be offered.

Mr. SUMNER. The bill simply repeals all laws for the rendition of fugitives.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then the bill is perfect in your opinion.

Mr. SUMNER. I regard it as perfect.

Mr. JOHNSON. I thought the honorable member proposed to be permitted first to perfect the bill.

Mr. SUMNER. I have nothing to propose to it; but I asked that the Senate would proceed to-night, take the bill out of committee, and pass it through its stages, leaving the last stage not acted upon in order to give the Senator from Kentucky an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is no objection to that, I suppose.

Mr. SUMNER. I presume there can be no objection to it, and that will get us some way toward the end.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I have made no dilatory motion. I have moved to go into executive session because I thought it was important to do so in order to refer some executive messages. I am perfectly ready to vote on this or any other measure precisely when it comes up; but I believe it more important to refer those messages than to waste the night in an idle discussion about this bill when we can get no vote.

The question being put, there were, on a division—17 yeas and 17 noes.*

Mr. POWELL called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Trumbull, and Van Winkle—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Dixon, Fessenden, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Howard, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wade, Willey, and Wilson—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Collamer, Conness, Davis, Doolittle, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Nesmith, Wilkinson, and Wright—11.

So the Senate refused to go into executive session.

Mr. POWELL. I move that this bill be postponed until the first Monday of December next.

The question being put, a division was called for by Mr. POWELL.

Mr. HOWARD. In order to save time, I call for the yeas and nays. [Laughter.]

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON. I shall not vote for the present motion, because, in the first place, it is apparently a mere dilatory motion, one that cannot be carried; it keeps us here without accomplishing any purpose; and secondly, because, as I understood the Senator from Massachusetts, he is perfectly willing, as far as he is concerned, that the bill shall be to-night put in such a situation as to be called up in the morning, and that then there shall be a vote upon it. If a majority of the Senate are in favor of the passage of the bill, as far as I am concerned I recognize their right to pass it, and I shall interpose, by no vote of mine, any obstacle merely for the purpose of delaying the action of the Senate. I have been governed in what I have done heretofore this evening on this subject by what I supposed to be due in courtesy to the Senator from Kentucky. I hope my friend from Kentucky, who is here, will withdraw his motion and let the course suggested by the friends of the bill be taken; that is to say, that the bill be placed in a situation to be voted upon finally to-morrow, so as to give the colleague of my friend from Kentucky, who is here, an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. POWELL. I think it probable that my colleague may want to move some amendments to the bill. If the bill be put to the third reading now, the opportunity of offering amendments will be cut off. I know there is a controversy as to whether the law of 1793 shall stand.

Mr. JOHNSON. That will be open.

Mr. POWELL. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes to let it go through every stage but its final passage. To that, of course, I cannot consent. The truth is that I wish to teach the Senator from Massachusetts what courtesy is.

Mr. SUMNER. I think I shall not learn much from the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. POWELL. I have no idea that you will. You have too much to learn.

Mr. RIDDLE. I see that there is no prospect of doing anything to-night, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HOWARD called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 12, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Lane of Indiana, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Willey—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Hale, Harlan, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Ramsey, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wade, and Wilson—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Collamer, Conness, Davis, Doolittle, Foster, Grimes, Harding, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Wilkinson, and Wright—15.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky, to postpone the further consideration of the bill till the first Monday of December next.

Mr. JOHNSON. Before that vote is taken, I desire to say that I think my friend from Kentucky is mistaken as to what will be the situation of the bill if the course suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts be adopted by the Senate. The bill is now before us as in Committee of the Whole, and all that he proposes, as I understand him, is that it shall be reported to the Senate, and there stop for the night. To-morrow morning, in the Senate, the bill will be open to amendment.

Mr. POWELL. That was not the proposition which the Senator from Massachusetts made to me. He wanted to push the bill through all the readings to its final passage. That I declined. I am perfectly willing to let the bill be reported to the Senate, and then adjourn.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well, then, we are agreed. The proposition I made to the Senator from Kentucky was as he states. I did hope to carry the bill to its last stage to-night; but as the Senator intimates that possibly his colleague may wish to move amendments, I do not desire to carry it to a stage that shall preclude amendment, but I do wish to carry it as far as I can to-night. Therefore I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. POWELL. If the Senator from Massachusetts had made that proposition before, I should have accepted it; but he did not make it, and—

Several SENATORS. He makes it now.

Mr. POWELL. Very well; I accept it. I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion can be withdrawn only by unanimous consent, the yeas and nays having been ordered. The Chair hears no objection. The motion to postpone is withdrawn. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have an amendment to offer.

Several SENATORS. Offer it to-morrow in the Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Very well; I would just as lief do it to-morrow.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I suppose there is no further business to-night. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator withdraw that motion to let us have an executive session to refer some documents?

Mr. BUCKALEW. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. I move an executive session. The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in the consideration of executive business, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 22, 1864.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. Mr. FERRIE.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CALIFORNIA LAND TITLES.

Mr. JULIAN asked unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Public Lands a bill (S. No. 109) to expedite the settlement of titles to land in the State of California.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. That is a very long and a very important bill, and it may be a very proper one. If so, I do not wish to interfere with its passage, and it may be proper to pass it at this session. I propose to the gentleman from Indiana that the bill shall be considered as reported, and that it be printed and recommended to the Committee on Public Lands with liberty to report it back at any time after it is printed. With the gentleman's permission I will make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS.

Mr. STILES, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House adjourn their respective Houses for the present session on Thursday the 30th of June, at twelve o'clock, m.

PENNSYLVANIA CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee of Elections, to whom were referred the memorial and accompanying documents of Charles W. Carrigan, contesting the seat of M. Russell Thayer, made a report, accompanied by the following resolutions:

Resolved, That Charles W. Carrigan is not entitled to a seat in this House as Representative in the Thirty-Eighth Congress from the fifth congressional district in Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That M. Russell Thayer is entitled to a seat in this House as Representative in the Thirty-Eighth Congress from the fifth congressional district in Pennsylvania.

The report and resolutions were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

REPRESENTATION OF ARKANSAS.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee of Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of certain gentlemen claiming to be Representatives from the State of Arkansas, have instructed me to report a joint resolution which I ask may be read, and if in the opinion of the Chair it is a question of privilege, I will call it up at some future day; if not a question of privilege, I shall ask to have its consideration assigned for some particular time.

The joint resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That there be appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, a commission consisting of three persons, residents of States not involved in the present rebellion, whose duty it shall be during the recess of the present Congress to visit those States declared by the proclamation of the President to have been in rebellion, and which have already taken or may before the next session of the present Congress take measures to establish or reorganize State governments, and after careful examination and hearing testimony report to the President for the information of Congress at as early a day in the next session as possible all such evidence as they may be able to obtain upon the question, whether the loyal people in any such States have succeeded in reestablishing a State government, to what extent such State government represents and has the support of the loyal people in such State, and what is the ability of such people therein to maintain the same against domestic violence.

Resolved further, That until Congress shall be satisfied upon evidence submitted to them that the rebellion has so far been suppressed in any such State that there has been established therein a State government, republican in form, and prohibiting the existence of slavery in the same, and so firmly established as to be able to maintain itself against domestic violence, representation from any such State ought not to be admitted into either branch of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in doubt as to whether this is a question of privilege. Various questions of privilege have been decided as such by the House, which are stated in pages 145 and 146 of the Digest. There are no precedents for this case of course, for no similar questions have arisen before. If the gentleman from Massachusetts desires it, the Chair will submit the question to the House whether it shall be entertained as a matter of privilege.

Mr. DAWES. I will state that I do not desire to consider the joint resolution at this time. I merely wished to know whether this was to be considered as a question of privilege. If not, I wish to fix a day for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already decided that in his judgment it is not a question of privilege.

Mr. MALLORY. Then I object to the resolution being entertained, and to any remarks being made upon it by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it may be submitted to the House whether it will be entertained as a question of privilege. The Digest says that "when a proposition is submitted which relates to the privileges of the House it is his duty [the Speaker's] to entertain it at least to the extent of submitting the question to the House as to whether or not it presents a question of privilege."

Mr. DAWES. I suppose there can be no question but what the Committee of Elections have the right to make the report a question of privilege. It touches the right of certain gentlemen to their seats here, and it only involves a mode adopted by the Committee of Elections to secure the taking of testimony which will enable them more intelligently to determine upon the questions before us touching what they suppose to be the right of these gentlemen to seats in this House. There can be no doubt, therefore, as to the right of the committee to make this report as a question of privilege. The only difference between this and the ordinary resolutions which are reported is, that this is a joint resolution, inasmuch as the President would not feel himself authorized to constitute such a commission simply upon the resolution of the House. It must be by joint resolution to enable the President to appoint a commission to take testimony touching the right of a member to his seat in this House.

Mr. MALLORY. The Chair has decided that the resolution cannot be entertained as a question of privilege, and I object to debate upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts. If the gentleman has the right to report this resolution as a question of privilege he has the same right to consider it as a question of privilege. The joint resolution seems to be prospective in its character, and cannot, in the opinion of the Chair, be brought within the rule which permits the reception of the ordinary reports of the Committee of Elections relative to the rights of members to their seats.

Mr. DAWES. It is a resolution which the Committee of Elections have deemed essential to determine the right of claimants to seats in the House.

Mr. MALLORY. Is this question debatable? The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. MALLORY. I object to debate.

Mr. COX. I do not suppose there is any objection to this joint resolution being reported and ordered to be printed, if it is not to be called up as a question of privilege.

Mr. DAWES. This joint resolution as I understand is before the House. I do not desire action upon it at this time, but if it is not subject to be called up as a question of privilege I desire to have it postponed until a day certain, in order that it may be considered and passed during the present session.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to present a minority report in this case.

The SPEAKER. If the majority report is not in order as a question of privilege, a minority report cannot be entertained as such.

Mr. COX. I hope the report of the minority will be read. The majority report was read, and I ask that the minority report may also be read.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I understood there was no objection to the reports of the majority and minority being read and printed. The majority report has been read, and I now ask that the minority report may also be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say that a minority report cannot be received by the House at any time except by unanimous consent. If there be no objection the minority report will be received and read.

Mr. WILSON. Has the morning hour commenced?

The SPEAKER. It has not. The first question will be on the Pacific railroad bill, which is the unfinished business from last evening, and then upon the bill for a naval depot at Cairo, and next on the bill in regard to the conscription. All these will have to be disposed of before the morning hour commences.

Mr. DAWES. I understand that the majority and minority reports have been received and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. That will be considered to be the understanding of the House.

Mr. DAWES. I now ask that some day be set apart for the consideration of this subject.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I object to this thing coming in unless there is a motion to reconsider, and that motion is laid on the table. I do not want it to come in with the understanding that it shall not be acted on and then be brought up on a motion to reconsider and pressed through.

Mr. DAWES. I will vote with the gentleman for that motion.

The motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COX. I ask that the resolutions of the minority may be read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Whereas by article six of the Constitution of the United States it and the laws made in pursuance thereof are do-clared to be the supreme law of the land, and every act of secession by any State is in direct violation of such supreme laws: Therefore,

Resolved, That the acts of secession by the Legislatures of the several States whose people are now in rebellion are mere nullities, having no force or effect to change the relation either of States themselves or of the people thereof toward the General Government; and that by such acts the people neither freed themselves from the penalties attaching by law to treason nor lost any rights as citizens of the States and United States, except such as may follow upon conviction of crime; that the duty of the people of such States to send true and loyal men to Congress, and the right so to do as consequent upon the duty, still remain by force of the Constitution, requiring no act of the President or Congress to confirm them; that no State can under the Constitution assent to the presence of armed rebels from other States within its borders, and that any act of the authorities of a State giving such assent is a nullity; that the entrance of such armed rebels of one State upon Territories of another is an invasion from which by article four of the Constitution the United States are bound to protect the invaded State; that this obligation of protection on the part of the United States is due to each citizen individually as a consequence of his duty of allegiance, and continues so long as there is a single loyal citizen in a State oppressed by such invasion; that so long as the Constitution and laws of the United States cannot be enforced in any congressional district on account of the presence of armed rebels there can be no free election, and a person claiming a seat through an election under such circumstances should be rejected.

Be it further resolved, That the Constitution in article two determines the qualifications of electors for Representatives, and that any order of the President or act of Congress changing such qualifications would be a usurpation and a nullity.

Be it further resolved, That whenever by pestilence, foreign invasion, or domestic conspiracy, the officers of a State required by its laws to conduct an election have been destroyed or carried off, the State does not thereby cease to exist, nor do its people forfeit their rights as citizens of the States or of the United States, but, from the very necessity of the case, and by virtue of the power implicitly reserved to the people, they may, in a practicable and reasonable manner, supply the deficiency, and hold an election, conducting it, however far as possible, in conformity with the existing laws and constitution of the State; and the duty of Congress in passing upon such an election claimed to be held under such circumstances is limited to ascertaining whether it was a fair expression of a majority of the people, and in the mode of conducting it departed from the general laws of the State only so far as was necessary to supply the deficiency of officers required to conduct the election.

Be it further resolved, That the right of the claimants from Arkansas should be determined by the principles here enunciated; and if they shall satisfy this House that the Constitution and laws of the United States and of the State held peaceful sway over their respective districts, that in their elections they departed in nothing from the Constitution and existing laws of that State, save in supplying requisite officers, and that they received a vote of a majority in their respective districts, then they are entitled to seats, but not otherwise.

Mr. ROSS. The Chair has decided that this is not a question of privilege, and I therefore object to its being brought before the House.

The SPEAKER. The objection comes too late. The reports have been received and ordered to be printed, and a motion to reconsider and lay on the table agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I now move that the further consideration of the subject be postponed until Saturday next at one o'clock.

Mr. COX. I move that it be postponed till the first Monday in December next.

Mr. MALLORY. This is in direct contravention of the understanding of the House, which was that these reports should be ordered to be printed, and that the subject should not be brought up for consideration.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I only withdrew my objection on the express understanding that the subject should not be brought before us for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The reports were received and ordered to be printed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MALLORY. I have only to say that this is in direct contravention of the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. COX moved that the whole subject be laid on the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 63.

Mr. ROSS demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. NOBLE demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered; and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the House refused to lay the subject on the table.

Mr. COX. I now demand the yeas and nays on the motion to postpone this subject until the next session.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 50, nays 78, not voting 54; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. James C. Allen, William J. Allen, Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blair, Bliss, Brooks, Chamber, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Dawson, Denison, Eden, Fageron, Finck, Harding, Harrington, Benjamin G. Harris, Herrick, Holman, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kaibdsch, Kernan, Lazear, Long, Mallory, Marcy, McAllister, McDowell, James R. Morris, Morrison, Noble, O'Neil, John O'Neill, Prunty, Samuel J. Randall, Rogers, James S. Rollins, Ross, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Wadsworth, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, and Joseph W. White—50.

NAYS.—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Arnold, Ashley, Baily, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Broomall, William G. Brown, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Cole, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Eckley, Eliot, Fenton, Frank, Ganson, Gooch, Hale, Higby, Asabel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Knox, Longyear, Marvin, McBride, McClurg, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Norton, Charles O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Sloan, Smithers, Stevens, Thayer, Thomas, Tracy, Upson, Van Valkenburgh, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Webster, Whaley, Wilder, Wilson, and Windom—78.

NOT VOTING.—Messrs. Blaine, Brandegee, James S. Brown, Clay, Creswell, Henry Winter Davis, Driggs, Dumont, Eldridge, English, Farnsworth, Garfield, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hall, Charles M. Harris, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Hulburd, Hutchins, Jones, King, Knapp, Law, Le Blond, Littlejohn, Loan, McIndoe, McKinney, Middleton, William H. Miller, Morrill, Nelson, Pendleton, Perry, Radford, William H. Randall, Robinson, Scott, Shannon, Smith, Spaulding, Starr, Stebbins, Sweat, Voorhees, Ward, Williams, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—54.

So the House refused to postpone the subject until the first Monday of December next.

Mr. DAWES demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the subject was postponed till next Saturday at one o'clock.

PENNSYLVANIA CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. SCOFIELD, from the Committee of Elections, submitted a report accompanied by the following resolutions:

Resolved, That John Kline is not entitled to a seat in this House as a Representative in the Thirty-Eighth Congress from the third congressional district of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That Leonard Myers is entitled to the seat now occupied by him as a Representative in the Thirty-Eighth Congress from the third congressional district of Pennsylvania.

The report was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAWES. I do not concur with the majority of the committee in the ruling by which the contestant in this case was denied process to summon witnesses to prove certain allegations in his notice of contest. I am of opinion that when a party has conformed his allegations to the statute he is entitled, as of right, to the production of any legal testimony that will tend to prove such allegations; and that neither the law nor usage of the House requires of him to first show probable cause to believe that his allegation is true before he can have such process as will produce the evidence to prove it so. Whether I should ultimately concur with the committee in the final conclusion to which they have arrived would depend, of course, upon the character of such testimony when produced.

Mr. GANSON. I desire to say that I concur fully with the chairman of the Committee of Elections in the views he has just expressed, and I hope the House will sustain him when they are called upon to act in this case.

Mr. ORTH. I ask unanimous consent of the House to make a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I object; and I give notice that I will give unanimous consent to nothing.

Mr. COFFROTH. I ask permission that Friday next be set apart exclusively for the consideration of private bills.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I object.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of L. J. Rose. They were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, but no action was taken on them by the committee, and they were reported back and laid upon the table. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw them from the files of the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. For what purpose?

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. It is the intention of the petitioner to present his claim to one of the Departments of the Government.

No objection being made, the leave was granted.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I ask leave to offer a resolution for reference to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MALLORY. I object.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. COLE, of California. I demand the regular order of business.

The House resumed, as the regular order of business, the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday, being bill of the House No. 438, to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, the question being upon the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed to Mr. WILSON's amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I offer the following amendment to come in at the end of the bill as additional sections:

And be it further enacted, That the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company, a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Iowa, be, and hereby is, authorized to extend its road through the Territory of Nebraska from the point where it strikes the Missouri river, south of the mouth of the Platte river, to some point not further west than the one hundredth meridian of west longitude, so as to connect by the most practicable route with the main trunk of the Union Pacific railroad, or that part of it which runs from Omaha to the said one hundredth meridian of west longitude; and for the purpose of enabling said Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company to construct that portion of their road herein authorized the right of way through the public lands is hereby granted to said company for the construction of said road; and the right, power, and authority is hereby given to said company to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road earth, stone, timber, and other materials for the construction thereof. Said right of way is granted to said company to the extent of two hundred feet where it may pass over the public lands, including all necessary grounds for stations, buildings, workshops, depots, machine shops, switches, side tracks, turn-tables, and water stations. And the United States shall extinguish as rapidly as may be the Indian titles to all lands falling under the operation of this section and required for the said right of way and grant of land herein made.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said road there be, and is hereby, granted to the said Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company every alternate section of public lands (excepting mineral lands as provided in this act) designated by odd numbers to the amount of ten alternate sections per mile on each side of said road on the line thereof, and not sold, reserved, or otherwise disposed of by the United States, and to which a preemption or homestead claim may not have attached at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed: Provided, That said company shall accept this grant within one year from the passage of this act by filing such acceptance with the Secretary of the Interior, and shall also establish the line of said road, and file a map thereof with the Secretary of the Interior within one year of the date of said acceptance, when the said Secretary shall withdraw the lands embraced in this grant from market.

And be it further enacted, Sec., That whenever said Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company shall have completed twenty consecutive miles of the road mentioned in the foregoing sections, in the manner provided for other roads mentioned in this act and the act to which this is an amendment, the President of the United States shall appoint three commissioners to examine and report to him in relation thereto; and if it shall appear to him that twenty miles of said road have been completed as required by this act, then, upon certificate of said commissioners to that effect, patents shall be issued conveying the right and title to said lands to said company on each side of said road as far as the same is completed, to the amount aforesaid; and such examination, report, and conveyance by patents shall continue from time to time in like manner until said road shall have been completed. And the President shall appoint said commissioners and fill vacancies in said commission, as provided in relation to other roads mentioned in the act to which this is an amendment. And the said company shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities granted to the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company by the said last-mentioned act so far as the same may be applicable.

Mr. WILSON. This proposition has been before the select committee on the Pacific railroad, and is concurred in by them. It contains no provision in reference to bonds, but merely the same grant of lands which is given to other companies. There is no obligation upon the part of the Government to issue bonds, or to pay money, or anything of that kind.

I say the amendment has the concurrence of the select committee, as I am informed by the chairman. I demand the previous question upon the amendment.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed acts of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (No. 298) to incorporate the Potomac Ferry Company;

An act (No. 321) to authorize the corporation of Washington to levy and collect the direct tax imposed by act approved August 5, 1861; and

An act (No. 115) to amend an act entitled "An act to define the powers and duties of the levy court of the county of Washington, District of Columbia."

Also, that the Senate has passed bills of the House of the following titles, severally with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (No. 495) to amend the charter of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company; and

An act (No. 442) to authorize the President of the United States to negotiate with certain Indians of Middle Oregon for the relinquishment of certain rights secured to them by treaty.

PACIFIC RAILROAD—AGAIN.

Mr. LOAN. I move to amend the sixth section by adding thereto the following:

Section thirteen of the act to which this is amendatory is hereby amended by striking out the words "Hannibal and St. Joseph" wherever they occur in said section, and inserting in lieu thereof "St. Joseph and Denver City."

There are several amendments I desire to offer all touching the same question, and with the permission of the House I will state the whole ground upon which the amendments are based in a few brief remarks, so that the House may understand the objects I have in view.

The object of granting aid in the construction of this road, as I understand it, is, as declared in the charter, for the purpose of promoting the general welfare of the country. That being the object had in view, we have provided for the location of a main trunk on the one hundredth degree of longitude west, with branches from that point east to the Missouri river, and have authorized certain railroad companies to construct those branch roads from the Missouri river to the main trunk. In doing this the authority conferred upon these branch roads is in the nature of a trust conferred by the Government upon these corporations for the construction of these parts of this national work, first for the benefit of the public, and, secondly, for the incidental advantages which may result to the roads themselves.

If this supposition as to the object of granting aid in constructing these branches be correct, Congress has the control of the matter at this time, and can direct what corporation shall construct them.

Among other things they have provided for the construction of a branch west by the Hannibal and St. Joseph railroad. They have provided furthermore for the construction of a branch from Kansas City by the Leavenworth and Pawnee road. They have also provided in this bill for the construction of a branch from Leavenworth, intersecting the Pawnee branch, to Lawrence, and a branch from Omaha, intersecting either the main trunk or some branch of it.

Mr. STEVENS. This is a matter with which I am not at all acquainted. I would ask the gentleman if there is such a company chartered as the St. Joseph and Denver Railroad Company.

Mr. LOAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEVENS. Where is it to run?

Mr. LOAN. It runs from St. Joseph to Denver City, in Colorado. The company has been organized and a portion of the road has been completed, but the operations of the company have been interrupted by the rebellion, which has thrown everything in that part of the country into confusion.

Mr. STEVENS. Has the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company made any portion of the road under this franchise?

Mr. LOAN. So far as I am advised, it has not. I propose speaking upon that point.

Mr. STEVENS. I would like to ask whether this new road is the same one to which it is said the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company have assigned their franchise?

Mr. LOAN. It is not.

Mr. STEVENS. I will not trouble the gentleman with further questions.

Mr. LOAN. The St. Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company is, like the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company, a corporation well known in the western country. It has commenced the construction of its road and has graded the road-bed for some twelve miles; it has the track laid down for four or five miles, and has the iron to lay it for more than twelve miles already upon the ground.

But, as I was about saying, Congress, in authorizing the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company to construct this branch, put into the charter a requirement that it should pass the town of Atchison, in Kansas. This town of Atchison is represented at the other end of the Capitol by Senator POMEROY, who is one of the proprietors of the town, and the member of the Thirty-Seventh Congress from the district which I now represent was, as I have been informed, another proprietor of the town of Atchison. It was necessary, in order to promote individual interests in the town of Atchison, to make a deflection to the south, so that this branch road should run by that town. This rendered the franchise conferred upon the Hannibal and St. Joseph Company entirely worthless to them; it destroyed its entire value; they could not construct the road on the terms proposed, and, considering the franchise of no value to them whatever, they assigned it to the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company, of which Senator POMEROY seems to be the sole representative. The object of all this was not to promote the public interests or the public welfare in the construction of a branch to the Pacific railroad, but to promote the individual interests of certain gentlemen who propose to construct a road not where the public interests require it, but in such a direction as will put money into their pockets. The franchise being utterly worthless to the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company, they have assigned it without any consideration, as a mere gratuity, to the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company, and as they have declined to construct this branch road, I desire that Congress shall give this franchise to a corporation that will construct the road under their charter.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri one other question. I desire to inquire whether aid for more than a hundred miles is granted by his amendment to this road.

Mr. LOAN. No, sir.

Mr. STEVENS. It is the same as the original grant?

Mr. LOAN. Just the same. What I desire is to get a road that will run west connecting the eastern country with the western country, and not to build a side road for the individual benefit of particular gentlemen who manage legislation here so as to accomplish their own ends. We have a continuous line of railroad now from Philadelphia through Harrisburg, Pittsburg, Columbus, Springfield, and Hannibal, to St. Joseph, all now in running order, except some twenty miles between the Illinois river and the Mississippi river, on which they are laying down the iron at this time.

The general course of the road from St. Joseph lies north of west. But the charter requires a deflection of twelve miles from a direct course south to Atchison, and then a return to the line. Now, sir, no company can afford to build a road with such conditions, and no company will build it.

This amendment if adopted will secure a continuous line of road from Philadelphia west near the fortieth parallel of north latitude to the main trunk of the Pacific road. If this amendment is adopted the St. Joseph and Denver City Company will build the road, and they ask for no additional aid from the Government. They ask for no additional grant, but they do ask the authority to build this road in a westerly direction instead of a southerly or southwesterly direction.

I ask the House to consider for one moment what will be the effect of building, as is authorized under this bill as it now exists, three parallel roads having their eastern termini on the Missouri river within thirty-two miles north and south, while a stretch of country one hundred and thirty-five or one hundred and forty miles wide is without any branch whatever. Can any gentleman in this House see any public necessity of three parallel branches of this road running within a strip of thirty-two miles wide, while a strip one hundred and thirty or one hundred and forty miles wide above is left without any branch whatever?

And again, the eastern termini of these branches are at Kansas City, Atchison, and Leavenworth, and not one of them has an eastern connection or will have for years to come. The only eastern connection that can be had at present is through the city of St. Joseph, and it is a singular fact that in the bill as now presented the only point by which the road can at present, or for years to come, make a connection with the East is left out of the bill. There is no connection with Atchison, Kansas City, or Leavenworth, and the only means in prospect for such a connection is through the Missouri Pacific railroad, and that will not be completed for years.

The amendment I have offered proposes the only means of remedying that difficulty. It provides for a connection with a point with which a continuous connection with the East has been kept up in spite of the war; a point which, for the last ten or fifteen years, has been the great central point for the outfitting and starting of traders and emigrants across the plains, and has been selected for that purpose because of its very superior advantages for the purpose. Why, sir, within the last forty days not less than two hundred wagons per day have been outfitted and started across the plains from that point.

I submit, therefore, that to make the termini of the branch roads at the points mentioned in the bill not only presents the anomaly of three parallel roads within a strip of thirty-two miles, but that of leaving the whole travel of the West entirely unprovided for for want of an eastern connection. The bill provides for one branch having its terminus at Omaha and one having its terminus at Sioux City. Many years will elapse before the public demand for railroad communication will require any connection with those points.

With this explanation I hope this amendment will be passed, and unless some gentleman desires to be heard upon it I will demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

On the adoption of the amendment submitted by Mr. LOAN 37 voted in the affirmative and 35 in the negative—no quorum.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. LOAN and HURCHINS.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 38.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. DAWES. I move to add to the ninth section the following:

*And provided further, That any company authorized by this act to construct its road and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the initial point aforesaid may construct its road and telegraph line so as to connect with the Union Pacific railroad at any point westwardly of such initial point in case such company shall deem such westward connection more practicable or desirable; and in aid of the construction of so much of its road and telegraph line as shall so be a departure from the route hereinbefore provided for its road, such company shall be entitled to all the benefits and be subject to all the conditions and restrictions of this act: *Provided further, however, That the bonds of the United States shall not be issued to such company for a greater amount than is hereinbefore provided; nor shall such company be entitled to receive any greater amount of alternate sections of public lands than are also herein provided.

I do not think there can be any objection to the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. As I understand it I do not object to it; but I suggest to the gentleman to insert after the word "nor," in the latter part of the amendment, these words:

If the same be united with the Union Pacific railroad on the one hundredth degree of longitude.

Mr. DAWES. I accept that as a modification of my amendment.

Mr. COLE, of California. I think that the great mistake in reference to the Pacific railroad has been in recognizing so many companies over the same degrees of longitude. If the energy of railroad men had been confined to one line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean I am sure that the work would have been much further advanced than it is now. I have always regretted propositions to add on other companies; and I fear that the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts will have the same effect.

I cannot perceive how the objection alluded to by the gentleman from Iowa can be available. They may continue a parallel railroad any distance beyond the one hundredth degree of longitude. There is quite a space between Leavenworth and the Platte and Republican fork where the Union Pacific Railroad Company may fix the point; and it will doubtless fix on the road that will reach that point first. It is far out upon the plains, and I see no necessity for allowing these other roads. The parties who are willing to build them are sufficiently accommodated now.

I do not like to oppose a proposition of this kind, but, as a citizen of the Pacific coast, I want to see a road built, and am therefore against anything that will retard the accomplishment of that object.

Mr. DAWES. I am with the gentleman in favor of the object he seeks to attain, and if I thought my amendment would have the effect he suggests I would withdraw it. My amendment is necessary in order to enable these roads to avoid mountains and sharp turns, and to make them upon the shortest line.

Mr. STEVENS. If I understand the amendment I see no objection to it. If a road reaches the one hundredth degree of longitude fifty miles north or south of the initial point, instead of compelling it to turn to the right or left, it permits it to continue on and strike the line in the shortest and best way.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRUYN. I move to add the following:

The President of the United States shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a board of commissioners, to consist of seven persons, who shall have and possess all the powers now vested in the Union Pacific Railroad Company under the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; and the said commissioners shall proceed without delay to construct the said railroad and telegraph line as authorized by the said act. The said commissioners shall not be entitled to any compensation for their services, but their necessary expenses, to be audited by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be paid to them respectively.

I had this amendment read last night, and gave notice that I would offer it when I had the opportunity. If the House shall come to the conclusion to adopt it I will then move to refer the bill back to the special committee to make it conform to the amendment and carry out the detail. The Government are to contribute some ninety-eight per cent. of the amount needed for the construction of the road; and the question is substantially whether the work shall be controlled by the Government or by those who only contribute two per cent. of its cost.

Now, my view of the matter is that the Government should, through its own commissioners, build the road directly instead of doing it indirectly, and it will spend no more money in that way than in the present mode, save the comparatively small sum of $2,000,000, and it would not part with any of its lands. I have no objection to an organization which, by contributing a proper amount for this purpose, would really, in view of the hazard it incurs, become entitled to something—some large grant, even, if you please, from Government—for the expenditure it may make and the risk it may run.

Mr. PRICE. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. I understand him to say he is opposed to the Government adding anything more to the grant already made, or to furnish any other facilities, unless the Government takes control of the work. Now I desire to ask him whether the gentleman from New York did not, after the organization of the Pacific Union Railroad Company, offer a resolution either in the board of directors or stockholders not to do any work toward the construction of the road until they should have additional legislation upon the subject?

Mr. PRUYN. I will answer the gentleman. Before most of the gentlemen who now have the control of this road had anything to do with it, when parties were desirous to save the charter, I, in company with several gentlemen in New York with whom I had been invited to act, endeavored with that view to obtain subscriptions to this stock, or rather my associates did, and it was then understood, not by any agreement in legal form, for that could not be made, that if the necessary amount of capital was subscribed further legislation would be needed by Congress on several points before it would be proper to proceed with the work, and that in the meantime the requisite surveys and examinations for the line of the road should be made. If the legislation of Congress should not justify individual enterprise going on with the undertaking, or if Congress should come to the conclusion that some other mode was desirable to carry it on, then the subscription money paid in should be refunded, deducting any amount which might have been paid for incidental expenses and surveys. Their manifest object in this was to promote the work by procuring the necessary surveys, and again bring the subject before Congress that it might in some way be placed upon a footing which would lead to its being successfully carried through.

Now, sir, if Congress prefer that a private corporation should go on with this enterprise, and that in consideration of $2,000,000, or of any other amount, they should be entitled to this franchise, with the large land grants proposed, they will say so by adopting the bill before you in the shape in which it is reported. But I wish to ask the House, in view of the facts now before us, and of all the considerations which have been presented in regard to this enterprise, looking to what the Government must do—and it must substantially do everything—whether it is not better at once, if this great work is to be thoroughly prosecuted, that the Government should at once take hold of it. I appeal to every gentleman present whether in case this road will not take care of itself, this company or any other company or any individuals can be expected to contribute from year to year to carry on and support it? If, therefore, the operation be unsuccessful, it must necessarily come back upon the Government. If it be successful, we are parting with a vast domain with a great amount of property for a very trifling consideration.

Now, I lay out of view the fact that in the scheme reported by the committee they propose that the company shall raise $50,000,000 on its own bonds, for the reason that the Government lien being subordinate to the first lien, it in fact devolves on the Government to take care of the company should any difficulty arise in its affairs. My purpose, as I before stated, if the House should adopt this amendment, is to move to recommit the bill to the committee to reframe it according to the principle which this amendment affirms; and I wish here in view of some things which have occurred during this discussion to say, if I have not stated it fully already, that I have nothing to say in regard to the individuals concerned in the management of this road. In my argument last night I assumed everything in their favor. I am willing to assume it now. I make no attack here upon individuals. I have nothing to say on that score. There is no question that these gentlemen are abundantly able to pay in the capital they have subscribed. I have no doubt they are prepared to go on with the work. But the question for the House to decide is whether, looking at the vast amount involved and the great interests at stake, this is the true way to build this road. I think not, and I hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SWEAT. I did not intend to say anything upon this subject, for I supposed that, being thoroughly understood, there would be but slight opposition to the passage of the bill as reported by the committee. Least of all did I expect opposition from such a gentleman as he who has just taken his seat, [Mr. PRUYN,] a gentleman of liberal views, and who understands the railroad system of this country as well, perhaps, as any gentleman upon this floor; but I can construe his proposition in no other way than this, that it is intended to defeat the passage of the bill now before the House. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York whether this proposition of his for the appointment of seven commissioners to act without pay to build the Union Pacific railroad to the Pacific ocean is or is not founded upon the idea that the company as now organized are either not trustworthy or are incompetent to carry on the charge to which they have committed themselves?

Mr. PRUYN. Not at all. My whole argument was framed upon an entirely different basis. I laid out of the question the personal character and capacity of the company, and simply claimed that as this is a Government work, for which the Government is to pay, we ought to build it accordingly, and get the benefit.

Mr. SWEAT. The gentleman either wishes to have the Union Pacific railroad built or he wishes it not. I can infer nothing else from his argument than that he is not willing that it should be built under the present organization. Is the gentleman willing that it shall be?

Mr. PRUYN. I declared last evening that I was earnestly in favor of the construction of this road, and had been for years, and that I was one of the parties instrumental in saving the charter; but that I thought we could construct this road, and ought to construct it, in view of the large stake the Government has in it, in another way than that proposed by the committee.

Mr. SWEAT. Has the organization of the company changed since the gentleman interested himself in it by becoming a stockholder?

Mr. PRUYN. That was before the organization.

Mr. SWEAT. It has always been the theory, at all events of gentlemen upon this side of the House, that the Government ought not to appoint their own Federal agents for any great work of internal improvement. That is the doctrine upon which we have all stood, and that is the doctrine upon which the gentleman from New York and his associates have always stood. He now proposes to place the construction of the most stupendous work ever undertaken on the face of the earth in the shape of a railroad in the hands of immediate agents of the Federal Government. Now, does he suppose that men can be found who will carry on this work to a successful termination upon any such basis or theory as he has suggested? If we adopt the proposition of the gentleman all that has been done under the legislation of 1862, the organization that has been formed, all the money that has been subscribed, all the surveys that have been made, everything goes for nothing; we are thrown back to where we were before the legislation of 1862, and must start anew. I trust that that proposition, which is ignoring entirely this bill, will not be entertained for one moment by this House.

Although not anxious to speak on this bill, yet as I am a member of the special committee that reported it, I desire to say a single word. I have served with that committee, and I need not say how faithfully I have done so. But I can assure the House that that committee of fourteen has worked faithfully, honestly, and with as praiseworthy a desire to save the public money as can animate the gentleman from Illinois who spoke last evening, [Mr. WASHBURN.]

One of the first propositions made to the committee was for us to decide whether, in the present embarrassed state of the Government, we would call upon the Government for another dollar of aid to build this road. The committee was unanimous in the decision that, in view of the present demands on the Treasury of the United States, we could not, with propriety, be called upon to embarrass the Government by appropriating one other dollar or one other bond for the road. On examining the bill of 1862 we found in it some provisions that were undoubtedly introduced by the enemies of the bill, who were determined to kill it by such amendments as would prevent the acceptance of the bill by the friends of the road. We felt it our duty to allow certain facilities to the road while refusing a further dollar of aid.

From the attack made on the bill by the gentleman from Illinois last night, a person not understanding this bill as connected with the first one, would well suppose that some heinous crime had been attempted to be committed. I need not say that, in my judgment, the committee are as loyal and as economical of the funds of the Government as is the gentleman from Illinois. Now, what does the committee propose to do by this bill? Simply to give certain facilities. In the law of 1862 a provision was made that if any one of these roads (and there are various roads connected with this line from the meridian of longitude mentioned to the Pacific ocean) failed in fulfilling and complying with every single condition the whole line should be forfeited to the Government, no matter whether they had expended tens of thousands or millions of dollars. We thought that an exceeding hardship on the company; and this bill provides that the failure to comply with the conditions by a single section or branch shall not work a forfeiture of all that has been done from beginning to end. I submit whether that was not a fair thing to do.

That is one of the horrible things that the committee has done. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois, who says he has been a friend of this road longer than anybody else, whether he would justify the committee in that or whether he disapproves of it?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not know what the gentleman refers to.

Mr. SWEAT. I will repeat the question. The bill before the House provides that the failure of any one company to comply fully with the conditions and requirements of the act shall not work a forfeiture of the road of any other company.

Mr. STEVENS. I suggest to my colleague on the committee that the question is now simply on the amendment, and that he had better leave the merits of the case till we get through the amendment. He is a little out of order.

Mr. SWEAT. I am willing to take the suggestion of the Chair. But as the gentleman from Illinois did offer a proposition a few minutes ago to repeal the tenth section, I trust the House will bear with me a single moment in reference to that, as I do not propose to trouble the House again upon it. The proposition of that section is simply that the company may put on the railroad and telegraph line a mortgage equal per mile to that of the Government bonds. By the bill of 1862 the company was to receive $16,000 for that part of the road built over the valley, $48,000 for that part of the road built over the mountains, and $32,000 for that part built between the mountains, which is in fact a very difficult and mountainous region.

Now, the proposition is that the company shall issue a mortgage to secure their bonds to an equal amount, and that their mortgage shall take precedence over that of the Government.

Now, I submit, as the gentleman who is chairman of the special committee on this subject did last evening to the distinguished economist from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN,] that if this road was secure for the loan which was proposed two years ago, it must certainly be secure for the additional amount which it is now proposed to put upon it.

Mr. SHANNON. I ask the gentleman from Maine to allow the previous question to be moved on the amendment pending of the gentleman from New York, and then to allow a vote to be taken upon the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois. The debate upon the general bill may then proceed with less embarrassment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to make a remark just here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. SWEAT] is entitled to the floor and has not yielded it.

Mr. SWEAT. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. PRUYN,] before me, desires to make an explanation. I will yield to him.

Mr. PRUYN. I desire to ask the gentleman if he heard the remarks I made on this question last evening?

Mr. SWEAT. I did.

Mr. PRUYN. I am surprised, if the gentleman heard those remarks, that he should have indulged in the line of observations which he did this morning. I very briefly referred last night to my interest in the road years since, and I certainly said nothing which ought to lead him or any gentleman to suppose that the remarks I submitted to the House were induced by any other than the strongest interest and desire to see the work succeed. I believe the road will be built sooner, more thoroughly, and more effectually, in the way I have proposed than in any other way, and I submit that my motives should be as liberally and as fairly construed as those of the gentleman from Maine. My friendship, my active friendship, if you please, for this road, dates many years further back than that of the gentleman from Maine.

One other word in regard to what fell from the gentleman, and I will yield the floor. He says that if my project be adopted all the work that has been done since 1862 will fall. Not at all; the work that has been done would be turned over to the Government after paying for its cost. The surveys which have been made would of course be just as available, and everything would proceed without delay.

The gentleman mistakes when he supposes that persons of high reputation, standing, and character cannot be obtained to occupy positions as commissioners under an act of this kind. Sir, if this proposition be adopted I should have no hesitation in saying that I would be prepared when the proper time came to name gentlemen of such character, position, and standing before the country as no member upon this floor would venture to question, and who would undertake to supervise the construction of this road without being paid a dollar for it.

Mr. SWEAT. Before the gentleman takes his seat I desire to ask him if he supposes this road can be built by the Government under the supervision of these Federal agents for anything like the amount a company composed of gentlemen who are supposed to have some interest in the matter could build it for?

Mr. PRUYN. I will answer the gentleman by saying that I do believe the road could be built by the Government under the supervision of such men as I would have appointed—men outside of all political connection with the Government, and of high standing and character—not only cheaper, but better and more useful for the great purposes for which the road is to be constructed, than any company would be likely to build it, because they would have in view all the great elements of durability and usefulness which should belong to a great national work of this kind to a greater extent than any company could be expected to have.

Mr. SWEAT. One single word more. We ought to exercise a little common sense in this matter, and then we will arrive at a right conclusion. Everybody knows that the great railroad system of this country has been pushed forward not merely by a feeling of loyalty and patriotism, or simply for the improvement of the public domain, but by motives founded on self-interest. Most of the transactions of life are entered upon and urged to their completion by mixed motives rather than by a single one, and railroads are no exception to this truth. My opinion is that names alone will not build the Union Pacific railroad. Money is needed, and I am for intrusting this great work to men who are willing to give their time, energies, and capital to it, and am therefore opposed to breaking up the present organization and giving it to the disinterested gentlemen, acting as agents of the Government, as suggested by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STEVENS. The morning hour has nearly expired, and I hope that the gentleman will yield to me to demand the previous question.

Mr. SWEAT. I will demand it myself. I demand the previous question on the pending amendment.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. HOOPER. Is it in order to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union now?

The SPEAKER. It can be done by a majority vote.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 265) to expedite and regulate the printing of the public documents, and for other purposes; and

An act (S. No. 306) to grant to the State of California certain lands for State prison purposes.

LOAN BILL.

Mr. HOOPER. I move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to take up the loan bill which was made the special order for to-day.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 35.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOUTWELL in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of House bill No. 540, to provide ways and means for the support of the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOOPER. I move that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

The bill was read a first time for information, and then the Clerk proceeded to read it by sections for amendments.

The first section was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to borrow, from time to time, on the credit of the United States, $400,000,000, and to issue therefor coupon or registered bonds of the United States, redeemable at the pleasure of the Government after any period not less than five nor more than thirty years, or, if deemed expedient, made payable at any period not more than forty years from date. And said bonds shall be of such denominations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct, not less than fifty dollars, and bear an annual interest not exceeding six per cent., payable semi-annually in coin. And the Secretary of the Treasury may dispose of such bonds, or any part thereof, and of any bonds commonly known as five-twenties remaining unsold, in the United States, or, if he shall find it expedient, in Europe, at any time, on such terms as he may deem most advisable, for lawful money of the United States, or, at his discretion, for Treasury notes, certificates of indebtedness, or certificates of deposit issued under any act of Congress. And all bonds, Treasury notes, and other obligations of the United States shall be exempt from taxation by or under State or municipal authority.

Mr. HOOPER moved after the word "terms," in the eighteenth line, to insert the words "and conditions."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last clause, which is in these words:

And all bonds, Treasury notes, and other obligations of the United States shall be exempt from taxation by or under State or municipal authority.

It will be observed, Mr. Chairman, that this goes further than any legislation we have had on this subject. This embraces bonds, Treasury notes, and other obligations of the United States. Other obligations will be construed by the courts to mean legal-tender notes. It will also embrace certificates of indebtedness. It would extend to the interest-bearing Treasury notes now out, and to all those authorized by the second section of this act. It will cover the entire floating wealth of the country. It withdraws this large amount of capital from State and municipal taxation.

I am wrong in saying that it will embrace all of the floating wealth of the country. It would not apply to the notes of the national banks, or to the notes issued by the local banks in the country; but it would cover $450,000,000 of Treasury notes. It would embrace all those now out, and all authorized by the second section of this act.

While it may be an argument in favor of this provision that it is necessary for the bonds themselves to prevent their depreciation as compared with those which have preceded them, still the whole question comes up, and we will be told that the subject is already affected by legislation and that this provision has been applied to loans now in force. Now I never thought that it was in the power of Congress to limit the right of taxation for State and municipal purposes. When we did so it was an unwarrantable assumption of power.

It was not expected the mischief would be so great when the first law was passed; but now the full extent of the evil can be foreseen. I do not believe it does or can inure to the benefit of any other class of people than the large capitalists. The great mass of the people have none of these bonds; they are in the hands of the banks and of the large capitalists. It enables a man to withdraw all of his means from State and municipal taxation, and makes the burden of taxation unnecessarily heavy upon the poorer class of people. The capitalists and those having no investments in real estate and merchandise, the men least beneficial to the country, are thus permitted to escape the just burdens of the Government; and all the burden is thrown upon labor and upon capital invested in real estate and in the common commodities of the entire country.

I trust that the importance of this subject, as it must affect the whole financial interests of the country, will command the serious consideration of this House, and that the principle, already bad enough, ingrafted upon our legislation connected with these public securities will not at least be extended beyond the limits already established. If this entire provision is not stricken out I hope it will be confined at least to bonds alone, and not extended to Treasury notes and other obligations of the United States.

Mr. HOOPER. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. Every other loan bill under which obligations of the Government are now in circulation contains a similar clause, and I trust we shall not make this bill an exception.

The gentleman says it exempts United States notes issued for circulation. I understand, however, that this provision applies only to the interest-bearing obligations of the Government. If, however, the gentleman thinks that the provision would be safer with an amendment in that respect, I am willing it should be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. These Treasury notes are interest-bearing paper. The difference between them and legal tender is that the one kind bears interest while the other does not. The term "Treasury notes," as made use of here, refers to the notes provided for in the second section of this bill. The language is, "Treasury notes and other obligations of the United States." If "Treasury notes" would not embrace legal tender, the other term, "and other obligations of the United States," of course would embrace all others which the Government has issued.

Mr. HOOPER. Would the gentleman propose that legal-tender notes should be subject to State and municipal taxation?

Mr. KERNAN. I understand the gentleman to ask whether any notes should be subject to State and municipal taxation. Surely they should be; otherwise all that a wealthy man has to do to get rid of State taxation is to convert his property into money, which of all other things is the most tangible wealth, and should be taxed.

Mr. HOOPER. It would be very unfair to subject him to municipal taxation when he has done that, as he would have no income on which to pay a tax.

Mr. KERNAN. If a man is to be taxed on personal estate he is to be taxed upon that which is money, which is personal estate. If I understand this provision, a man who has property in currency would not be taxed at all.

Mr. MALLORY. I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that in Kentucky the tax-gatherer asks the tax-payer what he is worth in money after all his debts are paid. If he answers five or ten thousand dollars, he is taxed upon that amount. If you exempt legal-tender notes from taxation, and the tax-gatherer asks me that question and I say I am worth $10,000 in legal-tender notes, then he is at once prohibited from taxing me, and I am free from taxation of any kind.

Mr. SWEAT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question for information. Will the gentleman state upon what theory it is thought advisable by the Committee of Ways and Means that bonds, Treasury notes, and other obligations of the Government should be exempt from taxation by State authority?

Mr. HOOPER. In reply I would say that I do not think the committee looked to any theory about it. They found the general practice since the commencement of the Government had been to exempt from taxation the obligations of the Government issued by the United States under loan bills.

Mr. SWEAT. I supposed that the theory was this, that the bonds would be much sooner taken up if they were to be exempt from taxation. If that be the theory I think it is a mistaken one; for it is getting to be so unpopular in many portions of the country for men to hold bonds which are not subject to taxation by State legislation, that men are becoming unwilling to take the odium upon themselves, which they must necessarily do if it be known that they have invested a large portion of their surplus funds in the bonds of the United States. I believe if the bonds were subject to taxation men would be more willing to take them than they are now when they are exempt. I was never more struck with the force of this idea than I was when I heard a remark made by a very distinguished gentleman, a warm friend of this Administration, and I may say, without mentioning his name, one of the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States. He said that he, for one, would be unwilling to take bonds that were to be exempt from taxation by the municipal laws of the State where he lived, for the reason that he believed the system would become so odious before many months had gone by that a man would find it difficult to live in a neighborhood where it was known that he had invested his surplus funds in Government bonds, thereby escaping taxation on his personal property.

I think it would work better to let it be known at once that the man who invests his money in Government bonds shall pay State taxes upon the property so invested, the same as upon other property.

Mr. POMEROY. If the indebtedness created by the United States in the conduct of this war is to be taken at home, it is to consume pretty much the entire surplus wealth of the country; it is to be measured by thousands of millions. I say further, that to-day Great Britain with its present debt owned abroad would be bankrupt; because it would have to export gold to pay the interest. Great Britain bears the debt simply because it holds its own debt; and so it is an object for citizens of the United States to hold this debt; but at the same time a proposition to exempt that debt from taxation, State or municipal, is in effect a proposition to exempt it from taxation altogether; because, under the Constitution of the United States, there is no power by which a direct tax can be laid that can reach it. You can only, under a direct tax, reach land and slaves.

Now, I am utterly opposed to this proposition. I have given the last vote I shall ever give in this Congress to exempt from taxation, in any form in which it may be laid on any other species of property, money invested in the securities or indebtedness of the United States. I believe that money invested in the bonds of the State of New York or in the bonds of the United States should be subject to exactly the same taxation as the same money would be if invested in any other securities of whatever nature. I have voted for this proposition heretofore; but I believe the principle is a vicious one. I believe that if the debt is to be paid it is to be paid by subjecting it to taxation like other property. I believe that if the holders of the bonds knew their own interest they would come to Congress and themselves ask to have the exemption from taxation contained in former laws repealed. It is for their benefit, and for that of the whole people, that this property should be subject to taxation. For one, I never will knowingly vote for such a principle hereafter.

Mr. GANSON. The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hooper,] in justification of this provision, stated that it had been the uniform custom to exempt obligations of this kind from State and municipal taxation. Now, sir, I think there is nothing in that view of the case that should influence this House in its action in any degree. We all know that prior to the rebellion and the debt it brought upon the country the State taxation, and the municipal taxation, with the exception, perhaps, of the city of New York, was comparatively trifling, but in future the chief part of the taxes to be raised in the States are the direct consequence of the pending rebellion. The State of New York, including county, city, and town obligations, to-day has an indebtedness of $50,000,000, which was incurred for the purpose of raising soldiers to fill your Army. The taxes to pay that debt should be imposed upon Federal obligations as well as upon other property. There is no sense in exempting Federal obligations from their share of the burden thus imposed. I say, therefore, that when the gentleman from Massachusetts refers to the past practice of this Government he makes a false reference, and one having no weight whatever upon the subject now under consideration.

When hereafter the people come to understand this matter and see that this indebtedness was contracted solely for the purpose of suppressing this rebellion, and when they see that personal property invested in Government obligations is exempt from taxation, the holders of such obligations and the system also will become perfectly odious. It is for that reason that I have uniformly upon this floor opposed exempting the national banks from State or municipal taxation, and for the same reason I oppose the exemption of these obligations. I hope that the House will cease from this day forward to exempt such obligations from taxation. The people are ready and willing to pay whatever taxes are necessary, but they will insist that taxation shall bear equally upon all classes and upon all kinds of property. Partial legislation in this respect is particularly unjust.

Mr. MALLORY. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] by inserting the words "authorized to be issued by this act;" so that it will read, "and all bonds, Treasury notes, and other obligations of the United States authorized to be issued by this act." As an abstract question I agree with both gentlemen from New York [Messrs. GANSON and POMEROY] in all they have said against the policy of exempting United States bonds from State and municipal taxation. Yet I can see how the subjecting the bonds provided for in this bill to taxation—leaving the bonds heretofore issued exempted—would have the effect of embarrassing the Government by rendering their sale in the market difficult. If I could get rid of the impression that a due regard to the honor of the Government would prevent us doing it I would vote now for a proposition to remove the exemption which these bonds enjoy from taxation. But I consider that a closed question. We have adopted that policy. It is settled and fixed. All the bonds of the Government heretofore sold, by which money has been raised to carry on this war, are now, by the provisions of the law, exempt from taxation. And it would be an invidious discrimination against the batch of bonds proposed to be issued under the bill to provide that they shall be subject to taxation. It may be possible, as has been suggested by some persons, that the wary and astute gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] may aim at something else than the mere exemption of these bonds from taxation by the phraseology used in this bill. I do not charge this upon him. I do not say that I have even a suspicion that he entertains such a purpose. I merely suggest that it is within the range of possibility that such a thing is contemplated.

Mr. HOOPER. When the gentleman from Kentucky offered his amendment I rose to say that I concurred in it, and that I thought it should be put in the bill.

Mr. MALLORY. Then I recant everything that I said, for it is impossible to suspect the gentleman from Massachusetts of any such motive. My proposition would put the matter on the true ground, would put these bonds on an equality with all the other bonds of the Government, and would be nothing but just. I repeat that if I was satisfied that to do so would not be a breach of faith on the part of the Government, I would be willing to go for an act repealing the law exempting these bonds from taxation.

Mr. KERNAN. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether, because we exempt some of these bonds from taxation we must go on continuously until, as has been said by my colleague, [Mr. POMEROY], all the wealth of the States shall be exempt from taxation? I ask him whether it would not be better to cure the evil by raising even the rate of interest.

Mr. MALLORY. Perhaps that would be better, but no one has suggested that the rate of interest should be increased in this bill. I take the bill as it stands. My argument is addressed to the existing state of facts. Still I contend that, however desirable it may be to stop this practice, I do not see how, with any propriety, it can be done, unless we go back, retrace our steps, and correct our previous legislation on the subject. But there is an obstacle to that course, which it is very difficult to get over: that is, the plighted faith of the Government. As a member of the House I have voted against every bill exempting Government bonds from State and municipal taxation. The sin, if it be one, does not lie at my door. My skirts are clear. The pledge was given not with my consent but against my remonstrance. But I am unwilling, at this late day, when the Government is in need of the money that is to be raised by this bill, to say to the Government virtually that it may sell these bonds but that its right will be restricted in such a way as to render it impossible to get purchasers for these bonds.

Mr. KERNAN. There is one suggestion that I desire to make in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Kentucky. All that I could say as to the general policy of the measure has been very well said by other gentlemen. But I may be pardoned for calling attention to this now, as I did it once before, from the fact that I have been personally instructed by portions of my constituents, irrespective of party ties, to try and obviate this which they complain of as a great evil in their midst—the exempting much of the wealth of the district from its liability to municipal and State taxation. Now, it can be remedied without changing the rate of interest. If we strike out this clause all there will be of it will be that the Government will realize just so much less as the State and municipal taxes are estimated at, and it will be better for the Government to sell them at a little less in the market and thus begin to change the character of our bonds in this respect than to go on in the same way because others heretofore issued have been exempted from taxation. If we go on exempting these bonds from State and municipal taxation we shall find hereafter, as has been said, so much irritation, annoyance, and odium attached to holding these bonds in the community that men will hesitate to take them. It will enable a man with $100,000 invested in Government bonds to enjoy all the privileges and benefits of State and municipal governments without bearing any share of the burdens in supporting them.

Mr. MALLORY. The gentleman from New York will allow me to say that if he will go with me not only in striking out the clause or section which exempts these bonds from State taxation, but will also go with me in inserting an additional section repealing all laws and parts of laws heretofore passed exempting the bonds of the United States from State or municipal authority, the bonds will then all be placed upon the same footing. So far as I am concerned, having protested in the outset against the exemption, I do not feel myself bound by that action of the House. I do not know how gentlemen over on the other side of the House who are responsible for it may feel.

Mr. KERNAN. I will say that in obedience to instructions from my own constituents I introduced a resolution, which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, directing them to inquire into the expediency of reporting some plan for the repeal of this legislation exempting the bonds of the Government from taxation by State or local authorities, or in some other way of obviating the injustice which that legislation involves.

Mr. NOBLE. I wish to propound to the gentleman this question. Has the Federal Government any power under the Constitution to exempt any property from State taxation, and if so, where does that power come from?

Mr. KERNAN. The power has been denied; but I did not propose at this time to go into an argument upon the constitutional question, or to place this proposition upon that ground at all. I know it has been said that the power did not exist. I believe, also, that there was a case decided in reference to this matter in which it was held that the Government had the power to exempt from taxation all their bonds.

Mr. MALLORY. The decision was, I think, that they had power to exempt bank franchises from taxation.

Mr. KERNAN. However that may be, I do not propose to place this proposition upon that ground. I think it is better for the Government to make its bonds sufficiently secure; but by placing them altogether beyond the power of State Legislatures, or beyond the power of any local authorities to tax them, there will be attached to them the odium of enabling the capitalists who hold them to avoid their fair share of the burdens of the State and municipal governments under which they live. I am informed that men of wealth are in the habit of purchasing say $50,000 of these bonds, of holding them just long enough to swear them against their taxes, and then selling them in market. I trust that this clause of the section will be stricken out, and that the bonds we are hereafter to issue will be subject to taxation the same as other property, even if we cannot change the law in relation to bonds heretofore issued.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts, who has charge of this bill, to the fact that it has not been heretofore the uniform custom of the Government to exempt its bonds from State and local taxation. From the hasty examination I have been able to give the laws heretofore passed authorizing the issue of bonds, I cannot find that they have been thus exempted prior to the act of February 25, 1862; and even in respect to that act I find the language is materially different from that employed in this bill. That act provides for the exemption "of all stocks, bonds, and other securities of the United States," intending manifestly not to embrace the legal-tender notes, but simply the public securities, such as are described as the permanent debt of the Government.

Mr. HOOPER. What is the page?

Mr. HOLMAN. Page 346 of the Statutes at Large. The language here made use of is strikingly different. The gentleman from Massachusetts says that he is following precedent, and I think I present the first one that can be found in the statutes. It embraces all bonds, stocks, or other public securities, and here the language is bonds, Treasury notes, and other obligations of the United States. It not only applies to those now out, but to those authorized to be issued by this act. You have in circulation about two hundred and fifty million dollars of interest-bearing Treasury notes. I believe that the number of these notes in circulation is not generally known, but it is not much below two hundred and fifty million dollars.

Mr. MALLORY. I thank the gentleman from Indiana for the suggestion. This bill further on authorizes the issuing of additional fractional currency, and my amendment would exempt that from taxation for State and municipal purposes. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is not alone additional fractional currency, but this bill authorizes the issuing of legal-tender notes to supply the places of those which are withdrawn. It was for that purpose we appropriated the other day $440,000 for plates, paper, &c.

Beyond all that I wish to call attention to this fact: of these instruments designed to circulate as currency, as legal-tender notes, $250,000,000 are now out, and $200,000,000 more are provided by the express terms of this act. All these $450,000,000 of interest-bearing Treasury notes are exempted from taxation for State or municipal purposes. What then? One half of the currency of the country would be exempt from taxation for State or municipal purposes.

I desire to call attention to a fact independent of that as an argument in favor of striking out this provision or anything of the kind, and that is that it will operate to produce great inequality of taxation. Take the rural portion of the country. There the wealth consists in lands, stock, and farming implements. The lands are made valuable year after year by the labor of our citizens. There everything is taxed for State and municipal purposes as well as for national purposes; not a thing escapes; but in the midst of the large centers of trade, where capital is centralized and where the bonds of the Government are held in the main, there they are to have extraordinary advantages, and wealth is to be exempt from this taxation. It does not operate equally and fairly; it throws the burden of taxation heavily upon the producing classes of our people.

If we committed an error on the 25th of February, 1862, it is desirable that that error should not be perpetuated any longer than is indispensably necessary. I would increase the rate of interest, or sell the bonds for a correspondingly smaller amount rather than produce this inequality of taxation. It would then be relieved from the objection that capital is exempted from its share of the burdens of Government. For if these bonds are exempted from taxation it must excite great indignation on the part of the people in the agricultural regions of the country. I firmly believe that if we strike out that provision in this bill it will enhance the confidence of the people in the beneficence of the Government more than by anything else we can do.

Mr. Chairman, this reaches every citizen. It makes those who do not hold these bonds feel that they are compelled to bear a burden that others are not compelled to bear. For the purposes of my argument I will state a case. I know

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

FRIDAY, JUNE 24, 1864.

NEW SERIES.....No. 200.

a citizen, who has no family, who had an estate of $5,000 which he invested in the recent issue of bonds, realizing enough to subsist a man of moderate expenditure. He is relieved from all taxation. There are unsurmountable objections to the continuance of this policy. The evil is now not so great as it will be by the accumulation of this species of wealth in the hands of a class. It ought not to be continued when we see the extent of the evil. It was first passed on February 25, 1862, at a moment of enthusiasm when we thought the war would speedily be terminated, and the measure was not examined with care. We have reached a point when it is possible for us to understand what must be the extent of the national debt and to what extent these bonds must be thrown upon the country, and therefore it does seem to me that it becomes a special subject of interest, and indeed of absolute, imperative necessity, that the effect of this species of legislation should attract and receive unusual attention.

One other remark; if the House should determine not to strike out this whole language and adopt what some gentlemen think is the wiser policy of letting this species of wealth bear its ordinary burden, certainly a broader principle than that laid down in former acts should not be adopted. If the House refuses to strike out this paragraph, at any rate the gentleman from Massachusetts will himself suggest the propriety of substituting the exact words of former acts, and not make the principle worse and more destructive. I hope we shall attempt to amend the error which has manifestly been committed.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I shall not occupy the time of the committee with any extended remarks upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, but I shall content myself with simply defining my position. What I said when the currency bill was before the House and the committee would perhaps be sufficient to justify me in allowing this opportunity to pass by without saying anything upon the subject; but it is due to a question of the importance of this that the position of every member should be understood not only by this committee but by the country, and it should be known to the country who indorses at this late day such a vicious principle as creating a privileged class of moneyed men in this country—men whose whole wealth is to be exempted by the legislation of Congress from bearing the burdens that we are imposing upon ourselves to carry on this war, and that, too, based upon the idea that we cannot get money unless we raise up such a privileged class in this country, and exempt them from taxation and make them a moneyed aristocracy.

Why, these wealthy men who have this money, and whose favor we want to court by partial legislation, ought to understand that we own the wealth of the country, and that we have not got to beg it at their hands, but have the power any day to take it. The gold in the miser's chest and the cattle on a thousand hills are ours, and it is the millions of this country that are to control that treasure, and not the few that happen to have possession of it to-day.

And I ask gentlemen how they are to go before the country and ask localities, ask counties and States to offer bounties to men to enlist, and to impose taxes upon the people at the same time that they exempt the wealth of the country from taxation, and cast the burden entirely upon the labor of the country. It is about time that this mock legislation, this foolish legislation, should be ventilated before the country, and the class of men who are urging this policy upon the country will regret it to the day of their death. This war is not going to last forever. The time will come when every species of legislation, however ridiculous it may be, cannot be forced upon this country upon the plea that it is necessary to adopt such legislation to carry on the war. The time for paying our debts will come, and then if the poor and the laboring men are the only ones who have to pay the taxes, they will pay them, but they will be a far happier class in the community than the rich men will be who enjoy this exemption.

Besides, the rich men do not claim this exemption. Men who have wealth to loan to the Government do not claim it. Men loan their money to the Government from patriotic motives—men of small means and men of large means. They know they can employ their money in business to better advantage, but they say they want to loan their money to the Government as a matter of duty, and they do not tell you they want their bonds exempt from State and municipal taxation.

Mr. Chairman, I have said perhaps more than I ought to have said. I only wish to have my position understood. The New York members want laws enacted here that will command the sympathy and support of the people. And, sir, I speak from authority and by authority here. I know what the people want. They do not want such wicked legislation as this. They want to put down the rebellion. They will furnish men and means for that purpose; and I challenge the men who bring forward these laws to compare notes with me to-day. I represent a district that is foremost in this matter. It has got as good a record as any district in the Union. There is but one voice there on this subject, and I will express that voice here, and other men may take care of their own interests. The men who vote to exempt any species of property, United States securities or anything else in this country, from taxation of any kind that the people choose to impose, will have a fearful record to meet hereafter.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. I had occasion, early in the session, to express my views upon the question now under consideration, and I am glad to find that the House is waking up to the importance of that question. I do not propose now to repeat anything I said on that occasion. I propose to address myself to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MALLORY,] that inasmuch as the Government has commenced the system of exempting these Government issues from State and municipal taxation, it is perhaps better to continue it. It seems to me that if the Government was wrong in exempting the first issues from taxation, the sooner we abandon the vicious principle the better it will be for the country.

Mr. MALLORY. The gentleman will do me the justice to say that I expressed a willingness to vote for an amendment to this bill repealing all acts by which this preference is given to the bonds of the United States. I am opposed to the whole policy, and I would vote for a law repealing all the laws now existing exempting the bonds and securities of the United States from taxation.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. If it could be done without breaking faith with the bond-holders who have taken the bonds under a pledge that they should not be taxed, I would vote with the gentleman from Kentucky to repeal the laws exempting these bonds. But the Government, in violation in my judgment of the true principle, saw fit to exempt by law these bonds from taxation, and men have purchased them under the pledge that they should not be taxed. I am for keeping faith with them. But I am also in favor of placing all future issues under this or any other bill in precisely the same position in respect to taxation as every other species of property.

Mr. MALLORY. I am for keeping all the faith I ever pledged to the holders of these bonds. I never pledged my faith to this system. I have voted against it; and when I said I would vote to repeal all these laws, I did not intend to intimate that gentlemen who voted for this policy could change their course and vote with me. I do not suppose they would do so. But the gentleman from Illinois would not violate any pledge he has made in voting with me, because he has always voted against exempting these bonds from taxation.

Mr. J. C. ALLEN. It is true I voted against it; but a majority of the Congress of the United States have issued the bonds, and put them in the market with the pledge that they should not be taxed. In my judgment, it would be bad faith to repeal that law now, since the bonds have been purchased under an implied pledge, to say the least of it, that they should be exempt from taxation.

The point I make is that the principle is wrong. I have objected to it heretofore, and I am now satisfied that a majority of the House believe that the bonds ought not to have been thus issued. I am satisfied that a majority of the House believe that bonds issued hereafter ought not to be exempt from taxation, and this is as good a time to change the policy of the Government as any in the future will be. If it was wrong heretofore it would be wrong in the future; and if it is wrong let us set it right now.

I desire simply to add further, that in my judgment this principle of exempting Government securities from taxation has heretofore done more to sap the faith of the masses of the people in the financial policy of the Government than anything else, and that its continuance will engender strife, bitterness, and discord, and throw upon this system of legislation an obloquy from which it can never be relieved.

Mr. BROOMALL. Mr. Chairman, I incline to the notion that it makes very little difference whether the portion of the section proposed to be stricken out be stricken out or not. I think, although I do not speak positively, that even then these bonds would be exempt from taxation. I therefore suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that if he intends really to make these bonds taxable for State and municipal purposes he should convert this provision into one affirmative, making them so taxable, in order that the question may not be left in any doubt.

I will give the gentleman from Indiana one additional reason for making these bonds liable to State and municipal taxation, which probably did not strike him. It is this: if the bonds are made taxable for State and municipal purposes, we will have to give a greater nominal amount of bonds to raise a given amount of money. By our so doing we will be benefiting the loyal States. When the debt comes to be paid, it will have to be paid as well by the rebel States as the loyal States. Hence striking out this provision and putting in one of the opposite character, is to some extent legislating in favor of loyal States and discriminating against those in rebellion. I ask the gentleman to think over that reason, and when, if he thinks proper to do so, he shall modify his amendment so as to make it effectual, I am inclined to think that I shall vote for it.

Mr. NOBLE. I do not propose to detain the committee more than a single moment, but I want to take issue with the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. J. C. ALLEN,] and I merely rise for that purpose. I contend that from the beginning it was illegal, contrary to the Constitution, in violation of that instrument, for Congress to attempt to exempt any property from State legislation. I contend that the States of the Union have no other means of sustaining themselves from year to year than by the taxation of real and personal property in the hands of their citizens. And I contend that the Congress of the United States has no right or power to exempt any class or portion of the property of individual citizens from its just proportion of State taxation.

I say, therefore, that while I am ready at any time to repudiate such a policy, I claim that in doing so I am not acting in bad faith, for I contend that it was always illegal and unconstitutional for the Federal Government to exempt property from State and municipal taxation. If the Federal Government has a right to exempt bonds owned by individuals from taxation in the States, why might it not extend that power to other classes of property, and thus cut off the means by which a State government is carried on? I merely wish to put myself on the record against the declaration of my friend from Illinois.

Mr. HOLMAN. There seems to be a good deal of force in the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BROOMALL.] Still I hardly conceive that it can be necessary to assert affirmatively that these securities shall not be subject to State or municipal taxation. The provision of the act of 1862 making such exemption is only applicable to the securities issued under that act. It does not seem to me desirable as a question of policy that we shall put on the statute-book a provision that these bonds shall be subject to State and municipal taxation. To avoid the possibility of any mistake there might be a clause inserted providing that the bonds and other securities to be issued under this act shall be subject to State taxation. But I will hold on to my first motion to amend by striking out the last sentence of the first section.

Mr. STEVENS called for tellers on Mr. HOLMAN's amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. STEVENS and HOLMAN were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 44.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move to insert at the end of the first section these words, "and that the bonds and other obligations issued under this act shall be subject to State and municipal taxation."

Mr. NOBLE. I move to amend the amendment by substituting the following:

And all bonds, Treasury notes, and other obligations of the United States, shall be subject to State and municipal taxation, on equal terms, the same as other property.

Mr. STEVENS. I suppose the object is to prevent the sale of bonds so as to prevent the further indebtedness of the United States. The vote already taken has been sufficient, I think, to entirely prevent the sale of any one of these bonds. I do not believe that if we adopt that provision, and it comes to be known, by implication even, that States may tax these bonds, one dollar will ever be invested in them.

The policy of the Government has heretofore been not to allow State taxation of the bonds of the General Government for two reasons: in the first place, that they would meet with a readier sale if not subject to State taxation; and in the second place, that the Government might, in a case of extraordinary necessity like the present, monopolize the entire revenue to be derived from this description of taxation.

But it seems that now the gentleman from Indiana proposes directly to grant permission to all the States to tax the bonds of the Government. Sir, no man of any wisdom as a capitalist will ever invest a dollar in bonds of that kind. Why, sir, it would subject the governmental bonds to every whim and every change of politics in every State. If a particular Administration of the Government was unpopular with the authorities of a particular State, and they desired to place themselves in an attitude of hostility to the Government, all they would have to do would be to tax the bonds of the Government out of existence; to tax them to such an extent as would be impossible for the Government to stand. That is the attitude in which honorable gentlemen have placed the country by the vote which has just been taken.

Of course every gentleman has the right to vote as he pleases, but it ought to be known that the effect of it is to place the Government at the mercy of the whims, caprice, and malignity of any political party happening for the time being to be in control of a State government.

Now, sir, if when we come into the House the amendment which has just passed this committee should be adopted, I hope my friend from Massachusetts, who has charge of this bill, will be wise enough to withdraw it, and not attempt to put upon the market bonds which no prudent man will ever buy.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I regret as much as any member of this House can to differ with the gentleman from Pennsylvania who last addressed the committee, but I must be permitted to remark that during the present session we have heard this same argument against taxing the holders of bank stock based upon Government securities. It was predicted then that the whole scheme would be a failure, that no wise capitalist would invest his money in such stock if it was to be subject to State taxation, and to the malignity of any party that might come into power. Sir, I for one have no fear of the malignity of parties. Parties are always in the hands of the people, and they will be very apt to so shape their legislation as to suit the people and keep in power unless they are very unwise, and a very unwise party will not remain in power long enough to inflict any permanent injury upon the country.

I only wish to say that in spite of all these predictions of failure, we ingrafted this principle upon the bank bill, and the law to-day is popular, so popular that all the banks will organize under it. It will be a popular system, because it commends itself to the sympathies of the people. It appeals to their sense of justice. It may be an unfortunate time now to adopt any such proposition, but I think not.

Mr. STEVENS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that by the bank law the bonds of the United States are taxable by States?

Mr. HOTCHKISS. In effect they are.

Mr. STEVENS. On the contrary they are expressly excepted.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. By the bank law the full value of shares in these banks is taxable, and that portion of the full value of these shares which is based upon Government securities is taxable the same as that based on any other securities. The whole country, and I believe every branch of the Government, acquiesced in it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I propose by the amendment I have submitted that the bonds and securities authorized to be issued under this act shall be subject to State and municipal taxation. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Noble] proposes that all the bonds and securities issued under this act and former acts shall be subject to State and municipal taxation. That is the difference between them.

Mr. KERNAN. I would suggest the following as a substitute for both the pending amendments:

And that the owners of all bonds and obligations issued under and by virtue of this act shall be liable to State and municipal taxation upon the value thereof to the same extent that they are liable to State taxation on any other securities or similar personal estate owned by them.

Mr. NOBLE. My amendment is in the exact words of the act.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman to yield to me that I may move that the committee rise in order to dispense with the evening session.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved that the committee rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 43.

Mr. FENTON demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WASHBURN, of Illinois, and HOLMAN, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 23.

So the motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 540, to provide ways and means for the support of the Government, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DISPENSING WITH THE EVENING SESSION.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the evening session for this evening be dispensed with.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 25.

Mr. WILSON demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 71, nays 64, not voting 47; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William J. Allen, Ancona, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Bliss, Boyd, James S. Brown, Chanier, Freeman Clarke, Cox, Cravens, Dawes, Dawson, Denning, Denton, Donnelly, Eden, Eldridge, Eliot, English, Fenton, Frank, Garfield, Gooch, Grider, Harding, Harrington, Herriek, Holman, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Ingersoll, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Julian, Kalbfleisch, Orlando Kellogg, Knapp, Mallory, Marcy, Marvin, Morrill, Morrison, Nelson, Norton, Odell, Orth, Pendleton, Perham, Perry, Pike, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Seaford, Smithers, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Thayer, Thomas, Tracy, Upson, Wadsworth, Elihu B. Washburne, Webster, and Winfield—71.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcey, Allison, Ames, Augustus C. Baldwin, Blair, Blow, Boutwell, Brooks, Broomall, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Cole, Creswell, Thomas T. Davis, Dixon, Briggs, Eckley, Edgerton, Finck, Ganson, Hale, Benjamin G. Harris, Higby, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hubert, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Kernan, Knox, La-zeur, Loan, Long, Longyear, McAllister, McBride, McClurg, McDowell, McKinney, Samuel F. Miller, Moorhead, Daniel Morris, James L. Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Noble, Charles O'Neill, Pomeroy, Rice, John H. Rice, Scott, Shannon, Sloan, John B. Steele, William G. Steele, Stevens, Sweet, William B. Washburn, Wheeler, Joseph W. White, Williams, Wilder, Wilson, and Win-dom—64.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, Anderson, Arnold, Baily, Beaman, Blaine, Brandegee, William G. Brown, Clay, Coffroth, Henry Winter Davis, Dnmont, Farnsworth, Grinnell, Griswold, Hall, Charles M. Harris, Hutchins, Jenckes, Kasson, King, Law, LeBlond, Littlejohn, McIndoe, Middleton, William H. Miller, John O'Neill, Patterson, William H. Randall, Robinson, Rogers, Ross, Scheuck, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stebbins, Van Valkenburgh, Voorhes, Ward, Whaley, Chilton A. White, Benjamin Wood, Fernando Wood, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—47.

So the motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD.

Mr. STEELE, of New York, moved that the House disagree to the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 495, to amend the charter of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, and ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed Messrs. STEELE of New York, PRICE, and WASHBURN of Illinois, as the conferees on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 434) to authorize the bailiff of the orphans' court in the county of Washington and District of Columbia to serve processes issued by said court, and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. No. 240) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1865, and for other purposes.

Mr. ORTH moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was disagreed to.

LOAN BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. HOOPER moved that all general debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the loan bill be closed in five minutes after its consideration shall be resumed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER moved that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOUTWELL in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the loan bill, on which Mr. HOLMAN was entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to state some points of difference between the pending propositions. My friend from Ohio [Mr. NOBLE] proposes to tax all securities of the United States issued under this or any former law. I do not think that will hold good. While I would be very glad to concur in the views of the gentleman from Ohio, I do not believe the national faith should be impaired in the slightest degree. Further, if the law exempting these bonds from taxation is not constitutional, as my friend contends, as a matter of course we get rid of that embarrassment through the courts of justice; if it is constitutional we are striking a terrible blow at the credit and good faith of the country. That ought to be preserved and retained, whatever errors we ourselves may have committed.

Mr. BROWN, of Wisconsin. I simply wish to say that I entirely dissent from the doctrine that a party who has not voted for a past contract or a past obligation entered into by the Government is not bound by that contract. I believe it is due to the country that every contract we have entered into should be kept in good faith; but I believe, also, that the provision by which these bonds are exempted from taxation is almost fatal to the country, and that now we should depart from our past policy in that respect.

I wish, in addition, to suggest that if it becomes proper, by the overruling of the other amendments, to offer a proviso which will place this matter in a better shape than the amendments which have been offered to this section, I shall then move to add, by way of proviso, the following:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to exempt bonds issued under this act from taxation for State and municipal purposes in the same ratio as other personal property.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend by striking out the whole of the first section after the enacting clause, and inserting what I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. NOBLE. I rise to a question of order. There are already two amendments pending, and I apprehend they must be disposed of before another can be interposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer his amendment to strike out an entire section, but the question must first be taken on the motion to perfect the section proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. STEVENS. I will ask to have my amendment read. It is to strike out the first section after the enacting clause and insert what the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to borrow, from time to time, on the credit of the United States, $100,000,000, and to issue therefor coupon or registered bonds of the United States, redeemable at the pleasure of the Government after any period not less than twenty nor more than thirty years, and, if deemed expedient, made payable at any period not more than forty years from date, payable in coin. And said bonds shall be of such denominations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct, not less than fifty dollars, and bear an annual interest not exceeding eight per cent., payable semi-annually, and the interest on all bonds heretofore issued, payable annually, may be paid semi-annually; and in lieu of such bonds, authorized to be issued, the Secretary of the Treasury may issue bonds, bearing interest, payable semi-annually. And the Secretary of the Treasury may dispose of such bonds, or any part thereof, in the United States, or, if he shall find it expedient, in Europe, at any time, on such terms as he may deem advisable, for lawful money of the United States, or, at his discretion, for Treasury notes, certificates of indebtedness, or certificates of deposit issued under any act of Congress. And he may also issue in exchange for Treasury notes heretofore issued bearing seven and three tenths per cent. interest besides the six per cent. bonds heretofore authorized, like bonds of the denominations of $100 and of $50. And all bonds, Treasury notes, and other obligations of the United States shall be exempt from taxation by or under State or municipal authority.

The amendment offered by Mr. NOBLE to the amendment offered by Mr. HOLMAN was not agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN offered the following as a substitute for Mr. HOLMAN's amendment:

And that the owners of the bonds and obligations issued under and by virtue of the provisions of this act shall be liable to State and municipal taxation upon the value thereof to the same extent as they are liable to such taxation upon any other securities or similar personal estate owned by them.

Mr. PRUYN. I would inquire of my colleague if that would not be the effect of the law if no such amendment were embraced in it.

Mr. KERNAN. It is thought by some that it would not. The amendment can do no harm. The decisions of some of the courts would leave the matter in doubt.

Mr. PRUYN. It would rather go to show the sense of the House as to the necessity of such a provision. If it is understood that this is merely by way of precaution, I am willing to vote for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. To avoid the consumption of time, inasmuch as the proposition the gentleman from New York has submitted by way of a substitute is the same as the amendment I have submitted, only differing in phraseology, and in this, that mine proposed no limit upon the extent of State taxation, while his limits it by the extent of other taxation imposed by the State, I will accept his amendment.

Mr. HOOPER, upon the amendment as modified, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, and Mr. KERNAN, were appointed. The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 59.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I now desire to offer my proposition. I do not, however, wish to disturb the action of the gentleman who has charge of this bill until he has perfected it, and perhaps he will give me an opportunity to offer the amendment in the House. If so, I will not delay the committee now.

Mr. HOOPER. I will.

Mr. GANSON. I shall have no objection to that provided the proposition last voted upon be allowed to come in in the same way.

Mr. STEVENS. Well, sir, unless the previous question is demanded I shall have a right to offer it in the House, and therefore, as I do not wish to delay the bill now I will not offer it, but will only give notice that I shall propose it in the House.

Mr. BROOKS. I wish to inquire of the gentleman who reported the bill how much money there is appropriated in it? What is the amount of the loan? In order to do that I move to strike out $400,000,000. By the act of March 3, 1863, there were appropriated $900,000,000. The act was not exactly clear, but the presumption is that that loan ends with the current fiscal year. I wish to know from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Hooper] if that loan of $900,000,000 ends with the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1864.

Mr. HOOPER. If the gentleman will look at the closing paragraph of the third section he will see that if there is any doubt about it this bill settles that doubt.

Mr. BROOKS. The gentleman will permit me to inquire what is the amount of loan provided for in this bill?

Mr. HOOPER. I understand the amount to be about four hundred million dollars, and whatever may remain unused of the loan provided for by the act of March 3, 1863.

Mr. BROOKS. As I read the bill, there are $400,000,000 in the first section. Then in the fourth section there is a temporary loan of $150,000,000; and in the third section, to which the gentleman has alluded, there are the $200,000,000 appropriated under the act of March 3, 1863. That gives a total of $750,000,000 for the next fiscal year. Am I right?

Mr. HOOPER. The gentleman is not right in this: that there has already been issued, under the act of March 3, 1863, about half of the amount authorized. This bill proposes to authorize the issuing of what remains of that amount. The object in keeping alive that act is that the plates used in printing may be available. Under the fourth section of the bill there is authority to receive temporary deposits, but no authority to make any issue.

Mr. BROOKS. I am desirous of ascertaining the amount of obligation which we shall incur under this bill. I understand now that the first section appropriates $400,000,000, the section for a temporary loan $150,000,000, and $200,000,000 under the act of March 3, 1863, making in all $750,000,000 for the fiscal year.

Mr. HOOPER. Let me correct the gentleman on one point. The aggregate of the temporary loan is $150,000,000; but a portion of that has already been taken; it has already reached $75,000,000.

Mr. BROOKS. Has the gentleman made any calculation sufficient to satisfy his own mind that the loans authorized by this bill will be sufficient to cover the expenditures of the coming fiscal year?

Mr. HOOPER. I prefer to take the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury rather than to rely upon my own judgment, and he is satisfied that this will be enough.

I would again call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that the authority for the temporary loan already exists, and this bill merely increases the rate of interest to six per cent. The former bill limited the rate of interest to five per cent.

Mr. BROOKS. I withdraw my amendment and move to insert in the ninth line the words "payable in coin." Those words are not in this bill, although they are in the bill of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.]

Mr. HOOPER. The bill of last year—the $900,000,000 bill—contained these words, but it was not deemed necessary or considered expedient to insert them in this bill. I will send up to the desk and ask to have read, as a part of my reply to the gentleman, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury which was published some time ago, giving his views upon that point.

Mr. GANSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether this bill was prepared in view of the fact that gold is going up to 245 under the operation of the gold bill.

Mr. HOOPER. I beg leave to say that this bill was prepared before the great rise in gold, and I suppose that that rise may be ascribed to the opposition of the other side of the House to this bill. I ask that the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury may be read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 18, 1864.

SIR: Your letter of the 13th instant, making inquiries in regard to the kind of currency with which the five-twenty years six percent. and the three years seven-thirty percent. notes are to be redeemed, has been received.

It has been the constant usage of the Department to redeem all coupon and registered bonds forming part of the funded or permanent debt of the United States in coin, and this usage has not been deviated from during my administration of its affairs.

All the Treasury notes and other obligations forming part of the temporary loan are payable and will be redeemed in lawful money: that is to say, in United States notes* until after the redemption of specie payments, when they also will doubtless be redeemed in coin, or equivalent notes.

The five-twenty sixes being payable twenty years from date, though redeemable after five years, are considered as belonging to the funded or permanent debt, and so also are the twenty years sixes into which the three years seven-thirty notes are convertible. These bonds, therefore, according to the usage of the Government, are payable in coin.

The three years seven-thirty Treasury notes are part of the temporary loan, and will be paid in United States notes,* unless holders prefer conversion to payment.

S. P. CHASE,

Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BROOKS withdrew his amendment.

Mr. HOOPER. I move to amend the second section of the bill by inserting after the word "notes" the words "of such denominations as shall be found expedient," not less than one dollar; so that it will read:

And the Secretary of the Treasury may redeem and cause to be canceled, and destroyed any Treasury notes or United States notes heretofore issued under authority of previous acts of Congress, and substitute, in lieu thereof, an equal amount of Treasury notes such as are authorized by this act, or of other United States notes, of such denominations as shall be found expedient.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. I move the following as a substitute for the second section of the bill:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury may issue, upon the credit of the United States, bonds of any denomination not less than $100, payable in lawful money three years from the date thereof, and bearing interest not exceeding eight per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually in lawful money, and may receive at par therefor the lawful money of the United States, Treasury notes, certificates of indebtedness, or certificates of deposit issued under any act of Congress. And the Secretary of the Treasury, in addition to the total amounts of bonds authorized by the first and second sections of this act, shall issue at par, in redemption of any outstanding notes, certificates of deposit, or certificates of indebtedness of the United States, bonds similar to those hereinbefore in this second section authorized, in denominations of not less than $100, or of like denominations similar to those authorized by the first section, and payable five years from date, with interest at six per cent., payable semi-annually. And the Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized to issue, in lieu of any bonds heretofore authorized by law, and not now issued in pursuance thereof, bonds similar to and in the denominations hereby authorized. All outstanding notes, other than United States notes, shall cease to be a legal tender in payment of public or private indebtedness on and after the 1st day of October, 1864. And no notes, other than United States notes, shall hereafter be issued or reissued. Nor shall the total amount of United States notes issued or to be issued ever exceed $400,000,000, and such additional sum, not exceeding $50,000,000, as may be temporarily required for the redemption of temporary loan.

Mr. STEVENS. That is a very important proposition and should not be acted upon this evening. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 540, to provide ways and means for the support of the Government, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. POMEROY. I ask that the amendment which I have just offered may be printed.

It was so ordered.

And then, on motion of Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan, (at five o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

* The words "or national currency" should have been inserted.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 23, 1864.

On motion of Mr. FOOT, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FOOT presented six petitions of citizens of Vermont, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to secure to persons in the military or naval service of the United States homesteads on confiscated or forfeited estates in insurrectionary districts; which were ordered to lie on the table, the Committee on Public Lands having reported a bill on the subject.

Mr. MORGAN presented a petition of citizens of New York, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to secure to persons in the military or naval service of the United States homesteads on confiscated or forfeited estates in insurrectionary districts; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HARRIS presented two petitions of citizens of New York, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to secure to persons in the military or naval service of the United States homesteads on confiscated or forfeited estates in insurrectionary districts; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SUMNER presented four petitions of men and women of the United States, praying for the abolition of slavery, and such an amendment of the Constitution as will forever prohibit its existence in any portion of the Union; which were referred to the select committee on slavery and freedmen.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. NESMITH, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred joint resolution (S. No. 43) authorizing the settlement of the accounts of the late Captain Daniel Hebard, of the United States volunteers, reported it without amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 317) providing for bail in certain cases of military arrests, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 45) to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to obtain the title to certain property in Carson City and Territory of Nevada, for the purposes of a branch mint located in said place, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 533) to provide for ascertaining and adjusting claims against the Government for injury or destruction of property by the Army of the United States, or by military authority, during the present rebellion, reported it without amendment, and that it ought not to pass.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 305) to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished the Army of the United States, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 103) for the relief of Mary Kellogg, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 546) to regulate the rank, pay, and emoluments of veterinary surgeons of cavalry regiments, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of the Miami Indians, praying for the payment of all due arrearages due them, reported a bill (S. No. 327) for the relief of Thomas Richardville, and other Indiana Miami Indians, now residing in the State of Kansas; which was read and passed to a second reading, and the petition and accompanying papers were ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 274) in relation to the computation of the time within which an indictment may be found against persons charged with crimes against the laws of the United States, reported it without amendment and that it ought not to pass.

Mr. SPRAGUE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 322) to change the name of the steamboat Magnet, of Buffalo, to Home, reported it without amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of N. S. Brenton, paymaster United States Army, submitted a report (No. 92) accompanied by a bill (S. No. 328) for the relief of Major N. S. Brenton, a paymaster in the United States Army; which was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of William H. Jameson, paymaster United States Army, reported a bill (S. No. 329) for the relief of William H. Jameson, a paymaster in the United States Army; which was read and passed to a second reading.

SUPPRESSION OF A NEWSPAPER.

Mr. POWELL. I offer the following resolution, which I ask to have considered now, if there is no objection to it.

Mr. CONNESS. Let it be read for information.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Whereas a military order has been recently issued in the State of Kentucky prohibiting the circulation in said State of the Cincinnati Inquirer, a newspaper printed and published at Cincinnati, Ohio; and whereas a free press is essential to maintain the rights and liberties of the people: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President be requested to cause the aforesaid military order to be revoked, and that the President be further requested to issue such orders as will prevent the military authorities from encroaching upon the freedom of the press in the future.

Mr. SUMNER. Let that resolution lie over.

Mr. POWELL. I will ask to have it printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution not having been received, it cannot be ordered to be printed.

Mr. POWELL. It is received, but lies over under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands objection to be made.

Mr. POWELL. Objection is made to its consideration at the present time. There is no objection made to its reception.

Mr. CONNESS. I called for its reading for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inquire whether there is any objection to the reception of the resolution.

Mr. CONNESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. POWELL. I ask the Senator to allow the resolution to be printed and lie over under the rule.

Mr. CONNESS. Very well; I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then, there being no objection to the reception of the resolution, the question is on the motion that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

CLAIM AGAINST HENRY W. DEPUY.

Mr. RICHARDSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to communicate to the Senate a copy of the letter of E. B. French, Second Auditor of the Treasury, dated March 15, 1864, and addressed to Henry W. Deputy, late agent for the Pawnee Indians, claiming from Mr. Deputy the immediate payment of a sum of money alleged to be due the United States, together with the evidence upon which said alleged indebtedness was founded. And that the Secretary of the Treasury be further requested to communicate to the Senate a copy of Mr. Deputy's reply to the Second Auditor, dated March 18, 1864, together with a statement of the official action taken thereupon.

EXAMINATION OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. WILSON. The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom were referred the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 85) to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army, have directed me to report in favor of concurring in those amendments, and if there be no objection I should like to have them acted upon now.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

IRISH NATIONAL FAIR.

Mr. COWAN. The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 68) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to release certain goods from the payment of duties, have had the same under consideration, and have instructed me to report it back with an amendment, which they offer by way of substitute. If there be no objection, I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. The amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out all of the original resolution after the enacting clause in the following words:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to remit the duties on all goods and articles imported into the United States for, and donated to, any fair held, or to be held, for the benefit of the Sanitary Commission and Christian Association, or either of them; also on all goods and articles imported and donated to the Irish National Fair recently held at Chicago. And the Secretary of the Treasury is also hereby authorized, in his discretion, to release such fairs from payment of auction and lottery licenses for auction and lotteries at such fairs.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to release and discharge the Irish National Fair recently held in Chicago of and from all liability heretofore incurred for or on account of having sold goods and lottery tickets without license or stamps, and of and from the payment of all license or stamp duties or penalties incurred by reason of the sales aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in and ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COWAN, its title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to release certain parties from liability or payment of duties and penalties therein mentioned."

MAJOR MORRIS S. MILLER.

Mr. NESMITH. The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 107) for the relief of Major Morris S. Miller, of the quartermaster's department, have directed me to report it back without amendment, and with a recommendation that it pass. If there be no objection, I should like to have it acted upon at once. It is a matter that will occasion no debate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to credit the account of Major Morris S. Miller, quartermaster United States Army, with the sum of about thirty-seven thousand dollars, or so much thereof as was paid by him during the years 1859 and 1860, to the respective firms of Russell, Majors & Waddell, Brown & Russell, and Majors & Russell, upon the orders of the Secretary of War and the Quartermaster General, or either of them.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is there any report in this case? If there is I should like to hear it.

Mr. NESMITH. There is no report in the case. This is a House resolution. I send to the Secretary a letter from the Secretary of War in explanation of it, which I ask to have read.

The Secretary read, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON CITY, June 6, 1864.

SIR: In reply to your note I have the honor to state that in my opinion the payments made by Major Miller, assistant quartermaster, under the express order of John B. Floyd, Secretary of War, ought to be credited in the settlement of the quartermaster's accounts, and that the accounting officer of the Treasury erred in rejecting such credits. Justice to a subordinate officer who acted in obedience to and under constraint of the orders of the head of the Department to which the officer belongs, requires that authority should be given by act of Congress to reopen the account and make all just credits and allowances.

Your obedient servant,

EDWIN M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

Hon. J. F. FARNSWORTH.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is not at all satisfactory to me; I do not know how it may be to the Senate. Here is a joint resolution to allow a paymaster some thirty-seven thousand dollars, I believe, and upon what ground? Because a Secretary of War directed him to pay it. If that money was paid contrary to law, if John B. Floyd directed this officer to pay this money for an improper purpose, are we to sanction the principle that Congress will come in and refund the money to him? I do not know why this was paid by this officer, but this letter from the War Department places it entirely upon the ground that this superior officer ordered him to pay it. We are at the mercy of the officers of the Government if that principle is to prevail.

It may be that this was a proper payment; I do not know about that; but the evidence before the Senate and the point of the communication from the War Department is simply this: that John B. Floyd, when Secretary of War, directed this officer to make certain payments; he made them; the accounting officers of the Treasury decide that they were not proper payments and cannot be allowed, and Congress is now to pass a law to refund him that money because John B. Floyd directed him to pay it. It seems to me it will never do to sanction such a principle as that.

I should like to know what this payment was for, and how this order came to be given by John B. Floyd, which the accounting officers of the Treasury will not allow.

Mr. NESMITH. The petition of Major Miller is very short, and I will read it to the Senate.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives:

The petition of Major Morris S. Miller, quartermaster United States Army, respectfully sets forth:

That, in the years 1859 and 1860, he paid certain amounts to the respective firms of Russell, Majors & Waddell, Brown & Russell, and Majors & Russell; that, on the examination of the accounts at the Treasury, certain disallowances were made by the accounting officers, by which an amount of more than thirty-seven thousand dollars ($37,000) is charged to your petitioner at the Treasury Department; that these accounts were paid by your petitioner on positive and express orders of the Secretary of War and the Quartermaster General, indorsed in writing on the vouchers; that a disobedience if arraigned therefor before a court-martial; that the present Comptroller has decided in writing that in such a case the responsibility should be sought elsewhere; that the President has expressed his opinion in writing that your petitioner should not be made to lose the money, but that he cannot legally and properly interfere; that your petitioner is therefore under the necessity of appealing to Congress.

He therefore prays that the proper accounting officers be, by resolution, directed to reconsider the case of your petitioner and to settle the vouchers referred to in such a manner as to credit to your petitioner such of these payments as were made by the positive orders of the Secretary of War and of your petitioner's immediate superior, the Quartermaster General.

And your petitioner will ever pray.

Very respectfully,

MORRIS S. MILLER,
Major, Quartermaster.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 25, 1864.

I have here also the opinion of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury, which I will read:

All the disallowed vouchers in Major Miller's account having been acted upon by my predecessor on the same state of facts and evidence as now exist, I am precluded from entertaining an appeal from his decisions. But in my opinion a military officer, one of whose highest duties is obedience, should not suffer for obeying the orders of his superiors, when to have disobeyed would have subjected him to punishment. In such a case the responsibility should be sought elsewhere.

J. M. BRODHEAD,
Comptroller.

SECOND COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, June 29, 1863.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I really think if Senators will look at this claim they will see the danger of passing this joint resolution. It seems now that it is connected with the famous fraud practiced upon the Government by Majors, Waddell & Co. There are claims pending against this Government now in the Court of Claims, and that have been repeatedly before Congress, amounting to hundreds of thousands, and I do not know but I may say of millions of dollars at this time; claims which the Secretary of War, John B. Floyd, allowed, acceptances which he himself made. Now, here comes up a little claim—a little claim compared with these larger ones, although it amounts to some thirty-seven thousand dollars —of a paymaster who says that he paid out money in pursuance of an order of John B. Floyd to these men Russell, Majors & Co. The accounting officers of the Treasury say that this money was paid without authority of law, and they refuse to allow it.

The Secretary of War tells us, and one of the Comptrollers tells us in a communication which has been read, that it is not for a subordinate officer to disobey; that he would have subjected himself to court-martial if he had disobeyed, and therefore he must pay out the money. Sir, I deny that proposition. There is no safety if that proposition is to be the law of the land. The subordinate officer, if that order was contrary to law, should have taken the responsibility of disobeying it, and have gone before the court-martial, and the court-martial would have exonerated him. The Secretary of War has no authority to direct a paymaster to pay money to me or to any citizen of the country except in pursuance of law.

I really think this will be establishing a very dangerous precedent. This claim comes from the Committee on Military Affairs. It seems to me it had better be referred to our Committee on Claims, and let them examine it. I only know in regard to it what has appeared here.

Mr. COLLAMER. I have not attended very closely to this resolution, and I wish to ask a question. The business of a paymaster is to pay troops. Was this payment made to any troops?

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir; it was made to Russell & Majors, contractors, as I understand the papers.

Mr. NESMITH. The payment was made to Russell & Majors for transportation. It is not a claim appropriating money now. This officer acted in obedience to the order of the Secretary of War and the Paymaster General. The question was not brought before him in any judicial form that he could decide as to the right or the legality of the claim. The vouchers were simply indorsed by these officers that their order to a payment should add no discretion in the case to make the payment. He made the payment in pursuance of those orders, and the then Comptroller decided that the payment was improper. The present Comptroller admits the propriety of the then payment, but says that he is precluded from reopening a decision made by his predecessor. All that this resolution asks is that that decision may be reopened.

Mr. COLLAMER. A paymaster can be employed as the agent of the Government in no way on earth to pay any orders whatever except to pay troops.

Mr. NESMITH. This gentleman is not a paymaster, but a quartermaster of the United States Army, who paid a bill for transportation. If I used the word "paymaster" I used it improperly. He is a quartermaster of the United States Army, engaged in making payments in pursuance of the orders of the Secretary of War and the Quartermaster General. The question of the legality or illegality of the payment was not before him at all, and could not properly be brought before him for judicial examination. He only acted upon imperative orders sent from his superiors to disburse a certain amount of money in his hands.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not profess to understand this matter except what appears by these papers. If he paid out this money legally there would be no trouble about his claim; it would be allowed. But the Secretary of War in his communication, which has been read at the desk, says that the account of this quartermaster—I thought it was a payment—ought to be opened, and he allowed the sum of $37,000 which he paid to Russell, Majors & Co., because he paid it in pursuance of an order of the Secretary of War, and that if he had disobeyed that order he would have subjected himself to a court-martial. If that rule is established it settles the principle in these great claims that have been against this Government for years. The persons holding these acceptances of John B. Floyd paid that money over to this same firm of Russell, Majors & Waddell on the express acceptance in writing of Floyd, and we have refused to allow those claims. Now comes up a quartermaster who claims that he should be allowed $37,000 that he paid to these same contractors for transportation, because he was ordered by the Secretary of War to pay it. I should like to have this matter looked into, and I move that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, which is the appropriate committee to examine these things. That is the committee to which these claims have been presented heretofore, and I think it ought to be considered by that committee.

Mr. COWAN. I should like to remind the Senator from Illinois that the cases are entirely different. The parties who purchased Floyd's acceptances were not officers; they were not subordinates of Floyd; they were money-lenders, speculators, and dealers in this species of security. This, I understand, is a payment made by a quartermaster in pursuance of the order of his superior. It cannot be denied that the Government had some kind of dealings with Russell, Majors & Waddell. How was it possible for the quartermaster to know what they were?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Why is it not allowed, then, if it is a legal claim?

Mr. COWAN. I do not know.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The accounting officers decided it to be illegal.

Mr. COWAN. I understand the accounting officer to say that it was legal, but he is precluded from entertaining an appeal from the judgment of his predecessor.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator will allow me, I do not understand the accounting officer to decide any such thing. He gives that as a reason why he will not open it for reinvestigation.

Mr. COWAN. I understand the Senator from Oregon to say that the present Comptroller is of the opinion that the payment was a good and valid payment—

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not think the paper shows that.

Mr. COWAN. But that in consequence of the decision of his predecessor he cannot now entertain the appeal from that decision, and this is simply opening the case and allowing him to readjudicate upon it. If that is the case I think it is one in which the claimant is entitled to relief. I do not see why it should be otherwise.

Mr. NESMITH. The letter of Mr. Brodhead states:

"All the disallowed vouchers in Major Miller's account having been acted upon by my predecessor on the same state of facts and evidence as now exists, I am precluded from entertaining an appeal from his decisions. But in my opinion a military officer, one of whose highest duties is obedience, should not suffer for obeying the orders of his superiors, when to have disobeyed would have subjected him to punishment. In such a case the responsibility should be sought elsewhere."

This matter was submitted to the President of the United States, and he gave this opinion:

If it is true that Major Miller made payments under express order of the Secretary of War, as a matter of equity he, Major Miller, should not be made to lose the money; but the accounting officer having settled the matter, I doubt both the legality and propriety of interference by the President.

A. LINCOLN.

May 25, 1864.

There is no parallel at all between the cases referred to by the Senator from Illinois, the acceptances of Floyd, and the payment of this money. That was entirely unauthorized by law and a fraud upon the Government, but this is a payment by a party who is not alleged to have been implicated in any frauds in any way, but who was directed by his superior officer to make a certain payment when disobedience of that order would have dismissed him from the service. I do not think the argument of the Senator from Illinois is entirely conclusive as to what should be the rights and duties under such circumstances of a mere disbursing officer, a quartermaster who has to pay out the funds in his hands. When the question is submitted to his superiors, both the Secretary of War and the Quartermaster General, as to the legality of the payment, they are the parties to decide it, and when the matter is referred to the disbursing officer for payment he has no discrimination in the matter except to pay the order. I appeal to the Senator from Illinois and ask him if he thinks, under these circumstances, the order coming before him indorsed by these superiors, and he having made the payment directly in compliance with that order, this officer should be held responsible for this money, particularly when he had no discrimination in the matter, and the judicial question, or the question of the legality of the payment, could not possibly be brought before him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, on the motion of the Senator from Illinois to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was not agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the joint resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 29, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Carlile, Clark, Colamer, Connors, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Foot, Foster, Harris, Hendricks, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Powell, Richardson, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wade, Willey, and Wilson—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Doolittle, Harlan, and Trumbull—3.
ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Fessenden, Grimes, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Riddle, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Wright—17.

So the bill was passed.

POST ROUTE BILL.

Mr. COLLAMER. I am directed by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 532) to establish certain post roads, to report it back to the Senate with various amendments for the establishment of additional routes. I do not know whether gentlemen would desire to have them printed. If there is no desire of that kind, as the committee propose to insert all the routes which have been applied for which are not already post roads or are not already in the bill, the amendments may as well be acted upon now, and the bill disposed of.

Mr. SUMNER. I should not think it was necessary to print them.

Mr. WILSON. We can act upon the bill at once, and concur in the report of the committee.

Mr. COLLAMER. Then I ask for the present consideration of the bill, and I will move that the amendments reported from the committee be concurred in.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest that it is not necessary to read the bill or the amendments. It is a very plain bill, and we know precisely what it is and what it contains. I think we had better concur in the amendments without reading them, and pass the bill.

Mr. COLLAMER. The bill and the amendments relate to nothing but post routes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will be dispensed with, if there be no objection. The question will be on agreeing to the amendments reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The amendments were agreed to.

PAYMENT FOR CAPTURED HORSES.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 545) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of horses and other property destroyed in the military service of the United States," to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage. The bill contains but one brief section, and I should like to have it acted upon now if there be no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which provides that the act to which it is an amendment shall, from the commencement of the present rebellion, extend to and embrace all cases of the loss of horses by any officer, non-commissioned officer, or private, in the military service of the United States, while in the line of their duty in such service, by capture by the enemy, whenever it shall appear that such officer, non-commissioned officer, or private was or shall be ordered by his superior officer to surrender to the enemy, and such capture was or shall be made in pursuance of such surrender.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WESTERN MILITARY CLAIMS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 87) amendatory of an act to provide for the deficiency in the appropriation for the pay of officers and men actually employed in the Western department or department of Missouri, to report it back without amendment and with a recommendation that it pass; and as it will take but a moment I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides that when any person or persons holding any power of attorney or assignment executed subsequent to August 16, 1863, and prior to January 22, 1864, for the sum adjudged due to any officer or soldier by the commissioners appointed under joint resolution approved February 16, 1863, shall have paid any money to any officer or soldier on the faith of such power of attorney or assignment, the paymaster appointed to disburse the funds appropriated by the act approved January 22, 1864, to provide for the deficiency in the appropriation for the pay of officers and men actually employed in the Western department or department of Missouri, shall be authorized and directed to pay to such person or persons the amount thus paid to any officer or soldier, upon such attorney or assignee making and filing an affidavit to the effect that the amount was actually paid to the officer or soldier, and upon the paymaster being satisfied that the amount was actually paid; and the amount paid such attorney or assignee under this resolution is to be deducted from the amount due the officer or soldier, anything in any previous action of Congress to the contrary notwithstanding.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALEXANDER CROSS.

Mr. WADE. I move that the Senate take up House joint resolution No. 39.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 39) for the relief of Alexander Cross.

Alexander Cross heretofore filed his petition in the Court of Claims of the United States, praying relief on account of certain rents alleged to be due from the United States to him as assignee of one Daniel Saffarans, by virtue of certain alleged contract of lease between Saffarans (who is now deceased) and the United States; and the Court of Claims, on the 24th of January, 1859, rendered a decision adverse to the prayer of the petition, on the sole ground of an alleged technical defect in the assignment of the lease from Saffarans to the petitioner. The joint resolution therefore proposes to remedy the cause to the Court of Claims for a further hearing, upon the testimony heretofore filed therein, and such further testimony as either party may take and file pursuant to the rules of the court; and if, upon the further hearing of the cause, it shall appear that the petitioner is the equitable owner of the lease, and in justice and equity entitled to the rents (if any) due thereon from the United States, the court is to be authorized to render judgment therefor in his favor, notwithstanding any technical defect in the assignment of the lease.

The Committee on Claims reported the joint resolution with an amendment to add the following proviso:

Provided, That no money shall be paid out of the Treasury upon any judgment which may be rendered in favor of the petitioner in said cause until he shall have filed with the Secretary of the Treasury a bond, with ample security, in such sum as will fully indemnify the United States against any demand which may be set up and established by or on behalf of the heirs or representatives of the said Daniel Saffarans, deceased, under or by virtue of said contract or lease.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls up the special order of the day at this hour, being the unfinished business of yesterday, House bill No. 512.

Mr. WADE. I hope that will be informally passed over to enable us to take the question on this resolution. It will take but a moment.

Mr. SUMNER. I have no objection to the order being passed over informally to accommodate my friend.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to continuing the consideration of the resolution which has been before the Senate. The question is on the amendment reported from the Committee on Claims.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in and ordered to be engrossed. The resolution was ordered to be read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPherson, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (No. 495) to amend the charter of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. STEELE of New York, Mr. PRICE of Iowa, and Mr. WASHBURN of Illinois, managers at the same on its part.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 26) to provide for the public instruction of youth in the county of Washington, District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (No. 550) to establish Colfax street in the city of Washington and District of Columbia; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; which thereupon received the signature of the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 240) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1865, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 434) to authorize the bailiff of the orphans' court in the county of Washington and District of Columbia to serve processes issued by said court, and for other purposes.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

The message further announced that the President of the United States had approved and signed on the 20th instant the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (H. R. No. 40) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1865, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 179) concerning lands in the State of California;

A bill (H. R. No. 217) to confirm certain entries of land in the State of Missouri;

A bill (H. R. No. 227) granting lands to the State of Michigan for the construction of certain wagon roads for military and postal purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 290) for the relief of Rhoda Wolcott, widow of Henry Wolcott;

A bill (H. R. No. 356) requiring proof of payment of duties on foreign salt before payment of the allowances provided for by the acts of July 29, 1813, and March 3, 1819;

A bill (H. R. No. 486) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Idaho," approved March 3, 1863;

A bill (H. R. No. 504) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the marine hospital and grounds at Chicago, Illinois, and to purchase a new site and build a new hospital;

A bill (H. R. No. 513) to detach the counties of Calhoun and Branch from the western judicial district, and annex the same to the eastern district of the State of Michigan;

A bill (H. R. No. 521) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the claims of Peruvian citizens under the convention between the United States and Peru of the 12th of January, 1863," approved June 1, 1864; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 47) for the relief of Rev. W. B. Matchett.

WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill of the House (No. 495) to amend the charter of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and

On motion of Mr. GRIMES, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. WADE, Mr. WILLEY, and Mr. RIDDLE.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (No. 550) to establish Colfax street in the city of Washington and District of Columbia was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPEAL OF FUGITIVE SLAVE LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 512) to repeal the fugitive slave act of 1850, and all acts and parts of acts for the rendition of fugitive slaves.

Mr. DAVIS addressed the Senate at some length. [His speech will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and to insert the following:

That no person held to service or labor in one State, under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due; and Congress shall pass all necessary and proper laws for the rendition of all such persons who shall so, as aforesaid, escape.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It will be perceived that my amendment embodies simply the words of the Constitution of the United States, with a declaration that it is the duty of Congress to pass all proper and necessary laws to carry the provision of the Constitution into effect.

I have stated the substance of the amendment that the country may again have an opportunity to observe whether the Senate of the United States is willing to affirm what unquestionably is in the Constitution of the United States. We have been told, sir, by the highest judicial authority of this country, by no less a distinguished jurist than Judge Story, in a celebrated case where the constitutionality of the fugitive slave law was involved, that this provision of the Constitution, recited in my amendment, was one of the compromises of the instrument, without the incorporation of which into the instrument the formation of a Constitution for a General Government, a common Government between the States, would have been impossible. Sir, from the very foundation of the Government after the adoption of the Constitution there was no statesman who ever questioned that a faithful observance of this constitutional requirement was obligatory upon the people of the United States. As we have been told this morning by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, it was adopted by the Federal Convention without a dissenting voice. The men who framed the Constitution, in 1793 passed an act of Congress to carry this provision of the Constitution into effect. That act met with the approval of the Father of his Country. No one of the men who were witnesses to the establishment of the Government, or participated in that establishment, ever questioned either its validity or its wisdom; and never until these modern days, when it has been discovered, to the amazement of thoughtful minds throughout the world, that the negro is not only the equal but a little better than the white man, was the correctness of their judgment called in question.

Sir, whence comes this spirit to demolish the work of the fathers? By what means is it that men in these modern days have become so much wiser than the fathers that they should now attempt to do away with their work? Are the statesmen of the present day more deeply read in the principles of sound government than were the men who established this Government? Sir, we are but pigmies in comparison with giants, and by such acts as these we only demonstrate that "Pigmies are pigmies still, though perched on Alps."

But, sir, not only according to the political views of the present day is it wise to do away with all the work of the great men who preceded us, but we have—I had like to have said the audacity—we have the presumption, sir, to publish to the people of this country and to the world that we are not only wiser but purer and better men; that we have studied more deeply and more closely, and I presume we would have it believed that we practice more consistently, the teachings of the divine code than the great, the good, and the wise men who preceded us, and that George Washington and the men associated with him in revolutionary times, and during the period in which this Constitution was formed, were not the good Christians that we of the present day are. Now, sir, if we would believe what is to be met with in every newspaper almost that has liberty to express its opinions, and if we would look in the so-called religious conventions of the present day, that which they approved is contrary to the word of God. I put it to you, sir, and I put it to the country, who believes, even viewing this question in its religious aspect, that your religious synods, conventions, gatherings of ministers, have the same piety, the same reverence for God, and the same respect for man that they had in the early days of this Republic? Sir, I wish to attack no religious denomination, no body of clergymen, but if there are any class of men who since the commencement of our troubles have done injury to the country and disgraced their calling, that class of men are the political preachers who, instead of preaching Jesus Christ and Him crucified, are preaching the equality of negroes with white men. Such men might preach till doomsday, they would never convert a soul or get converted themselves. If infidelity was branded on their foreheads, and they had to go out among the people with such a brand upon them, it would suit them much better than to be agitating in these days of national trouble questions of which they are profoundly ignorant, and to speak in reference to which God never commissioned them. I allude, sir, simply to those gentlemen because much of this sickly sentimentality in the land, much of this disregard of the true teachings of the Bible, which they profess to expound, is owing to their own teachings, and just in proportion as they have forgotten the weightier matters of the law do they deal in such things as abolitionism and negro equality.

Mr. President, while it is not my intention to detain the Senate with anything like a speech on this subject, because the mind of every Senator is made up, because the whole country understands the question, I cannot forbear a further remark. This measure is introduced under circumstances which show that it is done simply for the purpose of keeping up a most unnecessary and most profitless and a most injurious excitement and agitation. There is no one, I presume, that supposes it can have any effect whatever in the States in revolt. It certainly is not intended, at least at present, to operate upon those States, because if it is, we not being in possession of them would be pretty much like Satan was when he took the Saviour up on a high mount and showed him all the kingdoms of the earth and promised them to him if he would fall down and worship him, when the old creature had not a single foot of all the land he promised. It then can only be supposed to operate within the border States. Is there any practical use for its enactment so far as those States are concerned? Is there a single slave in one of those States that cannot escape if he chooses to do so? Have you not, sir, through your military power, held out every inducement that you could promise to them to leave their masters and to come and enjoy the rich blessings of freedom? Have you returned any of them to their masters? Have you not dismissed military officers because you suspected them of a disposition to do it? Is there one slave in all the border States or in the States in revolt who, if he does escape and goes into a free State, can under any circumstances be possibly returned, although these enactments may remain upon your statute-book? No, sir. This intense love for universal freedom which seems to animate a very considerable portion of the northern people, if not the majority, secures perfect immunity from arrest and return of any fugitive who may escape from his master.

Then, sir, why not be still in the troublous times through which we are now passing? Why not wait until tranquillity and peace shall return, and then, with cool heads and calm judgment, apply yourselves to such legislation as the circumstances of the country, as they shall then exist, may demand? Is it wise, I ask, in times like these to be ignoring the fundamental principles upon which your Government was established, to be repealing those early statutes which were enacted by the great and the wise men who preceded you? Is it a time for you by your legislation to teach to the young men of the country who are just entering upon the theater of life that the men who laid the deep foundations of this Government in the principles of constitutional liberty were unfitted for their task, were inadequate to the accomplishment of the purposes which they intended? Is it a time amid the throes of national disruption and revolution for us to sit in judgment upon the work of the fathers? It is presumption, and nothing but presumption.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 9, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Davis, McDougall, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, and Saulsbury—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Dixon, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, and Wilson—29.

ABSENT—Messrs. Collamer, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Nesmith, Sherman, Wilkinson, and Wright—11.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to amend the bill by striking out after the word "that," in the third line, the following words:

Sections three and four of an act entitled "An act respecting fugitives from justice and persons escaping from the service of their masters," passed February 12, 1793, and.

So that the bill will read:

That an act entitled "An act to amend and supplementary to the act entitled 'An act respecting fugitives from justice and persons escaping from the service of their masters,' passed February 12, 1793," passed September 18, 1850, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment, as the Senate will see, makes this bill like the one that we passed after debate.

Mr. WILSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to say that upon this bill, and all peculiar propositions connected with it, I have agreed to pair off with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WILKINSON,] and therefore do not vote, he being in favor of the measure and I against it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I wish to say that I am governed by the Constitution of the United States and the laws passed under the Constitution, and I shall govern myself accordingly in my votes.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Davis, Harris, Hicks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Willey—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Howard, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Sumner, Wade, and Wilson—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Collamer, Doolittle, Foster, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Nesmith, Sherman, Wilkinson, and Wright—10.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 27, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Harris, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Cowan, Davis, Johnson, McDougall, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, and Willey—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Collamer, Doolittle, Foster, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Nesmith, Sherman, Wilkinson, and Wright—10.

So the bill was passed.

RECESS.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, it was Ordered, That at half past four o'clock from to-day the Senate will take a recess until seven o'clock p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate:

A bill (No. 115) to amend an act entitled "An act to define the powers and duties of the levy court of the county of Washington, District of Columbia;"

A bill (No. 162) amendatory of an act to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the progress of the useful arts," approved March 3, 1863; and

A bill (No. 279) to amend the act of Congress making donations to the settlers on the public lands in Oregon, approved September 27, 1850, and the acts amendatory thereto.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following House bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (No. 537) to incorporate the Young Men's Christian Association of the city of Washington;

A bill (No. 551) to incorporate the Colored Catholic Benevolent Society;

A bill (No. 552) to increase the salaries of the judges and arbitrators appointed under the treaty with Great Britain for the suppression of the slave trade; and

A joint resolution (No. 109) correcting a clerical error in the award of the emancipation commissioners.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; which thereupon received the signature of the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 192) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1865, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 453) to increase the pension of Isaac Allen.

COURTS IN WISCONSIN.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 55) in relation to the circuit court in and for the district of Wisconsin, and for other purposes, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment to the bill (S. No. 55) in relation to the circuit court in and for the district of Wisconsin, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Provided, That all executions, processes, or orders issued from the district court of any district in this act mentioned in cases transferred to the circuit court, and in part executed, shall be regarded as having been issued from the circuit court to which each particular case is transferred, and shall be returned thereto. And no writ of execution, or other final process, or power exercised, or proceeding had in accordance with law to enforce any judgment or decree, shall be affected by reason of the transfer directed by this act.

LYMAN TRUMBULL,

J. COLLAMER,

L. W. POWELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES F. WILSON,

JAMES S. BROWN,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

MILITARY INTERFERENCE WITH ELECTIONS.

Mr. HOWARD. I move to take up Senate bill No. 37, to prevent officers of the Army and Navy and other persons engaged in the military and naval service of the United States from interfering in elections in the States. It is the bill which was passed yesterday, on which there was a motion to reconsider.

The motion to take up the bill was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARLAN] to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. HOWARD. I beg the indulgence of the Senate for a moment. This bill was passed yesterday, and a motion was made before the close of the session yesterday by the honorable Senator from Iowa to reconsider the vote on its passage. I hope the Senate will reconsider the vote, for I am not able to see any reason whatever for the passage of such a bill as this. Without spending time upon it, I beg leave to say that by the passage of this bill even in the form in which it now is, the Senate will, seemingly at least, give a cognovit to all the charges of improper and corrupt interference on the part of the military authorities of the United States in the State elections of 1863 and 1862. The Committee on Military Affairs have had this matter under very careful consideration, and, as I remarked yesterday, made a very full and ample report on the whole subject, and they came to the conclusion that there was no necessity whatever for the passage of any such bill as this.

As the bill stands, if it be in order for me to say one word in respect to it, the following results will flow from it. As it is now passed it reads as follows:

That it shall not be lawful for any military or naval officer of the United States, or other person engaged in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, to order, bring, keep, or have under his authority or control, any troops or armed men at the place where any general or special election is held in any State of the United States of America, unless it shall be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States, or to keep the peace at the polls.

Giving permission for the employment of the military forces of the United States at elections only in those two cases, where there shall be armed enemies of the United States at the polls, or where it shall be necessary to employ a military force to keep the peace at the polls; and leaving the implication perfectly irresistible that in all other cases it shall not be lawful for the military authorities commanding in the field, or in the district or department, as the case may be, to employ the military forces, although there might be present at a poll, and there might be thronging around that poll hundreds and thousands of rebels who had just left the field of battle, and whose hands were crimsoned with the blood of loyal men; leaving that description of persons to come to the polls quietly and deposit their votes, although notoriously rebels, and excluding, as I remarked, in such a case as that all interference on the part of the authorities. I do not think it is the purpose of the Senate of the United States to pass any law which shall take away from the military authorities in the field that tutelary authority and protection which they have uniformly thus far extended to the Union voters who went quietly to the polls to vote; that authority by which, in repeated instances, under almost all our commanders, rebels, and persons notorious for their disloyalty, have been kept away from the polls by this same military arm, and kept away from the polls, why? Because they were unfriendly to the United States; in short, because they were actual enemies, or so strongly suspected of being actual enemies that it was unsafe to allow them to exercise this description of political rights.

The report to which I have referred contains a recital of a very great number of these military orders given in Missouri by General Schofield; in Kentucky by General Burnside; in Maryland by General McClellan and by General Dix; and in Delaware by General Dix and by General Schenck, the purpose and object of all of which were to protect the Union voter in the quiet enjoyment of his rights at the polls, and to keep away from the polls persons of known disloyalty, or persons who had been known to have engaged in actual hostilities against the United States. It is said that this is a dangerous power to place in the hands of a military man. I admit that it is dangerous, because it is a power easily abused; nobody denies that all power, however necessary, may be abused, and all power is as easily abused, so to speak, as is this military power; but is the fact that it may be easily abused one which should prohibit us from using the power? Is it a reason why we should take away from the military authorities this protective shield which they have held over the Union people in Kentucky, in Missouri, in Maryland, and in Delaware? Is it a reason for stripping them of all authority to expel from the polls men who perhaps yesterday had arms in their hands, and were actually engaged in waging open war, bloody war against the United States? Still, if this bill is allowed to pass as it is, such will be the exact effect of it; it will forbid our military authorities everywhere from arresting or in any way interfering with a rebel who shall come to the polls without arms, although he may be perfectly well known to have been a rebel, to have been engaged in hostilities against the United States; perfectly well known both to the military authorities and to the judges of the election.

But it is said, Mr. President, that it is the exclusive privilege of the States to protect their polls, to protect their elections, and to prescribe the rules which shall be observed at an election in its conduct as well as to prescribe the qualifications of electors. I am not here to deny the just power of the States in regard to elections and the fixing of the qualifications of voters in a State. I do not deny the power of the State in general terms to prescribe these qualifications and to fix these rules; but I do deny that in a time of war, and this is a time of war, it is competent for any State government to extend to a person who is a public enemy of the United States, and against whom and against whose class or community the United States as a nation is waging war, any political right or privilege whatever, and I do assert that in his capacity of a public enemy he is in all respects and at all times subject to the laws of the United States relating to him as a public enemy, and subject to those laws in exclusion of any conflicting law of the State relating to the same subject. In short, I hold that the laws of the United States on such subjects as upon all other subjects are supreme, and that the State law must yield to them. In a time of peace, I agree, there being no necessity for the exercise of this tutelary authority which I have referred to, it would be incompetent for Congress to pass any law relating to the qualification of electors in a State or in any way regulating their elections. We all know that a state of war and a state of peace are two very different things. The States cannot wage war. A State as a State cannot lawfully be engaged in war; the whole of the war power pertains exclusively to the United States and not to the States. I hope that this bill will be reconsidered.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I do not know whether the debate to the extent to which it has been entered into by the honorable member from Michigan is in order upon a motion to reconsider. The bill is not yet before the Senate, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have but a word or two to say, then, Mr. President. The bill as it has been amended and passed gives to the authorities of the United States the right to use their military power for the purpose of keeping the peace at the polls. It is consequently, if it is not exerted beyond that limit, a power within the competency of the Government provided, and provided only, that assistance shall be asked for by the State. But if the doctrines maintained by my friend from Michigan are to prevail I do not see that it will make much difference whether we put down this rebellion or not.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not quite hear the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not see, if your doctrines prevail, what good, as far as personal or individual liberty will be affected, whether we succeed in putting a stop to the rebellion or not. The honorable member tells us what we all know, that upon all subjects over which the United States have jurisdiction their laws are paramount to the laws of the States, even in cases in which the States have over the same subject concurrent jurisdiction. That we all admit; but I never before heard until these recent times that the Constitution of the United States gives to any branch of the Government which it creates an authority to interfere at all with the exercise of the elective franchise.

Mr. HOWARD. Will my honorable friend from Maryland allow me to ask him one question right here?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. It is this, whether in a time of war it is competent for a State, acting in its sovereignty as a State if you please, to permit a public enemy of the United States to vote at the polls?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly not, but who is to ascertain that? If the member from Michigan should happen to be the incumbent of the presidential chair—and I should not weep at the present time to find him there—would it be for him to decide whether, as a citizen of Maryland, I was entitled to vote at an election in my own State? There is but one subject upon which the United States have any authority to interfere with elections. Over the times, the places, and the manner, the Constitution gives to the several States the exclusive authority with two exceptions, that have nothing in the world to do with the manner in which the franchise is to be exercised or the parties who are to exercise it. Upon all other subjects therefore than of time and manner, the jurisdiction of the States is just as paramount and exclusive as it was before the Constitution was adopted. Now, my friend asks, is it possible that in a state of war the States are to have the privilege of deciding for themselves who shall exert the elective franchise? Why not?

Mr. HOWARD. I beg pardon of the Senator from Maryland; I must correct him. I have not made any such statement as that. What I have said substantially is that it was incompetent for a State in a state of war to allow a public enemy of the United States to vote at the polls, and I understand the honorable Senator as admitting the truth of that proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly, so far as it is itself concerned; but the honorable member claims for the Government of the United States the right to decide it. I was about to put a case to him. With reference to the question in issue between him and myself there is no difference between a civil war and any other war. A war waged with a foreign nation is a war, and there may be traitors to the Government, by giving aid and comfort to the enemy, who ought not to be permitted to vote; but can the Government carry its armies into the States and say to the States, "We claim the right to decide who is to vote, not you?"

Mr. HOWARD. In just such a case as that, if the Senator will allow me, I do claim the right for the United States to say to the public enemy, "You shall not vote at the polls of the State." If that be not the right of the United States, then the United States is without power for the purpose of determining who is a public enemy. Certainly, it is not for a State to determine who is a public enemy of the United States and to make that decision binding upon the Government of the United States, or who is a friend of the United States and make that binding.

Mr. JOHNSON. In determining on the part of the United States who is an enemy of the United States, does the honorable member mean to say that they can go into the State and take up any individuals that they think proper upon the ground that they are public enemies and incarcerate them in prison without previous proceeding or indictment or trial? I am sure he would not go to the extent of so holding; and yet what difference in principle is there between a case of that description and their claiming a right to go into the States and to say to A, B, and C, who happen to be at the polls, "We pronounce you to be public enemies; you shall not put your ballot into the box, although your State by its laws has provided no test which will exclude you?"

I had thought, Mr. President, that we were in a free land, that if there was a Government upon the face of the habitable globe where the principles of freedom were instilled and incorporated into their institutions, it was the Government of the United States; but the doctrine of my friend from Michigan makes it virtually a military despotism; just as absolute, yes, more absolute than that which is now being wielded by the present Napoleon; and I make bold to say, the history of England will bear me out in the assertion, that such conduct as the honorable member maintains may be used toward the States by the Government of the United States through its military, if resorted to in England under the authority either of Parliament or of the queen, it would cause her time-honored institutions to topple into ruin. Who ever heard in England, in times of the greatest political excitement, when they were passing almost every species of law in order to do what they deemed to be necessary to protect their institutions, that any English statesman or English monarch since the days of Henry VIII claimed to regulate elections in any way by force of military power?

Why, Mr. President, there, under a Government called a monarchy, a Government which we have proudly considered until recently as not free in comparison with our own; there the use of the military in putting down a riot is regulated by statute, and the officer who undertakes to deviate from it a hair's breadth is brought to summary and condign punishment. We have a Government nominally republican; really republican as far as our Constitution is concerned; free as ever was vouchsafed to man; as admirable as man ever enjoyed; protective of human liberty, if its provisions are carried out into practical exertion, as any ever furnished to human freedom; and yet here, in the Senate of the United States, my honorable friend, imbued as he is with the lore of his profession, and wedded as I have no doubt he is to the freedom which we should enjoy, advocates principles on this floor which will make us, in the estimation of English statesmen, a scorn and a reproach. In the name of God, by the spirits of the departed great who gave us these institutions, who devoted the years of their lives and poured out their blood in achieving the independence which enabled us to have such institutions, I protest with all the seriousness that I can against such doctrines.

One step further—it would indeed not be a step further, it would be but the same step; practically it amounts to the same thing; you claim the right to say who is to vote: tell us then whom we are to vote for. The one, as far as principle is concerned, is identical with the other. A presidential election is close at hand: whom am I to vote for? I ought to exercise my own judgment in passing upon that question; but the military of the United States, some man with the stars upon his shoulders, dressed up in the little brief authority that that gives, wants a particular man elected; it is dependent on my vote whether he can be elected or not; and although he forbears to force me to vote for his candidate, when he finds that I am about to vote for an opposing candidate says, "You shall not vote at all, because you are disloyal." Can such doctrines bear the test of any examination, even the most superficial? Are they not—my friend will pardon me for saying so—abhorrent to every idea which American citizens have heretofore entertained of American freedom? Orders have, however, in the past been issued by military commanders. I know they have. The order issued by General Dix, a man who is a very good judge of such matters, because a statesman in the enlarged sense of the term, and a patriot, limited what the military were to do under that order to the preservation of the peace, just as this bill provides. But the orders that were subsequently issued, and upon which the honorable member's report comments, had this effect: out of a voting population of thirty thousand in the city of Baltimore there was polled less than ten thousand. Does the honorable member suppose that the other twenty thousand were disloyal? I tell him, if he does, he does our people great injustice. More than half of them were as loyal as he is; but they would not vote because, feeling the independence which belongs to the American citizen, and knowing that they had a right to vote independent of any military satrap, they thought it was the lesser evil not to vote at all; and what was true of Baltimore was true of a great portion of the rest of the State.

I regret, Mr. President, that the subject should have been introduced again by my friend from Michigan. I thought we had disposed of it finally. The amendments made and which now form part of the bill go further, I think, than we have a right to go; but in the name of freedom I implore the Senate of the United States not to go a step further, not to make mine, not to make your constituents the slaves of any military man to whom unfortunately for the country the command of the department in which the State is may be intrusted. We hold our rights under the Constitution, consecrated by the blood of our ancestors. We have proved ourselves worthy to enjoy them by meeting the enemies of our country upon the ocean and the field; and we are doing it now. Oh, save us, save us in the name of freedom, save us in regard to the sacred memory of our ancestors, save us from the rule of military despotism.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, the eloquent Senator from Maryland possesses one of the faculties which pertain to an ingenious orator, and that is the using of the figure known to rhetoricians as hyperbole, with very striking effect, so much so that I fear sometimes it gets the better of his own judgment.

The honorable Senator draws a comparison between our own American Government at this time and the British Government, very much to the advantage of the latter in respect to the preservation of liberty, and he says in the face of the Senate and in the face of the country that if the Government of the United States in the prosecution of this war shall assume to designate for itself who are its enemies and to treat them as its enemies it will or may attract the scorn and contempt of the civilized world, and especially the scorn and contempt of that delightful Government whom it seems to be his pride so much to laud and approve. Has that honorable Senator forgotten the arbitrary laws and edicts of the British Government that prevailed from the commencement of the French Revolution down to its end, and perhaps which are still unrepealed upon the statute-book of England? Has he forgotten the arbitrary conduct of the British ministry in seizing upon scores and scores of innocent, unoffending subjects of the King of Holland, who happened to be residing in England as fugitives from the troubles of the French Revolution, and transporting them by force, without trial, out of the asylum of England and subjecting them to the persecutions and the tyranny of the countries from which they had fled, a proceeding infinitely more arbitrary and tyrannical than anything that has ever been thought of in the course of the Administration of the Government of the United States? And still our own Government at this time, grappling as it is with a gigantic rebellion, with every muscle and every nerve strained to the utmost in carrying on this war, is brought into a disparaging comparison with the conduct of England in reference to the preservation of the liberties of the people. Sir, the honorable Senator from Maryland does not meet the point which I make. I insist that it belongs to the Government of the United States to determine for itself who are the enemies of the Government of the United States, and to deal with them as such; that this power does not pertain to the States, certainly not exclusively, that it is not competent for a State of this Union to pass a law which shall give to a public enemy or to a domestic enemy any right or privilege as a citizen of the United States. This is the very point in which the shoe pinches in this case. He proposes to let every person who may see fit to go to the polls in a loyal State at an election to vote at that poll, if I understand him rightly, and he implores God to protect us against the opposite principle which would exclude rebels, red with the blood of their countrymen, from the enjoyment of those rights.

Mr. JOHNSON. The honorable Senator has misunderstood me. I say that is a matter for the State authorities to decide.

Mr. HOWARD. Suppose the State of Delaware, the State of Maryland, the State of Missouri, or the State of Kentucky should to-day pass a law declaring that any person who may heretofore have been actually engaged in this rebellion, who may have borne arms against the United States and committed treason a thousand times over, might if he saw fit to go to the polls at one of those States and vote, do so. I ask that honorable Senator if such an act as that be within the competency of a State Legislature or of a State acting as a State. Sir, he will not undertake to assert such a doctrine as that. He will not undertake to say that the United States is stripped of all authority to seize upon its enemies wherever it may find them, and to deal with them as public enemies. He will not undertake to say that the State Legislatures may thwart all the legislation and the whole policy of the Government of the United States by suffering traitors to go to the polls and vote, and to keep away if you please Union citizens who are there for the honest purpose of giving loyal votes.

I understand, Mr. President, very well the meaning and intention of this pertinacity for the passage of the bill of the honorable Senator from Kentucky. It is the principal stock in trade of a certain class or party in this country who have acquired a name which it is not necessary and which it might be improper for me here to mention. Their principal political stock in trade is "military interference with elections," "the tyranny of the Black Republican Executive," "the driving of innocent voters from the polls," "the carrying of elections by the bayonet," and the entire list of denunciations such as these. Well, sir, with whom did this commence? The report to which I have alluded shows that the Secretary of War has never issued any order whatever upon this subject. It shows that our military men in the field have, wherever the occasion has presented itself, interposed for the protection of Union voters at State elections, and for the prevention of rebels and rebel sympathizers from interfering with those elections. And the report shows, also, that the first example, if not the first certainly among the earliest of this kind, was set in the State of Maryland by General George B. McClellan, when he was in command of the department. Let me read that order, so that it may be understood. Let us see what the extent of it is. The honorable Senator has given us to understand and given the country to understand that these orders, or some of them at least, merely looked to the preservation of the peace at the polls. Let us see what view General McClellan took of it. He says, in his order of the 29th October, 1861, addressing General Banks:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
WASHINGTON, October 29, 1861.

GENERAL: There is an apprehension among Union citizens in many parts of Maryland of an attempt at interference with their rights of suffrage by disunion citizens on the occasion of the election to take place on the 6th of November next.

In order to prevent this, the major general commanding directs that you send detachments of a sufficient number of men to the different points in your vicinity where the elections are to be held, to protect the Union voters, and to see that no disunionists are allowed to intimidate them, or in any way to interfere with their rights.

He also desires you to arrest and hold in confinement till after the election all disunionists who are known to have returned from Virginia recently and who show themselves at the polls, and to guard effectually against any invasion of the peace and order of the election. For the purpose of carrying out these instructions you are authorized to suspend the habeas corpus. General Stone has received similar instructions to these. You will please confer with him as to the particular points that each shall take the control of.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
R. B. MARCY,
Chief of Staff.

Major General N. P. BANKS,
Commanding Division, Muddy Branch, Maryland.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must interrupt the Senator to announce that the hour fixed for a recess has arrived. The Senate will now take a recess till seven o'clock, p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven o'clock, p. m.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FOOT presented seven petitions of citizens of Vermont, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 276) to secure to persons in the military and naval service of the United States homesteads on confiscated or forfeited estates in insurrectionary districts; which were ordered to lie upon the table.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (No. 552) to increase the salaries of the judges and arbitrators appointed under the treaty with Great Britain for the suppression of the slave trade was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The bill (H. R. No. 527) to incorporate the Young Men's Christian Association of the city of Washington was read twice by its title.

Mr. GRIMES. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to ask for the immediate consideration of that bill; it will only take long enough to read it.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMANCIPATION IN THE DISTRICT.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 109) correcting a clerical error in the award of the emancipation commissioners was read twice by its title.

Mr. GRIMES. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to ask for the present consideration of that joint resolution.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to correct a clerical error in entering the amount of the award of the commissioners under the act of April 16, 1862, "for the release of certain persons held to service or labor in the District of Columbia," in the case of Nicholas Bowie, claimed by Martha Manning.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLORED CATHOLIC BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.

The bill (H. R. No. 551) to incorporate the Colored Catholic Benevolent Society was read twice by its title.

Mr. GRIMES. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to ask for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FREEDMEN'S INQUIRY COMMISSION.

Mr. SUMNER. The select committee on slavery and freedmen, to whom was referred a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 26th of May, a copy of the preliminary report and also of the final report of the American Freedmen's Inquiry Commission, have had the same under consideration. They find the document one of singular interest and ability, and at this moment of great importance. They have directed me to move that it be printed for the use of the Senate, and that three thousand extra copies be printed.

The motion to print was agreed to; and the motion to print extra copies was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PERFORMANCE OF MILITARY DUTY.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to postpone all prior orders and take up the bill (S. No. 286) to prohibit the discharge of persons from liability to military duty by reason of the payment of money.

Mr. POWELL. I hope that bill will not be taken up until we dispose of the bill which was under consideration when the Senate took a recess to-day, and which is therefore now regularly in order.

Mr. SAULSBURY called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Foot, Grimes, Harlan, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Ramsey, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Carlile, Davis, Dixon, Foster, Johnson, Pomeroy, Powell, Riddle, Saulsbury, and Willey—10.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Conness, Cowan, Doolittle, Fessenden, Hale, Harding, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, McSmith, Richardson, Sherman, Sprague, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Wright—23.

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs several amendments had been made which all fell by the recommitment; and the committee having reported back the original bill, the original bill is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to amend the bill by adding as a new section the second section of an amendment submitted by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. COLLAMER:]

And be it further enacted, That in calls for drafts hereafter made under the act "for enrolling and calling out the national forces," and the acts in addition to or amendatory thereof, the same may be made for such term of time as the President shall direct, not exceeding one year.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the amendment so as to make it read, "shall be made for one year."

Mr. HOWARD. I beg to inquire of the Senator from New York whether the amendment offered by him has been recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MORGAN. The amendment that I have offered was considered this morning by the Committee on Military Affairs, and was, I believe, approved by the committee. There was no formal vote; but it was understood that the amendment would be satisfactory to the committee as a new section.

Mr. HOWARD. I was not there, and had no notice of a meeting of the committee.

Mr. WILSON. There was no vote; but it was talked over among the members present.

Mr. MORGAN. The amendment as offered authorizes the President to make a draft for a period not exceeding one year.

Mr. WILSON. My motion is to amend the amendment by striking out the words "may be made for such term of time as the President shall direct, not exceeding one year," and insert "shall be made for one year."

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope that will not prevail, as I desire to offer another amendment, leaving it optional with the President and Secretary of War to make the draft for not less than one year nor more than three years. I believe it is not in order for me to move such an amendment now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope this amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will not prevail, and then I shall offer what I have indicated.

Mr. BROWN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. HOWARD. At the last meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs which I attended this proposition was brought up before them, and according to my recollection there was a majority of the committee opposed to this limitation of time, opposed to the alteration of the law as it now stands from three years to one year. If there was a meeting of the Military Committee this morning at which they authorized the presentation of the amendment of the Senator from New York, I was not acquainted with it; I was not at the meeting, and know nothing about it. I prefer, therefore, to stand by the decision of a majority of the committee on this subject.

Mr. COLLAMER. I see quite too much of a disposition to undertake to state in the Senate what took place in committee. I wish it to be understood that I object to it altogether. Anything that took place in committee, except the report, cannot properly be referred to in debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order if objected to.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say that I desire to have the amendment made plain and simple, so that it may be known precisely what is to be done; and therefore I desire to have it understood that the draft is to be made for one year. I have ever been in favor of the commutation clause of the enrollment act; but I see that there is a strong pressure made to repeal it, and to repeal it unconditionally. A draft for three years, without commutation, I do not think this Congress will authorize. I have not the slightest idea that such a measure can succeed. The votes that have been already taken demonstrate that. Now, sir, I am willing to do anything that furnishes men, and seems to be fair and just, that takes care of the Government, and operates as lightly as possible on the people of the country; and if Senators will agree to fix the time at one year, and then desire to repeal the commutation clause, I shall not resist it. I am ready to take the two propositions together—the repeal on the one hand, and the reduction of the time to one year on the other. Therefore desire to know positively what is to be done, because if we just leave it as it is the Government may call out for three years after the repeal of the commutation clause. If the bill should stand as the Senator from Vermont proposed to amend it, increasing the commutation—

Mr. COLLAMER. I desire to apprise the gentleman that when the committee get the bill as they want it I shall move my amendment as a substitute for the bill.

Mr. WILSON. If it stands in that form it leaves the commutation in the discretion of the Government, and the time at its discretion, and it can adjust them to balance each other—a very fair proposition. But if we are to have the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York adopted, I think we ought to make this other section positive, so that we may know precisely what we are doing.

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 12, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Clark, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Foot, Harris, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Sumner, Willey, and Wilson—12.

YAYS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Howard, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Pomeroy, Powell, Ramsey, Riddle, Salsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Wade—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Carlile, Conness, Cowan, Doolittle, Fessenden, Hale, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Richardson, Van Winkle, Wilkinson, and Wright—19.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move to amend the amendment of the Senator from New York by striking out "not exceeding one year" and inserting "not less than one nor more than three years."

Mr. JOHNSON. Under that amendment if a sudden exigency should arise and the Government find it necessary to call out men for thirty or sixty days or less to defend us here in the capital it could not do it.

Mr. GRIMES. It will hardly be necessary to draft, I take it, for any such a time as that, and you cannot carry out the machinery of a draft for such a case.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is it confined to drafting?

Mr. GRIMES. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Oh, that makes a difference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GRIMES called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to say that I would have no objection to this amendment if it had not already been acted upon by the Senate. The Senate have already substantially voted upon the proposition. The Senate have already voted upon repealing the commutation clause, and the law as understood by the Department authorizes them to draft for any period not exceeding three years. That is what they now understand to be the law. The object of the amendment that I have offered to-night is that they shall draft for not exceeding one year, leaving it optional within the limit of one year. Believing that that will be more generally satisfactory, I have proposed it, and I shall therefore vote against the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SPRAGUE. As I understand this question the proposition is to limit the time to one year.

Mr. COLLAMER. The lowest time.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The shortest time is one year, and the longest time proposed three years. By this the Senate seem to understand that the Government have not the authority now to draft for one year. Is that the understanding of the Senate, is that the understanding of the Senator from New York?

Mr. MORGAN. This is the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The War Department believe that they have the authority to draft for one year under the present law. Notwithstanding the understanding of any Senator, the law as it is at present understood by the War Department is that they can draft to-day for one year. It does not seem to me to be necessary, therefore, for us to make any law on that subject. Whether this amendment interferes with that or not I do not know; but it would seem to me that one year at least would be a sufficiently short time for which to bring men into the field; at any rate the efficiency of the service would not be promoted by any shorter time than that. My own belief is that troops brought into the field for any less time than three years will be of little service to the country; but upon that question of course my opinion is no better than that of any other Senator. I might vote for one year's troops, although I believe that they would be of little service, and I should vote for them on the recommendation of the Department, but there does not seem to be any necessity to give any vote of that kind now.

Mr. COLLAMER. I am somewhat surprised to hear the honorable Senator from Rhode Island urge as an objection to this amendment that it is understood at the War Department that they can draft for below three years now. It would constitute no possible objection to the adoption of this proposition if that were true. As the statute now stands it is very plain. I cannot say what the War Department of this country may think they can do; I know of a great many things they have done which they had to come to us to get ratified, and come of their own accord, too, acknowledging they had no authority to do them. I do not know but that they may think they can do that in this case; but I really think they cannot do it from the law as it now stands. The law is:

"That all persons thus enrolled."
"And to continue in service during the present rebellion, not, however, exceeding the term of three years."

The power to make the draft under the law is for service during this rebellion, not exceeding three years. Now, can a man tell me that that means one year or two years? It is a perfect violation of common sense and the English language. It is obvious and plain; it is not a subject that will admit of any discussion. A man may say that the Department possess the power to do this thing or that thing or the other thing, as they understand it. I do not know what they understand.

But in the next place if they think that is the law now, what objection is that to adopting this amendment? Others think otherwise. There is doubt about the matter. Why leave it in doubt and dispute? Has the opinion of the Department any such power ex cathedra as settles the law? Have they any infallibility about their legal opinion? No more than any other man.

The proposition of the Senator from Michigan is to leave the drafting, as I understand his amendment, to the Executive for three years and for any period less than three years and not less than one year. To say that we shall not adopt it because the Secretary of War or the head of the Provost Marshal General's department thinks so and so constitutes no reason at all. Certain it is they can have no objection to it if that is the law now; and to render it clear and make it certain, why not adopt the amendment? It is important in one respect; that is, it clearly authorizes drafting, and it limits it in its lowest extent. It is hardly worth while to draft for less than one year.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to limit it still further. I desire to limit it to one year.

Mr. COLLAMER. I understand that.

Mr. MORGAN. My amendment has not been acted on.

Mr. COLLAMER. I thought it had been voted upon.

Mr. WADE. I have been of opinion all the time these laws about conscription have been up that when we have attempted to draft we have made the term altogether too long. I do not believe in any country in the world they ever have conscripted for this length of time. It is a very great hardship to take our young men and put them into the military service for this great length of time. I do not deny that the Army is more efficient the longer the time for which the men go, as I suppose soldiers generally grow better while they are in the Army if they meet with no accident; but it is a great hardship, and it is throwing the burden too much on the class that you get for this great length of time. I know it has been argued here day after day by those that contend for a long time that every man in the Republic owes service to the Government, and ought to be willing to take the burden that belongs to him. I agree to that; and it is because I do agree to it that I am unwilling that we should throw the entire burden on a certain class. I know this reason has been urged over and over and repeatedly, and I do not know that it has been answered. It is made use of as a conclusive argument that because every man owes service to his country and ought to do anything, even render his life in its behalf, therefore you may take a certain class of the people and impose the whole burden of the war on them and exempt all the rest, and this is some gentlemen's idea of equity and equality. It is not mine.

I do not know what the executive authorities would do if we give them the whole power over it. I do not know but that it will be their opinion that the Army will be more efficient if they can get soldiers for three years, and that they will attempt to get them in that way; but I do not agree to that. I am not willing to invest them with this discretion, because I think it is wrong. I am, therefore, in favor of the proposition as it was first proposed by the Senator from New York. I believe it is better than any of the emendations that have been attempted since. We want soldiers; we want them as rapidly as they can be had. I believe if you will fix the time at one year, and limit the Executive to drafting for one year, and then give such bounties as will render it more equal upon those whom you do draft, you will get soldiers easy, the country will not complain, and it will be more efficient to draft oftener and for shorter terms; and, if it was not for taking time, I would give my reasons for this opinion.

I am opposed to putting men in the Army for such a great length of time. I do not want our citizens, if we can avoid it, to become soldiers merely. If you put a man into the Army and keep him there for three long years he becomes a military man; he loses in a great measure those habits of peaceable times that actuated him before, and he becomes a soldier by profession. I do not believe it is the policy of this republican Government to habituate our citizens to this military rule if we can avoid it.

Again, I think it is not necessary to draft for these long periods, for the reason that a great many of our men now have been in the military service until they have learned all the duties pertaining to a soldier; and in your short drafts hereafter you never will have any green or unpracticed men; you will have officers enough who understand military affairs very well; you will have old soldiers mixed up with them who will set an example and teach them the business of a soldier much easier than we did at first.

All these reasons induce me to believe that we ought to limit the draft to a shorter period, and that we can get the soldiers more rapidly than we can if we draft for the long period, and men will go with less reluctance, less hardship, and more cheerfully. Therefore I go for the original proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I think there are two amendments pending before the Senate now. One is to authorize the Secretary of War to call for a period less than three years, and the other is to restrain him from calling for a period longer than one year. The suggestion made in opposition to the first of these amendments, that the power exists now under previous legislation, involves the construction of the act to which reference is made, and I concur in opinion with the honorable member from Vermont and the chairman of the Military Committee, since I have read the law, that there is no authority now to call for a period short of three years unless the rebellion shall terminate before the expiration of that time. When the subject was before the Senate on a former occasion I was under the impression, from recollection, that the terms of the act were such that as the greater includes the less as a general rule, it was in the power of the Executive to call them out for a lesser period than the longer period he was authorized to call them out for; but upon looking at the act which gives rise to the doubt and to which the honorable member—

Mr. DAVIS. I will ask the honorable Senator a single question. Does or does not the President of the United States assume that he has the power to do any act that promises to bring the rebellion to a close?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not think that is involved in this discussion. The discussion now is what power he has under this act, not what power he has independent of legislation.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not understand that the power is claimed under the act.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, it is; and only claimed under the act. The Senator will recollect that under the original act—

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator allow me a word? I know it ought to be claimed under the act, and that there is no other legitimate source of power; but I understand that the President claims a general, indefinite power, resulting from military necessity, to do any act which in his judgment may promise to bring the rebellion to a close.

Mr. JOHNSON. My friend will permit me to discuss the question which is before the Senate now, and that is, what is the construction of this act? I assume, for the sake at least of this discussion, that the President claims no authority on the subject other than that which the act gives, and the inquiry is, what is the authority given by the act? The language of the law is, after providing for the enrollment, that "for two years after the 1st day of July succeeding the enrollment," the persons enrolled may be called into the military service of the United States "to continue in service during the present rebellion."

If the statute stopped there, the only limitation of time to which the authority of the President could be subject would be the continuance of the rebellion. The other words are put in to guard against the contingency that the rebellion will last rather longer than it is advisable to force the same set of men into the field, and it goes on to provide that they are to continue in service "during the present rebellion, not, however, exceeding the term of three years." But they must be called, if the rebellion lasts so long, for three years, and although they are out under the call for three years, their service terminates at the termination of the rebellion.

Now, I agree with my friend from Ohio, who has just spoken—and I was very glad to hear the doctrine, but not surprised to hear it coming from him—that upon considerations of general policy, which are peculiarly applicable and controlling, as I think, in a discussion of this kind, under our institutions it is very perilous to have put into the field as soldiers thousands and hundreds of thousands of men for a period so long as three years. There is nobody who is at all conversant with the soldier's life, either by information obtained by reading or by experience, who does not know that they form an attachment for it in the first place, and, in the second place, that as a general rule it unfits them for other employment.

I understood the honorable member from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, in his recollection of the number of men that have been called out already, as telling us that there have been called out under the existing laws since the 17th of October, 1863, 600,000 men; that in addition to these 600,000 men there had been obtained in some other way, I do not know how, by reenlistments, I suppose, principally, 48,000 men, who have been sent to the army of the Potomac since the commencement of the present campaign; and that there have been put into the field, if I understand him, in addition to these two numbers, 700,000, making a total of 1,348,000, besides the number of black soldiers and men enlisted for different service from that class of our people, 150,000, making a grand aggregate of 1,498,000. How long these men have been enlisted for or drafted for, except such portion as may consist of a part of the one hundred days' men, I do not know; but assuming that they are all now out under the authority which the existing law gives, we have more than 1,500,000 men who are now in the service for three years, or such portion of the three years as may be unexpired.

Mr. COLLAMER. A large part of them were nine months' militia men.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am not speaking of nine months' men; there have not been any of them since 1863.

Mr. COLLAMER. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. There were no nine months' men in 1863.

Mr. HARRIS. Some.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very few, at any rate.

Mr. COLLAMER. They had two brigades of them from Vermont at the battle of Gettysburg.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is quite enough for the purpose of illustration; I do not care whether it is one million and a half or half a million, it is quite enough. Suppose we have half a million of men enlisted in that way, is that not enough? The honorable member from Ohio is right—I have heard it from officers who have been present in some of the leading battles—he is right when he says that those men who are almost fresh from the plow or from the shop, when they are put in association with veteran soldiers and under competent officers, fight nearly as well, if not quite as well, as those who are called veterans.

Mr. SPRAGUE. By the courtesy of the Senator from Maryland, I would ask him why it is that in the returns of the killed and wounded, the new regiments, the regiments that have never been under fire before, show a loss of two, three, and sometimes four times as many as those who have had experience in receiving fire? That is a fact.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not think it exactly shows that they are not very gallant men, and do not fight very hard.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Undoubtedly they are gallant.

Mr. JOHNSON. I can only conjecture it as one of the reasons; I suppose it is because being new men they are put in advance, and have not learned to run away.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Because they cannot take care of themselves when they get there.

Mr. JOHNSON. What, in the fight?

Mr. SPRAGUE. It is because they go where they have no right to go. It is because they go where they are not ordered to go. It is because they are not under proper restraint and restriction that they go. It is certainly because they are not disciplined that they do go.

Mr. JOHNSON. One battle would correct that.

Mr. SPRAGUE. No, it does not.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should think it would. With that natural instinct to which we have had reference here on other occasions, I think one considerable battle would put an end to that; but that is immaterial for my purpose. How long is this rebellion to last? With the power and means we have had, I think it ought to have terminated certainly a year since; and now it would seem if the power in the hands of the Executive is properly wielded—and I have no reason to doubt but that it will be under the present military commander—if the rebellion is terminated at all, it will be terminated in one or two years. Why, then, attempt to go into the country and seek to draft men for three years, and especially to do it after repealing the commutation clause? I say what I believe, I do not think you will be able to execute such a law—not that there is any want of patriotism, not that the ardor of the nation has subsided, but it will be looked upon as unjust that after three years or nearly three years when you have given to those that have been drafted before the privilege of commuting, you take it away now from those whom you are about to draft. If I was a politician in the party sense of the term, and looked to a change of the Administration either in its men or its measures, and I was capable of advocating a policy which I believed would be injurious to the country, I would say, "Repeal the commutation clause, repeal the permission to furnish substitutes, draft for three years;" and then I should be very much surprised if you did not find the public voice of the country spoken in terms which neither the Administration nor the party that supports the Administration would be able to resist.

I hope that the amendment suggested by the honorable member from New York will be adopted as preferable to the one offered by the honorable member from Michigan, and above all, whether it be adopted or not, that the commutation clause be retained.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 16, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Conness, Grimes, Harlan, Howard, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Wilkinson—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Clark, Collamer, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Hale, Harris, Hendricks, Johnson, Morgan, Morrill, Powell, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, and Wilson—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cowan, Fessenden, Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Nesmith, Richardson, and Wright—10.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. COLLAMER. I ask that the amendment be reported before we pass upon it.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That in calls for drafts hereafter made under the act "for enrolling and calling out the national forces," and the acts in addition to or amendatory thereof, the same may be made for such term of time as the President shall direct, not exceeding one year.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. In my judgment the effect of this movement is to destroy your armies. The Senator from Ohio says that he does not wish to throw all the burden upon a few. Now, as we have been informed to-night, more than one million men have already voluntarily assumed that burden, have gone into the war for three years, and fought gallantly; and now you come in at this late day and say the rest who would not go voluntarily shall be drafted for but one year, and shall bear but one third of the burdens of those who willingly entered early and bore the burden for three years.

The Senator from Ohio says he does not wish to make soldiers of the men in our Army, or words to that effect. Does not the Senator know that there is not a man capable of bearing arms in all the southern confederacy that is not a soldier? Does he not know that every able-bodied man in all the southern confederacy has been conscripted for the war, and cannot go home until the war is ended, and is shot if he attempts to go home until the war is ended? What do you propose to meet these war-worn veterans with? They are soldiers. How do you propose to meet them? You must meet soldiers with soldiers, or you must be prepared to be conquered by soldiers. You cannot meet veterans with raw militia. You cannot change your troops once in twelve months and hope for success in the open field. All the history of war has taught us that lesson. Shall we not avail ourselves of the experience of ages? Shall we come in here now at this late day after three years of hard fighting and say we will meet war-worn veterans of three and four and five years with one-year militia?

Mr. President, I hope this amendment will not prevail. I hope the good sense of the Senate will satisfy them that if you hope to conquer this rebellion you must conquer it with soldiers, for you never will put it down with anything but soldiers.

Mr. WADE. The Senator from Michigan seems to have a hankering after the manners, customs, and habits of the southern confederacy. I do not propose to follow their example very closely. They hunt up conscripts with bloodhounds and put them into the ranks, I understand. I do not know but that the Senator thinks we ought to follow their example close enough for that, and put men in for an indefinite time. But I can tell the Senator that freemen do not like this idea of being conscripted for such a length of time.

It says a great number of men have volunteered for three years. I know it, sir. It shows the patriotism of our people. I wish we could raise all the troops we want in that way, but experience has shown us that we cannot do that, and it was well in the early part of this war to have soldiers as many as we could get, and for the longest term, and now if you will get them by volunteering as the Senator says we have done, and intimates very clearly that we can in the future—

Mr. CHANDLER. Oh, no, sir.

Mr. WADE. If we can do that, let them volunteer, and for the longer time the better. I am agreed with him upon that. But I repeat that when you take a man from his farm or from his workshop and put him into the field for three long years, you cause him to lose his character of a citizen for that of a soldier. I do not know that he is any better soldier for being there three years or for life, than he would if he were there long enough to be accustomed to the habits of military life. I do not believe that our experience has shown us that the longer the soldiers are in the field the better they are. The Senator talks of the war veterans of the South. Well, sir, the war-worn veterans of the South, in my judgment, are very nearly worn out. They are "war-worn," sir, worn clear up, and they never have been able to meet us with any odds in the field. I utterly deny the insinuation the Senator makes that our soldiers are not equal to the veterans of the South that he speaks of.

Mr. CHANDLER. Ours are veterans.

Mr. WADE. Some of ours are veterans and some are not very veteran, and the greenest troops we have had have shown themselves as efficient in battle as those who have been in the ranks. Look at Fort Donelson. Your raw regiments there, just arriving, fought like veterans, and were as efficient as any soldiers we had. Look at Gettysburg. There new recruits coming right in, and one regiment from Vermont, I was told by an eminent man, fought bravely and well, and was in the hardest part of the fight, and never shrank from it. They distinguished themselves among veterans. They had only just got there.

Mr. COLLAMER. They were militia, too.

Mr. WADE. Yes, they were militia. You need not tell me that it adds courage to a man to go about drilling him till he is worn out or a war-worn soldier. Give me the man with all the spirit and dash that a young man has about him when he goes first from home in all the vigor of life. He will never fight better than he does then, and the old idea that a soldier must be in training for several years before he is fit for the field is not at all applicable to our soldiery. A French officer, who had observed our discipline, told me not long since that our raw regiments would learn as much in one month as the European soldier would in one year. They are better educated; they have more elasticity of mind, more adaptation to anything that you will put them to, more self-reliance. There never were on the face of God's earth such soldiers as we have. There is more intelligence in our ranks than there ever before was in the ranks of any army in any country in the world. It does not take long for such men to learn the forms of discipline to make them soldiers. I have no doubt a short period of draft, mixing the recruits with veterans that are trained, will result in your always having an army sufficiently efficient, and you will have in numbers three times as many at any given period as you possibly can get when you go to the repulsive business of calling a man into the military service for three long years. It goes very hard to get soldiers in that way for that term. A young man before he will submit to that and spend the best of his life in the Army often resorts to every means on God's earth to escape it. If you require him to serve for the period of only one year he will go cheerfully forth to his duty; he will perform it well; he will be mixed up with veterans, and you will have a more numerous army, and just as efficient a one in my judgment. Therefore I am for having them for the shortest period. In my judgment it would be of great service if we could call immediately into the field even for a less period than one year one hundred thousand men. Concentrated as the rebellion now is in two centers, and assailed as it is in those two positions by our armies, and the whole rebellion resting on those two armies which are almost surrounded by our own, I believe that if the Administration could call rapidly into the service one hundred thousand men for six months it would end the rebellion. I have no doubt of it. It is not as it was in the beginning, when the force of the enemy as well as our own was scattered over a continent as it were. Then the war was not mapped out. Now it has proceeded, and both sides have been concentrating until they are struggling hand to hand in two places where success on our side would end the war. So fix it then that the Administration may, if they will, call out for a short period a great force to assist the veterans you have got in the field, put them at the decisive points where the struggle is now going on, and turn the scale in our favor at once.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Ohio in his argument has asserted what I do not deny, that our raw troops are excellent at a charge. Nobody denies that they fight as well as any raw troops on the face of the earth ever did fight. But the Senator says that by mixing them up with our veterans we may get an efficient army. That statement admits the whole question. The object of my amendment was that we should never be without veteran troops. The Senator remembers very well that a distinguished general, perhaps one of the most distinguished in the whole army, said to him in my presence, "Senator WADE, both of these armies have fought so long and are such thorough soldiers that you may repulse either army and give them one hour to reorganize and they will give you a stiff fight at the end of that hour." The Senator will remember that General Hancock said that to him in my presence. There is the difference between veterans and raw troops. Let raw troops be repulsed and you cannot reorganize them; they do not understand reorganizing and recovering from a repulse, whereas if you give veterans one hour you will find them in line of battle and ready to give you as stiff a fight as ever.

Mr. WILSON. Do you call the army of the Potomac a veteran army?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is substantially a veteran army. It is so mixed up with veterans that it is substantially an army of veterans, and I desire always to have enough veterans to make the whole force a veteran force.

Mr. WADE. The army of the Potomac—and a braver and better army never moved in the field—is to-day composed of more than one half green soldiers who have not been in the service six months.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I confess that I do not profess to know much about military affairs. Indeed, I am as ignorant of them as though I bore a commission as major general in the Army of the United States. [Laughter.] But, sir, I think if we can believe the reports from officers in the field, it does not make much difference for what time a man is put into the service; it will not take him a long time to become a soldier. I recollect hearing read at the desk a few days ago a dispatch from General Butler, in which he spoke of the very gallant manner in which the negro soldiers fought before Petersburg, so much so that they were flanked on the field. Certainly they were not veterans, and it did not take a great while for them to show their bravery.

Mr. HOWARD. I wish the Senator would speak louder. We cannot hear him on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am very sorry for that, and I think my friend has lost a great deal. [Laughter.] I see, too, that these negroes have another very admirable characteristic for soldiers, much better than those which veterans have. I read in the New York Tribune of yesterday that they not only fight equally as well as veterans, but they have another admirable quality which veterans have not got; they take no prisoners alive.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I wish to state what I know to be the desire of this Government, and that is that the time shall not be restricted to one year for which soldiers shall be enlisted or drafted, for the plain reason that the Government believe they have authority now to draft men for three years or any lesser period, as they may determine. What the Administration desire, what they petition for, what they beg for from Congress, is not that the time shall be limited to one year, but that you will give them men in this emergency. The Government believe to-day that the only way they can replenish their exhausted armies is by striking from the statute-book the commutation feature of the law; and why? It must be plain to every Senator, as it is to every man experienced in enlisting troops, that if you abolish the commutation before the draft, the result will be that while the draft is going on and after men are drafted every citizen in the country will be interested in seeing that your armies are filled, and the efforts of every man and every woman will be to encourage recruiting, to inspire the people wherever they can influence them to go forward and support the languishing and tired men who are thrusting the bayonets and sustaining the cause which the whole country has at heart. But in the other case, who is interested in filling the armies? The mere pittance of $300 buys a man from the service of his country, redeems him as it were from any service whatever, or from any interest in this Government. Three hundred dollars redeems from the service of his country or from any interest whatever in the efforts which are being made to-day and which we have been making for three years past to maintain and preserve the Government.

Sir, all that the Administration to-day asks of you is to strike the commutation clause from your statute-book and to impose no limitation as to the time men shall serve, for the very reason that there is power now to fix that matter; and why so? Perhaps the Senator from Vermont has read in the statute-book the clause which limits the service of men to three years, but it is within my experience that while that clause has been in existence the Government has called for three months' troops.

Mr. COLLAMER. I read from the law about the draft.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Three months' men have been called for and obtained for emergencies.

Mr. COLLAMER. Volunteers.

Mr. SPRAGUE. This amendment, as I understand it, restricts the Government from obtaining troops for more than one year. It is that men shall not be received for more than one year.

Mr. COLLAMER. They cannot be drafted for more than one year.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The Government have the power now to receive them for a year if it thinks that the best policy for the interest of the service. They have the right which this amendment of the Senator from New York gives them; but they do not believe it necessary to put such a restriction in the law. All they ask of Congress is authority to obtain troops; and they believe the only way in which they can be obtained is by abolishing the commutation.

Mr. WILSON. I do not think, Mr. President, that Congress is here simply to register the will of the Administration. I am not here for any such purpose; and I want the Senator from Rhode Island distinctly to understand that I am not here to register the will of man; I am here to give the Administration a liberal, generous, and hearty support. But, sir, we frame the laws, and we are to judge what is proper legislation. It belongs to us to say how we will raise armies and support armies.

We are told that the Administration says it has the power to draft men for less than three years under the enrollment act. I desire to say that when we framed the bill for enrolling and calling out the national forces, we intended to put it on the same footing as raising soldiers by volunteering for three years. That was the intention of the committee. Sir, I reported that bill, and I happened to know what the committee intended. I did not suppose there was a man in America who had any other view of it. The idea is as clearly and distinctly expressed as the English language can be made to express a thought. But suppose they have the power, what objection can they have to our putting the provision in this act? We are asked to repeal the commutation clause of the enrollment act. I will not vote to repeal that clause and draft men for three years, and force them into the service for that period. My position is clearly taken on that subject.

Sir, we are told to-night that every man in the rebel States is a soldier forced into service, and what is the result? They have desolated the rebel States, destroyed everything except enough for a bare subsistence; they have no commerce, no mechanic arts, no agriculture, nothing but a bankrupt treasury, a ruined people, and an absolute military despotism. I do not wish to follow that example. I want to fill our armies with true and brave men, men who will fight our battles and win our victories, and I want at the same time to save agriculture, to save commerce, to save the mechanic arts, to save manufactures, to save all the institutions of a prosperous and free people. When we come out of this rebellion I want the loyal States to stand stronger than when we went into it in all the elements of prosperity and power. In filling your armies as in filling your Treasury you must exercise your reason; you must so legislate that while you sustain the Government you foster and protect the interests of the country, and make the war bear as lightly as possible upon the people.

Acting upon that idea, I say the original enrollment act was framed in the spirit of humanity. The $300 clause was put into the act to make it bear as lightly as possible upon the toiling masses of our countrymen. The other exemptions were put in for the same object. The exigencies of the country have forced us this session to abandon many of the humane provisions of the original act; and if it be necessary, in order to get men into the service, to abandon the other provisions for a reasonable time, I am willing to do it. But, sir, our information, our experience, everything teaches me that in filling our armies we owe it to our neighbors, our friends, our countrymen, to the permanent and enduring interests of our country, to make our laws bear as humanely and as lightly as possible upon our people. Last winter when we were framing the amendatory enrollment law, I proposed to draft men for eighteen months, and I thought then that I believed we could draft and put into service for a year five men easier than we could one man for three years. If we now limit the draft to one year, and the Government will call for vast masses of men and act with vigor, I believe that before the opening of next year the rebel armies will be broken, and the cause of the country assured; and so believing, I contend for a reduction of the time. It is because I believe it will strengthen our cause that I have advocated it, and not, as has been intimated, for the purpose of relieving my State or my section of the country. I know we are willing to bear our burdens, and we have borne them uncomplainingly. A committee from Boston is in Washington now bearing a roll certified and indorsed of six thousand five hundred and twenty-nine men furnished to the Navy, not one of whom are credited to that city. When you count the men in your Army and Navy according to the number of men fitted for service, there are few States ahead of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Sir, I hope that after the vote which has been taken in the Senate, and after the manifestations in the other end of the Capitol of the sentiment there, we shall consent so to adjust and frame this bill as to strengthen the Government and make the act as acceptable as possible to the people of the country who must bear its burdens. Sir, if you tell the people that they cannot pay a commutation, that they must go for three years by draft into the service because other men enlisted voluntarily for three years, it is a hard thing for this Government to say and a hard thing for the toiling masses of our countrymen to bear.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The Senator from Massachusetts does very well perhaps to disclaim any following of the Administration in the propositions which they make relative to carrying on the war, although heretofore I think he has not been behind any man in the Senate or in the country in sustaining the measures and policy of the Administration. The policy of the Government to-day, as indicated by its war officer, the Secretary of War, with the sanction, of course, of the President of the United States, and, as the country understands, of the combined wisdom of the Cabinet, is that the commutation clause shall be abolished from the statutes of the United States, in the further procurement of men for the prosecution of this war. I wish the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Vermont to understand that this is to-day the policy of the Administration, and when they vote contrary to it they vote contrary to what is believed by those whom they sustain in carrying on this war to be the better policy, and until they can get or supply a better head for the government of the War Department of this country, it seems to me that as patriotic Senators they should support this policy. Until the Senate of the United States can resolve themselves into a Council of Ten, and be themselves the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the President of the United States, they must delegate the execution of their decrees and of their laws to somebody, and that somebody must have their confidence, and if that officer has not their confidence it certainly is due from them to the people of this country that they should indicate that idea. But while that officer sustains to them the position that the Secretary of War does, it certainly seems to me, and I believe it will seem to the people of this country, that they should be governed somewhat by the policy that he indicates. When he says that he believes he has authority to draft men for one year, that that is not the difficulty in this emergency, but that the real difficulty is that he cannot obtain men on account of this drawback, by which men can purchase their service from the country by the payment of $300, it does really seem to me that in this important exigency, the country being to a certain extent in the hands of the Secretary of War, his views and the views of the President should be in some way regarded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 25, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Foot, Hale, Harris, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Powell, Richardson, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, and Wilson—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Conness, Foster, Grimes, Howard, McDougall, Ranney, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Tumbull, and Wilkinson—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Fessenden, Harding, Harlan, Henderson, Hicks, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Saulsbury, and Wright—10.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COLLAMER. I offer the following amendment as a substitute for the first section of the bill:

That the thirteenth section of the act entitled "An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, is hereby so amended that the sum to be paid by a drafted man to the Government for the procurement of a substitute shall not exceed $500, instead of $300.

Perhaps the amendment is sufficiently clear without any explanation of it; but still I will say a few words. At present the law stands that a drafted man may pay such sum as the Secretary of War shall fix for the procurement of a substitute, not exceeding $300. My amendment follows the form of the present law, except in providing that the limitation shall be $500 instead of $300. The amendment which I have offered presents the alternative of repealing the commutation clause altogether or amending it. In my opinion, with the amendment which has been adopted limiting the service of the drafted man to one year, the commutation of $300 will be amply sufficient to procure the men. What is it? Three hundred dollars for one year's service, which a man may offer to a substitute, or the Government may offer if anybody pays commutation. That is equal to paying $900 bounty for three years. There never has been any such bounty as that paid to any of the men we have procured the past year. The Government has paid the commutation money, $300, and the local corporations have contributed $100 or $200 or $300, in some cases, but the bounties have not gone beyond $400 or $500 or $600, in any case for three years' service. Now, if you draft for one year and fix $300 as the price of commutation, it is equal to a bounty of $900 for three years' service. It is not necessary to repeal the commutation clause for the purpose of securing men for the service under a draft for one year. There is no necessity of resorting to so severe a measure. There is no need of going to the people and saying to them, "We will draft you for one year, and you must go; you shall have no opportunity of commutation." There is no occasion for saying it, because the men will be secured without it; but that there may be no doubt about it, that it may be perfectly safe without repealing the commutation, my proposition is that the Executive may make the commutation $500 if he pleases in order to secure the men with more perfect and absolute certainty. That is my amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Since the Senate have by a decided vote determined that they will not draft men for more than one year, I shall vote against any commutation for military service. It is not a very severe detriment to any man to be called into the service of the country for one year. The country now needs the service, and I would not put the Government to the delay and expense of adopting the plan of hiring substitutes. If a man is drafted for one year, a term which rapidly rolls around, he has the privilege under the existing law of hiring a substitute. If the sum stipulated by the Senator from Vermont is sufficient for that purpose, he can procure a substitute, he can get some one else to assume his place in the Army of the United States, and he is at perfect liberty to do so. If it is not sufficient, the additional expense and the delay caused by looking around for substitutes ought not to be thrown on the Government at this time. It is not a very severe law to say that a man now shall take his chances for a draft, and if drafted shall actually go into the service of the country or hire a substitute. I would not throw on the Government the necessity of employing the substitute.

There is another argument which operates on me to some extent. Owing to fraudulent and inefficient systems practiced throughout the country, perhaps by our own officers themselves, the commutation money has been grossly wasted. In many cases it has been paid out to improper substitutes. I supposed myself originally that the agents of the Government could better be trusted in the employing or hiring of substitutes than the drafted men; but experience has shown that the officers of the Government have been more cheated and defrauded in hiring substitutes than even the drafted man; and the cases are numerous where officers of the Government have employed substitutes for the commutation money and within twenty-four hours afterwards the substitute has deserted: the Government has not only lost the services of the drafted man but of the substitute, and lost the money besides.

Since, now, we have said that men shall be drafted for one year, and no more, I think it is not a severe act of legislation to say that they shall serve the country during that year, or get for the country an acceptable substitute. If you look at this matter philosophically, there is no obligation on the part of the Government to hire a substitute. There is no reason why, when a person has been designated according to law to serve his country for a year, the Government should be put to the expense and delay and trouble and annoyance and danger of loss of hiring substitutes, by employing its provost marshals and agents for that purpose. On the other hand, the person who avails himself of this privilege ought to be subject to whatever expense and delay are necessary for the purpose.

There is another argument. The value of money in different portions of the country is very different. Five hundred dollars in Massachusetts may be totally insufficient to hire a substitute, while in Iowa $300 may be sufficient. The value of money in the different States depends upon the richness or poverty of their people. The same sum of money will go much further in some of the older States than in some of the new. A fixed sum of money everywhere is not an equal commutation. The price of labor varies very much. A day's labor in Wisconsin is worth much less than in Massachusetts. I say therefore, then, no sum which you can fix is the proper standard of compensation; and what the Government wants is physical service during one year, and when you establish any standard, however high, you make an unequal standard, because the value of money and the value of personal service are not the same in different portions of the country.

If the question was now as to seizing upon property or the like, the same difference would exist; but now the Government desires one year's service from the citizen. If the citizen of Massachusetts is drafted, he should not avail himself of the benefit of a provision that is more favorable to him than it is to some other citizen in the State of Iowa. The only equal and just mode, in my judgment, now in our necessity, is to enforce the draft strictly and fairly in every portion of the country, without delays or equivocations, without any excuses, without being deterred by mobs or riots or threats, to require the citizen to serve his country for one year, or in case he cannot do it or does not choose to do it, let him do the next best thing, hire an acceptable substitute. That is the only position.

I trust Congress will not adjourn without placing it in the power of the Administration to call into the service of the country every man that is necessary to finish and close up this rebellion. We cannot tell what may be the fluctuations and variations of money in the progress of a great civil war like this, and therefore we ought not to make money the standard of physical service. Physical service is what we want, and we must avail ourselves of this physical service by draft laws. It has been done in all wars, and we cannot afford at this time to substitute money for physical service.

This bill has now been carefully matured by the Military Committee. It has been considered by them for nearly six months, and as now reported it seems to me as just a solution of this whole difficulty as we can arrive at. It repeals the commutation clause, and reduces the term of service to one year, making the draft compulsory, and allowing no evasion and nothing but personal service or the furnishing of a substitute. I wish we could go a little further and compel the authorities at the other end of the avenue to enforce the draft—a thing they have never yet done, under any of our draft laws, and which I fear they will not do. I wish we could compel them to enforce the draft fairly and equally in all sections of the country, so that there could be no complaint about inequality; and then we should have accomplished a great result. We know that this Governor will beg off and that Governor will beg off, and one State will want to take money and go to some other State to hire substitutes. Every section will have its particular plan and mode of doing business. Some will be for doing it through the State authorities, and so on. It seems to me, now, that it is important for us to induce the executive authorities to enforce the draft fairly, so that no section can complain, so that each State will contribute its proportion of one-year men according to its population; and in addition to that, in my judgment, in hiring substitutes they ought to be confined to the State in which the men are drafted, so that each State will furnish the same amount of physical service in proportion to its population. Then let the draft be enforced fairly, and I think there will be no complaint.

Although my own State especially has been drained of its labor, although forty thousand of the best men of the State have recently gone into the service for one hundred days in addition to furnishing our full share in all the other branches, I believe that in the critical condition of our country, with our armies in the presence of the enemy, having corralled them, if you may so say, around Richmond and Atlanta, the people of Ohio will cheerfully submit to a draft if they are thoroughly satisfied that it will be fairly enforced in all States and sections of the Union. The only complaint about the draft is that it is not enforced. Take my own State for instance. A strong proclamation is issued by the President of the United States calling upon the people to volunteer and avoid another draft. In certain communities they go to work, and with money and the aid of all the people heartily engaged, they furnish their share of men, while an adjoining county has made no effort to procure men, has raised no money, and after a little while the matter drops and the draft does not take place. The consequence is that the loyal portion of the community who are willing to do everything they can do to answer the wants of the Government, who respond in men and money and make up their quota, are drained, impoverished of their labor and of their finest young men, while an adjoining county, composed probably of men hostile to the Government, men who do not do their share either in money or men, contributes nothing. The consequence is that complaints are made, complaints of injustice and unfairness. Sometimes it is carried to States. In one State the draft is enforced, in another State it is not. It leads to a feeling of jealousy, of rivalry, of hostility. In the West it is a common complaint among certain partisans that Massachusetts has not made up her share. The Senator from Massachusetts says she has; but that is the ordinary way in which excitement is got up against the draft, by saying that certain States have not done their share.

I believe that all the people of the United States want a fair draft, equally and honestly enforced. As we need physical service for a short period of time now in the armies of the United States, we should provide by our law for that physical service, and for nothing else. We have provided for money by loan laws and by tax laws. This is no provision for the raising of money. Whether you fix it at $500 or $300, it is not what you want, and therefore it is not what you ought to provide for by legislation. I am willing to support the bill as it now stands. It has been carefully and maturely considered, I believe, by the Military Committee. It has now assumed a form that I believe will be satisfactory to the people. It can be easily enforced. The term is short. The service is not so arduous as three years' service under the former draft. Every man will feel that he is justly dealt by. No man can pay his money and relieve himself from the draft. Every man drafted must either go or hire a substitute. Such a law, in my judgment, if fairly enforced, will yield the additional number of men necessary to carry on the war to a successful and triumphant conclusion.

Mr. HOWE. So far as I am concerned I am not carrying on this war for fun. I accepted it as one of the sternest duties ever imposed upon a people, and if one of the sternest, one of the highest, the first one to be met, the first one to be discharged; and if it be a duty at all, I know it is a duty resting as firmly upon one citizen as another. Money will not answer for one man unless it will answer for every man; and we know that with money alone this war cannot be carried on. I voted just now for a proposition to reduce the term for which this draft is to be made to a period not exceeding one year. I voted for that reluctantly, because I do not myself like to vote for a measure which looks toward limiting a time for the duration of this war beyond which we will not go; but I am anxious to get rid of this commutation clause which, I think, has stood in the way of our success from the beginning of this war down to this time; and if we are going to repeal the commutation clause I want to repeal it during the existence of this war, for after the war closes I am willing it shall stand; and I understood, and it was upon that consideration that I voted for the amendment, that if the Senate would consent to reduce the term for which the draft was to be made, the Senate would also accept the proposition to repeal and not to amend the commutation clause. If I had not so understood I would never have voted for that proposition; and I give notice now that if the commutation clause is not repealed I shall move to reconsider that proposition, for when the last act amending the enrollment law was before the Senate I voted against it; and I gave distinct notice, which I repeat to-night, that I never will, while reason and volition are left me, authorize this Government to draft another man for the military service of the Government while it accepts any sum that can be counted in dollars as an offset for that service. Sir, I beg leave to say just this once that out of all the thousands of men who have perished during this terrible struggle I cannot imagine the sum that I would put against the life of the lowest or the humblest of them.

The Senator from Vermont who has moved this modification of the commutation clause defends it upon just one argument; which if it be true shows conclusively to my mind that there is no occasion whatever for the amendment. He assumes that with $500 substitutes can always be had. If with $500 every drafted man can procure a substitute there is no occasion for a commutation clause. I can hire a substitute as cheaply as the Government can; I do not want to employ the Secretary of War to act as my broker; if I am drafted and $500 will get a man to serve in my place, I can as well do it as the Secretary of War; and your commutation clause never comes into effect except when the time comes that it is not equal to the price of a substitute, and then the drafted man if he can raise the money hands it over to the Government and steps aside from the service. But if $500 were fixed as the sum at which commutation could be made, and if it were positively known that with that sum substitutes could be had, then there would be an insuperable objection, in my mind, to the adoption of this amendment; because why? Your draft would be made, the whole machinery of the draft would be run out first to get the money into the Treasury, and when you had got the money into the Treasury you would just have authorized the Government to go into the market and pick up the men. That is a work of time, and time is of the very essence of this struggle in which we are now engaged, and it has been for years of the essence of this struggle.

Mr. President, we are in the beginning of the fourth year of this struggle, and we have been here for weeks contending day after day as to whether we would or would not, still, with all our sad experience before us, allow men, with more money than courage, to commute for military service. It has seemed to me that we ought by this time to have already clothed our Government with authority by which they could meet the exigencies of the Army at the instant. The Government ought already to be possessed of all the machinery by which every able-bodied man, if necessary to the achievement of victory final and complete, might be called at the tap of the drum from the field to the camp, the machinery by the operation of which your laborers at home might be brought from their daily labors into line as quick as men can be turned from their camps at the beat of the long roll. That ought to be done, and I shall see no certain signs of victory until that is done.

The first step toward that, I think, is for the Government to say that money is not a substitute for military service and cannot be treated as such; that when the Government of the United States drafts a man it is because it wants a soldier, and wanting a soldier will have a soldier, and it will not take up with anything less than that. If a man who is drafted can get a soldier for a year or for six months, or whatever the term is, for $500, fork over; if you can get him for $300, it is your good luck. Unless you can get him, do not palm off this stuff on the Government and claim to stand aside. I would just, as lief a draft should be made at this time for six months as a year. Six months will close the campaign; and if you are going to make a draft for a period less than a year I would just as lief it should be for six months as for twelve. I would be glad to see every man when he does embark for this service embark for the war; but if it be the deliberate judgment of the Senate, as it seems to be, that that point had better be given up for the present, then I say I would just as lief you would draft for a campaign as draft for a year. Make your draft, but when the lot has fallen upon a man see that that man meets the duty to which he is assigned.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President I am one that learned in early life, and I still adhere to the principle, that all legitimate government is based on the will of the people. I believe that government in all its operations in peace and war must be conducted upon that grand fundamental principle. I believe that a war cannot be long continued against the feelings and judgment and will of the mass of the people. That is the result of all my reading in relation to war and the manner in which war has been conducted by other Governments of the world. Whenever the hearty will of the people is earnestly in favor of a war there is no difficulty in waging it and keeping it up; but when the people flag in the prosecution of a war and become weary and despondent with the enormous expenditure of treasure and blood that has attended the war and that is promised in its further prosecution, the people shrink back appalled from the contemplation of a continuous prosecution of such a war as that.

Mr. President, I believe that such a change as that has come over the spirit of a majority of the people of the United States and of the loyal people of the United States. It is my observation, it is my conclusion, it is my deliberate judgment that a large majority of the people of the United States at this time are strongly and irreversibly opposed to the further prosecution of this war, and desire to bring it to a close. Sir, that is my own conviction and my own feeling in relation to the war. At the onset I was a coercionist with the mass of the people, and I was so upon the great principle announced by the party in power, and by this Administration, that the war was to be prosecuted simply for the vindication of the Constitution of the United States and the assertion of the laws, and for a reconstruction of the Union, with all the rights and liberties and privileges of the people of the United States intact and inviolate under the Constitution. When that was the lofty and proud and legitimate basis upon which this war was prosecuted, and on which the free sons of America were summoned to the standard of the stars and the stripes, it was only necessary for those in authority to give out their call to their countrymen for that call to be responded to in ranks more serried and numerous than were desired by those who were prosecuting the war.

Mr. HOWARD. Let me ask the Senator from Kentucky one simple question.

Mr. DAVIS. No, sir. Will the honorable Senator excuse me?

Mr. HOWARD. Of course.

Mr. DAVIS. I did not get up to make a protracted speech. When I get through the honorable Senator can respond.

Three years ago and upwards I traveled through a large extent of the loyal States. I found but one sentiment, one principle, one line of conduct in relation to the war, and that was perfectly responsive to the Crittenden resolution, as it was termed, which was proposed in this body by Senator Johnson, from the State of Tennessee, and almost unanimously adopted by this body. When this body spoke, responsive to that sentiment there was but one impulse, there was but one purpose throughout this land in relation to the war, and that was to reduce the insurgents to obedience to the law and to the Constitution. But, sir, a change has come over the dream of this people. They have seen the objects and purposes of the war grossly perverted; they have seen powers usurped by those in authority, not delegated to them by the Constitution, and threatening to subvert their liberties. Many of them now believe, and I am one of the number, that the Constitution and liberties of this country are in more imminent danger now from their own Government than from the rebellion. I know that that is extensively the conviction and the deep conviction of the people of the United States. Sir, that being their conviction, a change has come over their souls and their purposes in relation to this war, and it is not strange that it should be so.

If the present measures and policy of the Administration, if the powers that it claims, if the subversion of the writ of habeas corpus, the establishment of a general military despotism, arbitrary arrests, the detraction of civil courts and of civil law, and the substitution of military courts and martial law in their stead; if the substitution of the tyrannic will of military men for Constitution and law and civil courts had been announced at the start, there would have been no war, the people would have refused peremptorily to go into it. But, sir, that is the present condition of the country; that is the present policy of the Administration; that is the present purpose and exercise of power by the party that now holds possession of the Government; and under that state of case it is not at all strange, with that conviction extensively and deeply and irreversibly imbedded in the public mind, that a change should have come over their dream.

Mr. President, there are two thermometers in relation to this war in the United States; the one is in the Houses of Congress and in the Executive Chamber, and the offices of the heads of Departments; the other is in the country among the people who have to bear the burden of this war, who have already sent millions to its battlefields, and of whom a million have either perished by the sword, or by disease, or been permanently disabled. This day the public debt, acknowledged, recognized in its items, or which would be if they could be produced to the Senate of the United States and the country, must amount to $2,500,000,000, and this war cannot be conducted another twelve months without adding upwards of $500,000,000 to that debt. It is now greater than the public debt of England. Independent of this debt recognized, ascertained, claims that cannot be controverted, there is a vast amount of debt and of demands unliquidated, unsettled, unadjusted, held by the people of the United States, by the States themselves, by foreign Governments, and by the subjects of foreign countries, amounting, I have no doubt, to more than $2,000,000,000. The claims for the use and appropriation of private property, the destruction and the deterioration of the value of property by the armies of the United States, and the claims that the citizens have against the Government growing out of such origination of claims, I have no doubt will amount this day to $2,000,000,000. I have no doubt that the just claims of my own State in that respect amount to $300,000,000; and when you come to Missouri and Tennessee and Maryland and Virginia, and to all the rebel States where there was a loyal population possessed of large property, all of which has been swept from the owners and for which they have a just claim against their own Government for its fair and reasonable value, the aggregate will amount to more than $2,000,000,000. Add that to the $2,500,000,000 that are now due and it amounts to $4,500,000,000.

Sir, in the computation of the public debt the Secretary of the Treasury omits one important item. He is in the habit, at the beginning of every session, of making an estimate of the uncalled-for appropriations at the end of the fiscal year. These uncalled-for appropriations on the 1st of July next will amount he estimates to $350,000,000. On the 1st of July, 1865, at the end of that fiscal year, he estimates them at $400,000,000. By his own statement these aggregates not only exist as demands against the public Treasury, but have been actually voted to be paid by laws of Congress, and yet he deducts them from the public liabilities because of his reasonable supposition that those amounts will not be called for at the end of the year. Still they are due, and not only that, but they have been actually voted. There is a single item of $350,000,000 to swell the Secretary's present estimate of the public debt, and there are other very large and important items.

But, sir, I said, and I maintain and believe, that in relation to this war there are two thermometers, the one among men in public office, the other among the people in the country; and I will test that position now by a supposition. Suppose that every member of Congress was called upon to-morrow inflexibly to consent to peace or to go himself to the front ranks of the battle, to that horrible carnage amid which so many of our gallant and true men who had no hand in bringing on this war have fallen, what would be done? Since the beginning of the present campaign to this moment of time I have no doubt that more than one hundred and fifty thousand of United States soldiers have fallen, killed or wounded, in the various bloody battles that we have had. When that is the storm of death, of iron and leaden hail that a man is to encounter when he goes to the front, is it strange that the people of the United States should shrink from running such a terrible gauntlet? Sir, for one, with all the perversions of the objects of the war, with all the abuses and usurpations of power by the Government, with all the peril to which it has brought the Constitution and the popular rights and liberties of the country, I would prefer peace a thousand fold to the continuance of this war, although I was once as strong a coercionist as any man ought to be.

I maintain that this war and all the operations of the Government are intended for the people, to be subordinate to their rights, their liberties, and their will. The vast number of American freemen still in reserve, who have never yet felt the shock of battle or been in its presence, were created for something else besides. They are entitled to a more glorious destiny; they have a higher mission than to pay taxes in perpetuity, to go to battle to be shot down, and those who survive to vote for the reelection of Abraham Lincoln. I, sir, protest myself, humble as I am, against being made the subject of such an ignoble fate and destiny as that. No man breathes the breath of life who is more devoted to the institutions of his country, to his Government, to his Constitution, to the preservation of the Union according to the bond of that Union, the Constitution, than I am. But when the question is presented to me, "Do you prefer the Union without liberty or liberty without the Constitution," I say, in the language of Patrick Henry in the revolutionary war: "Give me liberty or give me death." Give me liberty with the Union shivered into a thousand fragments before you give me a Union with a consolidated military despotism, the Constitution struck to the dust, and the liberties of the people utterly overthrown. I believe that the latter fate awaits them. I believe that if the present incumbent is reelected that fate will be irreversibly sealed upon them, or that it can only be removed by civil convulsion, civil war, a frantic precipitation of the sections and of the men of the United States against each other, more horrible, more direful in its bloody and desolating consequences than the world has ever yet seen.

Sir, it is for this reason that I am for subordinating this war to the will of the people. I am for consulting their will in its management. The President has no power to conduct this war except as Commander-in-Chief of the Army. The duty to suppress the insurrection is devolved upon Congress by an express provision of the Constitution. Congress represents the States and the people, and Congress is the only legitimate power to take under its control this vast concern of continuing this war or bringing it to a close. I believe time has demonstrated that civil war is not the proper remedy to restore the Union, and, above all, to preserve constitutional liberty; and therefore I, for one, am for saying to my constituency, to my State, to my countrymen, that the time has come, in view of the bloody and destructive and revolutionary policy which has been inaugurated to carry on this war, for the people, the masters of the Government and of all men who wield authority under it, to rise in their majesty and strength, and to take this affair into their own hands and manage it in their own way.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senate voted against the proposition to repeal the law that allowed the commutation, and we may as well at once decide whether the Senate is of that opinion still; and to arrive at a vote I propose to amend the bill by striking out all of the first section after the enacting clause, which motion, I suppose, will take precedence of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont. I am not myself in favor of increasing the commutation allowed by existing laws. I think $300 for one year is heavy enough. It is three hundred per cent. above that which is in the existing law, because it is equivalent to $900 for three years. I believe if a proper policy is adopted by the Government it can by the use of $300 secure a volunteer for a year more readily, with less trouble in the country, with less hostility excited against the Government, than by any draft that can be adopted.

But, sir, I did not rise with the view of making any speech, but hoping to come to some result upon this question, which I presume every Senator thinks has been sufficiently discussed, that we may understand the different propositions. My motion is to strike out all of the first section after the enacting clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont takes precedence to perfect the bill before striking it out.

Mr. HENDRICKS. My motion is to strike out more than he proposes to strike out by one word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is aware of that.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, so far as the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Vermont is concerned, I can only say that I shall be compelled to vote against it. If there be any idea more distinct than any other lying at the bottom of the policy of conscription, in other words, drafting, it is this: to procure the personal services of men fit for military duty in this war, to rely upon their personal services rather than upon their money.

One object of the amendment which has been offered by the honorable Senator from Vermont is to enable any person to purchase his liberation, so to speak, from the draft by paying $500. I am opposed to that. I think that from the beginning Congress made a mistake in allowing any person to purchase an exemption from the draft by the mere payment of money, and sure I am that the fact that Congress incorporated this idea into the act of 1863 made that bill obnoxious. The party opposed to the prosecution of the war at heart, the men who hate the prosecution of the war, who hate the origin of the war, have opposed the raising of troops by draft under the pretense that Congress had required the poor man to render his military service, to take his musket and go into the ranks and risk his health, his fortune, and his life in defense of the country, while at the same time they had said to the person able to pay $300, "We exempt you on such payment from undergoing the same perils;" and there was no feature of the statute upon which demagogues exerted themselves more ingeniously or more effectually than upon this particular clause. They made the bill in some localities so odious, so hateful to the people by their misrepresentations of it, and I may say by their stumpequence, that it almost resulted in civil war and local insurrection. I believe there were cases in the State of Illinois in which there were actual outbreaks of the people in resistance of the draft, growing out of this same argument, if it be worthy of the name of an argument, that the rich man was exempted while the poor man was drafted.

Now, sir, I am for trying the opposite policy. It is very true that I voted for the original bill. I did it with reluctance. Let us try the opposite policy. Let us disable every man capable of doing military duty from procuring his liberation from that duty by the mere payment of money, while at the same time we allow any man who is able to do so to purchase a substitute to take his place in the rendition of the personal service required by the bill.

Sir, I am willing to meet this exigency; I am willing to meet the necessities of this war, let them present themselves in any posture and in any feature they may. I have gone into the support of this war with earnestness, for the purpose of making it successful, for the purpose of subduing and subjecting to the authority of the United States the rebellious districts of the country. I have sons, and so have other honorable Senators sons, engaged in the prosecution of this war, whose lives may be the forfeit of their taking up arms. Sir, I say to them when they go to this war as the Roman mother said to her son, when she passed

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

FRIDAY, JUNE 24, 1864.

NEW SERIES....No. 201.

to him his shield, "Return either with it or upon it," come back victorious or come back a corpse. And, sir, if I understand the nature of the case, unless we who are true to the old Government act with this spirit, act with a determination to conquer or die in this cause, we shall not conquer whether we die or whether we survive.

I am for calling out every able-bodied man whom this draft can reach, whether he be in the social scale high or low. I would say to him, "Render your personal service or put a man in your stead who is able to render the same service to the country in this great exigency," and let us go on shoulder to shoulder, hand in hand, fearlessly, without faltering, without discouragement, willing to accept occasionally a reverse, a rebuff, or a repulse, not expecting that the course of our cause will forever run smooth, for we know it will not, but bearing up under all reverses with a manly, patriotic, and I may say heroic spirit, never forgetting the immense value of the cause which we have in hand, never faltering, never ceasing to act up to the greatness and the magnitude of the occasion which calls upon us for the exhibition of manly, patriotic, and heroic qualities.

Sir, I have been pained to listen to the speech of the honorable Senator from Kentucky. It grieves me to the heart to witness such an exhibition as he has made of his patriotism here on this occasion. I had the pleasure twenty odd years ago of being quite well acquainted with that honorable gentleman in the other House of Congress, and to admire the steadfastness of his patriotism and the correctness of his political principles, and I regret at this great crisis of the fate of this nation, when we require the exhibition of steadfast and manly qualities on the part of every member of Congress, when especially we require the exhibition of these qualities on the part of Kentuckians, to see him faltering, breaking down, giving up the contest, giving up the hope of the contest, and expressing his willingness to do what, sir? To make terms with the rebels, to come to terms with them, and accept such conditions as they shall see fit to prescribe to us in order to bring this contest to a close!

Sir, is the honorable Senator from Kentucky willing to get down upon his knees before Jeff. Davis and his Congress and say to them: "I am willing to accept any terms which you shall propose for the settlement of this great controversy, in order to prevent the further shedding of blood?" He will say, "No; I will get down on my knees to no man, to no Government." Then I ask that gentleman upon what terms does he expect to settle a peace with the rebel government? Will they listen to any terms from him? Will they agree to come back again into the Union and perform their functions as States of this Union on any known terms or even on any imaginable terms? No, sir. They have not from the beginning shown the slightest disposition to return to their allegiance upon any terms whatever. They insist upon absolute independence, and upon our acknowledgment of their absolute independence as a nation. I ask that Senator, as a loyal man, as a Kentuckian, as a once friend of the immortal Clay, whom he and I alike admired, is he or is any patriotic man, is any sane man at this time willing to accept of any such terms? Would you dismember the United States? Would you surrender up the mouth of the Mississippi or any part of the Mississippi to the rebel confederacy? You would be compelled to do so, if you agree upon any terms that should give them their independence. Will you agree for all time to come to have an independent government on the southern border of the United States, a military government, a turbulent, aristocratic, and in all probability within a short time a monarchical government? Will you agree to have that government as your neighbor; a government full of adventure, full of ambition, necessarily military in its character, because the largest portion of the white population will have no industrial employments, and the Army and Navy will be their regular home so far as vocation is concerned? Are you willing to run the risk of keeping up a perpetual quarrel and being in a perpetual quarrel or an intermittent quarrel with this nation on the south for the next hundred or the next two hundred years, incurring month after month and year after year the danger of armed collision, and being engaged in armed collisions from time to time, thus spinning out a war which ought to be settled now if it costs any amount of blood and treasure, spinning it out to a century of length, or perhaps two centuries, until finally the one or the other of these nations will exhaust and extinguish its adversary by mere main strength?

Sir, has all national pride forsaken the heart of the honorable Senator from Kentucky? Does he no longer take pride in the fact that the stars and stripes, the emblem of his country's greatness and power both here and abroad, have once been great, and by the blessing of God and by proper assistance on his part and on mine will still continue to be great and grow greater and greater for the next thousand years? Does he desire, is he willing that his posterity and mine shall inherit as their political inheritance a divided empire, a divided power? Sir, is he willing to run the further and more enormous risk of a final division of the northern free States? Is he willing to say to the Pacific States, "Depart in peace, provide for your own security, form a republic upon the Pacific slope, and take care of yourselves; we will discharge you from all liability in the national debt?" Is he willing to say the same thing to the States on this side of the Rocky mountains? What is he willing to say to the old northwest States and the States on the west side of the Mississippi? Is he willing to run the enormous risk of breaking up the whole system of States into half a dozen or a dozen small petty confederacies, and thus disgracing the once proud American name, and humbling the once proud American nation at the foot of the trading throne of British aristocracy and the British manufacturing interest? Is he, is anybody here, in the name of God can there be an American anywhere worthy of the name, with the heart of an American beating in his bosom, who is willing to incur all these risks for the sake of a temporary and delusive peace with these accursed rebels whom we are now meeting face to face, hand to hand, and throat to throat, and whom, with a little patience, with a little forbearance, with a little courage, with a little endurance, we shall certainly subdue, and subdue forever? I will rather believe that my old and honored friend from Kentucky is laboring under a self-delusion, and that he does not really entertain the sentiments which he urges upon the consideration of the Senate. I think that that is by far the more charitable view to take of the position he occupies before the Senate.

But while I say these things of my honorable and ancient friend, I must at the same time in justice to many other gentlemen on this floor say that I do not, because truth will not permit me to do so, ascribe the same sentiments to them. I know something about the value and the potency of the old Democratic name; I know something of the power and prestige of the ancient Democratic party; and I know that up to the commencement of this war and during the war, even up to this moment, the heart and soul of the old Democratic party and the heart and soul of many, very many of its revered and respected leaders, some of whom I am proud to say are members of this body, are true to the Union, true and abiding in the faith of the fathers—hearts which will never faint, but which will in their aspirations for success and national glory pulsate with our own until the last struggle shall finally end in the complete overthrow and suppression of this rebellion.

Mr. President, I have said much more than I expected to say, and I beg pardon of the Senate for occupying so much of their time. I am willing to try the experiment which is presented to us in the bill now before us, and shall vote for it. The only doubt I have had at all upon the propriety of it has arisen from this circumstance: that, possibly, by restricting the term of the conscription from three years to one year we should furnish to the rebels an appearance of being discouraged and beginning greatly to be inclined to give up the contest. I wish to put in my caveat against any such conclusion from the language of this bill. So far as I am concerned, so far as mine are concerned, so far as my constituents are interested, I say it, and say it with confidence and pride, we are in for this war to the bitter end, cost what it may, and when it may.

Mr. RICHARDSON obtained the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I am bound to the Senator from Michigan by the ties of ancient friendship and of the deepest personal respect, and I never want the golden cords that connect him and myself together to be severed. If separation should ensue, and if this galaxy of States should be resolved into its original elements, and each State should be thrown back upon its original sovereignty, which seems to me to be the destiny that is to come upon the country, one of the poignant sources of my regret would be that the honorable Senator from Michigan and myself were no longer members of the great confederated Republic of free and United States.

But, Mr. President, although I have worshiped the Union, although it has been the sacred fane in which I have kneeled and to which I have poured forth all the aspirations of my heart, and to which I have given all the feeble services that I was capable of rendering to any interest, still there is a matter to which I am infinitely more bound, and which is incomparably dearer to the deep irrepressible emotions and affections of my soul than this Union; and that is, devotion to liberty. I care not who may assault constitutional liberty as it was won by the sword and secured or attempted to be secured by the wisdom and patriotism of Washington and his co-peers, whether it be Jefferson Davis at the head of a wicked and most atrocious rebellion, which, in my judgment, constitutes one of the greatest crimes that has been recorded in the history of man, or whether it results in the wickedness or selfishness or wickedness or charlatanism of Abraham Lincoln, I am equally and uncompromisingly the foe of both assailants of this constitutional liberty. I prefer the perpetuation of liberty to the perpetuation of the effigy of a Union with the Constitution and all the rights and privileges and liberties of the people struck down by a military despotism.

I announced the principle of action at the commencement of my remarks upon which I have based my political opinions and my principles of statesmanship; and it is, that the only legitimate government is founded upon the will of the governed. I will read a sentence or two upon this point, and I will challenge any gentleman present here to dissent from them:

"Any people anywhere, being inclined and having the power, have the right to rise up and shake off the existing government, and form a new one that suits them better. This is a most valuable, a most sacred right; a right which we hope and believe is to liberate the world. Nor is this right confined to cases in which the whole people of an existing government may choose to exercise it. Any portion of such people that can may revolutionize and make their own of so much of the territory as they inhabit. More than this, a majority of any portion of such people may revolutionize, putting down a minority, intermingled with or near about them, who may oppose their movements."

I do not go to that extent, but I challenge any Republican Senator here present to dissent from the sentiments and principles there announced. I pause for a reply. I take it for granted, then, that the principles here announced receive the sanction and the approval of every Republican member of this body. Who uttered those sentiments? The present President of the United States when he was a member of the other House of Congress in the year 1846, and any gentleman who chooses to read them will find them in the Appendix to the Congressional Globe, first session Thirtieth Congress, page 94. Has not the present Executive of the United States then given his deliberate and well-considered sanction to this revolutionary movement of the South? I dissent from his doctrine. It is more radical and revolutionary and destructive to government and order and law than any doctrine to which I can give my assent.

But, sir, I will read the sentiments of another distinguished gentleman, a member of the present Senate, a man of strong and vigorous and powerful intellect, as he has proved himself in debate to-night; an upright and a downright man, who thinks strongly and correctly, and for whom I cherish the profoundest personal respect and friendship. I will read from his speech that he made in this body a few years ago. I allude to the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE,] who, in my judgment, is a man of about as strong a head, as pure a heart, and as upright intentions as belongs to this or any other body of men; and when I can have the benefit of the illumination of his mind and principles to guide me in the devious political path, I will rush to that bright and burning path that I may tread safely. What does that honorable Senator say?

"But southern gentlemen stand here, and, in almost all their speeches, speak of the dissolution of the Union as an element of every argument, as though it were a peculiar concession on their part that they permitted the Union to stand at all."

I have no doubt such was the spirit of their pride and arrogance, and if I had been present I would have felt a spirit to rebuke it as stern and implacable as that of the Senator from Ohio.

"If they do not feel interested in upholding this Union, if it really trenches on their rights, if it endangers their institutions to such an extent that they cannot feel secure under it, if their interests are violently assailed by means of this Union, I am not one of those who expect that they will long continue under it. I am not one of those who would ask them to continue in such a Union. It would be doing violence to the platform of the party to which I belong. We have adopted the old Declaration of Independence as the basis of our political movement, which declares that any people, when their Government ceases to protect their rights, when it is so subverted from the true purposes of government as to oppress them, have the right to recur to fundamental principles, and, if need be, to destroy the Government under which they live, and to erect on its ruins another more conducive to their welfare. I hold that they have this right. I will not blame any people for exercising it whenever they think the contingency has come." "I say again that they have the same interest in maintaining this Union, in my judgment, that we of the North have. If they think they have not, be it so. You cannot forcibly hold men in this Union; for the attempt to do so, it seems to me, would subvert the first principles of the Government under which we live."

Sir, there is the great corner principle of all popular and legitimate government. It is enunciated in the Declaration of Independence, an extract from which I have before me. That lays it down as one of the fundamental principles of human right that every people who choose have the inherent right to subvert their existing form of government, and to erect upon its ruins one that suits them better. I do not go to the extent of the right of revolution which the present Chief Magistrate of the United States has laid down. I say that no people have a right to revolutionize their Government unless they labor under great and serious oppressions that cannot be peacefully redressed and corrected.

Now, sir, I say it is because the purposes of our Government, the great objects of the Constitution, its great restrictions of power, the rights and liberties and privileges which it gives to the citizen—it is because all these great ends of government for which our Government was formed, and without which it never would have been formed, are being struck down by the party in power and by the present head of the Executive Government that I am determined to give every thought, every energy, every effort of a feeble mind and a feeble body for their ejection from office. In this work I shall engage with as much heartiness and zeal as I would engage against the aggressions of Jefferson Davis upon my State. I never will bow to the rebel chieftain and to the usurpation of power by him or by the southern confederacy; nor will I ever bow to that more dangerous and objectionable and hateful tyranny by which this Administration and the ignoble head of this Administration are attempting to fetter the people in perpetual chains. I never will yield to either of these despotisms. The last pulsation of my life, the last effort of my mind, the last wish of my heart would be to overthrow both, and to that which seemed most threatening, most particularly dangerous to my country, to its Constitution and to the liberties of the people, I would give my first and my chief attention.

Sir, if it was the last word that I could utter in life and I was to be called the next moment to the bar of eternal retribution I would aver this conviction, that the danger of our Constitution, of our liberties, of human liberty and popular government generally is greatly more in danger at this time by the Administration of our own Government than it is by the southern rebellion. Therefore I feel a greater desire to eject this Administration than I do even to put down the rebellion. The way to put down the rebellion, to bring it to utter and complete discomfiture, is to eject the present President of the United States, who is a candidate for reelection from a position the powers of which he is as grossly inadequate to grasp and properly to wield as any man who ever filled an office and wielded great and formidable power.

I beg pardon of the Senate for trespassing on their time.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no; let us vote on this bill now.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not think we can get a vote to-night. Several Senators desire to speak upon it.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have a great many measures before us, and as Senators are very anxious to get away, I think we had better dispose of this bill to-night.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There were some suggestions made by the Senator from Michigan that we of course expect should be answered. I desire myself to come to a vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McDUGALL. I desire simply to say that I shall vote "yea" for the reason that the Senator from Indiana desires to discuss this question and wants until to-morrow.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator is mistaken. I do not wish the Senate to understand that I want to discuss it. It is the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON.]

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 20, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Canale, Clark, Colman, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Grimes, Hale, Harris, Hendricks, McDougall, Pomeroy, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Trumbull, and Willey—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Conness, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Harlan, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Wade, and Wilson—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Harding, Henderson, Hicks, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Wilkinson, and Wright—7.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. President, there were some remarks that fell from the Senator from Michigan that merit a reply.

If a person, a stranger to the history of those who passed the conscription bill and placed in it the very clause of which the Senator complains, had heard him to-night he would have supposed that the only Senators who originally voted the commutation clause in the bill were those who belong to the Democratic party. Sir, that is not the fact. The Senator from Michigan himself, if I mistake not, in connection with the party to which he belongs, the Lincoln party, are responsible for the $300 commutation clause in that bill over all the votes of the gentlemen who cooperate with me in this body. He says that it is a measure calculated to make the poor fight the battles of the country, while the rich can pay and be exempted from that onerous duty. If it is of that character the Senator and those who are associated with him are responsible for placing it in the bill, and they are responsible to that class of people. They placed that clause and every other objectionable one in the bill, and then passed the bill against the votes and protestations of every Democrat and conservative Senator then here.

But, sir, it is true that although the clause was placed in the bill against my vote and against the votes of those who cooperate with me here, yet when a part of the country has been exempted from the operation of the conscription bill by the payment of the money commutation, I am unwilling now at the command of the Senator or the command of the Secretary of War and the President, or all combined, to change the policy of the country, and let them draw upon the section from which I come with no means to escape from the service. Immediately after the passage of that bill with that clause in it, in whatever of public speeches I made before the people I condemned the bill and the clause now sought to be stricken out. I am now satisfied that it is better to have that provision than to have the conscription with no means of escape, that the peace of the country would be best preserved by it; and hence it is that I have changed positions with the Senator. He has kept it in operation as long as it suited his purpose. Even-handed justice requires that it shall be kept in longer. To this eternal change I am opposed.

Mr. President, this question involves very grave considerations, and we should approach its discussion after mature deliberation, and determine upon our course. The Senator from Michigan says that he is in favor of fighting this war out to the bitter end. Other Senators have said that they mean to fight it as long as they live, and when they come to die they mean to bequeath it to those who come after them. Sir, I am for ending this strife as soon as we can properly. I want to make a manly effort to enforce the laws throughout the extent of this country; and I am for enforcing the laws upon Presidents and Government officers too. They are as amenable and as responsible to the laws as any other class of people. When the President disregards the laws and violates the Constitution and asks me to say nothing about it, to remain silent, not to discuss it, I tell him that that is not the position of either a patriot or a freeman. Mr. Lincoln is a candidate for reelection, and his acts and usurpations of powers not conferred by the Constitution or warranted by law must be discussed fully and freely here and before the people.

This is our right and duty; a right never questioned in this country till his election; a duty imposed by the highest considerations that can influence the action of man.

During the war with Mexico Mr. Lincoln was a member of Congress, and he there exercised the privilege of fault-finding against the President, without ever assailing or condemning our enemies. On the 12th of January, 1848, Mr. Lincoln, then a member of the House of Representatives, said:

"Some of the gentlemen on the other side of the House, if not all of them, who had addressed the committee within the last few days, had, if he had understood them correctly, spoken somewhat complainingly of the vote which was given some week or ten days since in this House, by which it was declared that the present war with Mexico was 'unnecessarily and unconstitutionally commenced by the President of the United States.' He agreed with them, if he understood them properly, so far as to say that such a vote ought not to have been given wantonly; that it was wrong if so given; that no member ought to have given such a vote unless he thought he was voting in accordance with the truth. He was one of those who had voted thus, and he proposed to present some of the reasons which actuated him in so doing.

"When this war first commenced he did not expect it would last so long as it has already done."

I have been during the present contest in the same fix that Mr. Lincoln was then. I did not expect this war would continue near as long as it has done. I do not think it ought to have continued thus long. I think if our counsels had been directed by wisdom, if the Army had been aided by wisdom here, when you had the basis of union in the southern States, you could have put down the rebellion long ago; but we had not that. However, to continue with this speech:

"It was then his opinion that all those who, for the reason of not knowing enough, or of knowing too much on the subject as they understood it, could not conscientiously approve the course of the President of the United States in relation to the commencement of the war, should nevertheless, as good and patriotic citizens, remain silent upon that question until the war should have terminated. And in accordance with that view, he had up to the time he arrived in this city at the commencement of this session never expressed his opinion in relation to whether or not the war was justly commenced on the part of the President of the United States. He had tried to act upon that principle, believing he was doing right in so doing. He found that view had been taken by some with whom he agreed in political sentiment, and especially by Mr. ex-President Van Buren."

He then proceeds to assign the reasons why he did not remain silent. He and myself were both members of the House of Representatives together at that time. He says:

"But, in addition to this, one of his colleagues [Mr. RICHARDSON] came into this House with a resolution [Mr.

its terms expressly indorsing the justice of the President's conduct in the beginning of the war?"

About that, he was very much mistaken—

"so that he found himself here, if he was inclined to give the President his supplies, and say nothing about the original justice of the war—if he was inclined to go with him, to look ahead and not back—in a position that he could not do so. He should feel compelled to vote on this resolution in the negative. And as the President and his friends would not allow them to do as he wanted to do, and as Mr. Van Buren approved, he had set himself about examining what position was the right one on the justice of the war."

The Senator from Michigan thinks that in time of war no voice should be raised in opposition either to the wisdom of the President of the United States or of his policy. Sir, Mr. Lincoln and he differ upon this point.

Mr. HOWARD. I really hope my honorable friend from Illinois will not impute to me so strange a proposition as that nothing should be said in opposition to the Administration during a war. I certainly never said any such thing, and I am sure I never intended any such thing, whatever mistaken language I may possibly have used. I believe in the utmost freedom of discussion upon every administrative question; but I confess at the same time that I have very little charity for those who are the enemies of my country, whether foreign or domestic. Of course, however, I do not include my honorable friend from Illinois in the latter category at all. I know him too well.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am bound to accept the Senator's disclaimer. Possibly I misunderstood his argument. But, sir, I know I am not mistaken in supposing that he attributed to some persons somewhere in the country an improper motive for their conduct. I supposed it had application to somebody. I am glad to know it had none.

Now, Mr. President, in my judgment, the discussion involves this whole question. I state to the Senator most frankly and most candidly that I do not indorse his views that we are to make this war perpetual; and in that I plant myself again behind the Executive. In his inaugural address he told us that the war, if commenced, could not last always; that it must terminate at some time; that you had to compromise it at last. The Senator says he would not receive any propositions from the people of the South at all. I do not misunderstand him in that.

Mr. HOWARD. No; I would not receive anything at all—no proposition whatever.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How does the Senator know that they are unwilling to lay down their arms? Would you not receive a proposition from them proposing to do that? The Senator is silent.

Mr. HOWARD. What I intended to say to my friend from Illinois was that I would not receive any proposition from the rebels for a compromise or settlement upon any other terms than these: that they shall unconditionally lay down their arms and submit peaceably, honestly, frankly to the authority of the United States. Those would be my only terms, and unless they should consent to accept those terms I would fight the war until they were sick of it, as sure as the world.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. President, I do not know how you can arrive at those facts unless you are willing to receive propositions from them. The great error on the part of those who have managed affairs has been that they were unwilling to receive any proposition. We know that at one time our armies were successful at every point; we were everywhere victorious; they were suffering as no people had ever suffered upon the face of the earth. What is there degrading to us in proposing to them to lay down their arms and to come back to the old flag and the old Union, such as their fathers made? I know of nothing degrading to us in that. The Senator seems to think there is something very degrading in it. Sir, your minister went with his hand upon his mouth and his mouth in the dust to ask the Emperor of France to receive an apology from the Executive of the United States because the House of Representatives had declared that they wanted no monarchical Government upon this continent fostered by a European Government. The nation was a thousand times more degraded by apologizing to Napoleon for what we had a clear right to do, and had done for years before without question, than to have said to the people of the South, who have erred, who have done a great wrong, "Return to your duty; lay down your arms." I do not see how that could degrade us. I would a thousand times rather bear such a message and make such a proposition than go to the French emperor and tell him, "It is only the House of Representatives that has passed this resolution."

Mr. President, we have had a proud history upon the subject of the Monroe doctrine. From the foundation of our Government up to this hour Presidents and Congresses have said to Europe and to the world, "You shall plant no colonies, no dependencies upon this continent." This is the first time in our history that we have ever apologized for the assertion of what all parties and all men of all parties have approved. When the gentleman is discussing the question of national degradation he may as well turn his attention to the position that we occupy, humiliated as we have been in our conduct with France.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the honorable Senator from Illinois allow me one word?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly, sir.

Mr. HOWARD. I beg to say that so far as I am concerned—I can speak only for myself, of course—that I do not approve, I never did approve, I do not think I ever can approve the language contained in the dispatch to which the honorable Senator refers. I disapprove of it just as much as he does, and undoubtedly for the same reason that the Senator from Illinois disapproves of it. I will go with him, shoulder to shoulder, in defense of the Monroe doctrine when the proper occasion shall present itself. I will be as ready as he, and I predict that my party will be as ready as his party in the country to assert the true American doctrine. I will go with him if he will go with me, my party will go with his if his party will go with mine when the proper occasion shall present itself, and we will try titles to Mexico with Monsieur Crapeau. I hope the honorable Senator from Illinois is satisfied on that subject so far as I am concerned.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. President, the opinion of the Senator from Michigan is worth nothing to me. He is trying to place the power of this Government in the same hands that have brought about this degradation. He tells me that he is opposed to it. That is a queer way to oppose anything, to try to keep in power those who have thus degraded us. If the Senator is in favor of placing our nation upon her ancient proud position of maintaining the integrity of the entire Union, the Constitution of our fathers, and that Monroe doctrine of which he speaks, he will come out and go with me.

The Senator says when the "proper occasion arises he is for trying titles with France to Mexico;" when France demands to know why the House of Representatives by very tame resolutions protests against the occupation of Mexico, Lincoln degrades us by apology; the time has not come. You cannot defer questions of national honor any more than you can questions of individual honor. When you lower the standard of national position by degrading yourselves to avoid war, you invite aggressions. I know that war is a terrible calamity; but, sir, there is a greater calamity than war to individuals and to nations. National degradation is a greater disaster to any country than war.

Sir, there has been a great deal of fallacy and a great deal of alarm spread among certain people by talking about this question here and elsewhere; but I tell the Senator and I tell other gentlemen that as soon as we place a President in the White House on the 4th of March next we shall receive whatever propositions the people of the South send to us; we shall make to them the proposition of coming back to their duty to the old Constitution and the old Union as our fathers made it, and if they do not come back we will enforce it against them.

Mr. HOWARD. Good, good.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But you will not do it. We will preserve the Union, the Constitution, and civil liberty.

Mr. HOWARD. We will.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, you will not.

Mr. HOWARD. We will.

Mr. RICHARDSON. You have not done it, sir. You started out in this contest with a majority, or certainly a large minority of those southern people with you. You started out with a united North, for there were not enough in opposition to make mile posts through the country. You laid down the plan of your campaign, the principles upon which you were going to fight. The distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. MORGAN] the other day enlightened us a little upon this subject of what we really were doing. He was reported as saying in the opening of the Baltimore Convention that nominated Mr. Lincoln that they had been fighting for four years upon the line of abolishing slavery. Do I misrepresent the Senator?

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will read my remarks he will find that he is mistaken.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the Senator tell me exactly what he did say, for I do not wish to misrepresent him.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the Senator want an answer at this time?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir; as I certainly do not wish to do the Senator injustice.

Mr. MORGAN. I stated that the party that was formed in 1856 was formed for the purpose of bringing the Government back to the principles of George Washington and Thomas Jefferson.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And, Mr. President, the Senator from New York to-day voted to repeal a law that was approved by George Washington. He and the Lincoln party passed a bill repealing what Washington approved; and every day they are destroying some or other of the legislation recommended by Washington and Jefferson. They are for destroying all that these patriots have done. If to destroy is to come back to the doctrines of Washington and Jefferson, then they are for it.

I will ask the Senator from New York if this is a correct report in the Chronicle of what he did say:

"Members of the convention. It is a little more than eight years since it was resolved to form a national party to be conducted upon the principles and policy which had been established and maintained by those illustrious statesmen, George Washington and Thomas Jefferson. A convention was held in Philadelphia, under the shade of the trees that surround the Hall of Independence; and candidates—Frémont and Dayton—were chosen to uphold our cause. But the State of Pennsylvania gave its electoral vote to James Buchanan, and the election of 1856 was lost."

"Nothing daunted by defeat, it was immediately determined 'to fight on this line,' not only 'all summer,' but four summers and four winters; and in 1860 the party banner was again unfurled, with the names of Abraham Lincoln and Hannibal Hamlin inscribed thereon. This time it was successful, but with success came rebellion; and with rebellion of course came war; and war, terrible civil war has continued with varying success up to nearly the period when it is necessary under our Constitution to prepare for another presidential election. It is for this highly responsible purpose that you are to-day assembled. It is not my duty nor my purpose to indicate any general course of action for this convention; but I trust I may be permitted to say that, in view of the dread realities of the past, and of what is passing at this moment, and of the fact that the bones of our soldiers lie bleaching in every State of this Union, and with the knowledge of the further fact that this has all been caused by slavery, the party of which you, gentlemen, are the delegated and honored representatives will fall short of accomplishing its great mission, unless among its other resolves it shall declare for such an amendment of the Constitution as will positively prohibit African slavery in the United States."

Mr. MORGAN. That is a correct report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I leave the speech of the Senator with his acts to go for what they are worth.

But, sir, I resume Mr. Lincoln's speech in Congress in 1848. In speaking of President Polk he says:

"In all this the President showed himself dissatisfied with the conclusions he had assumed. He took up one suggestion and tried to argue us into it, but argued himself out of it; he then took up another, and went through the same process, and returned to the first, showing himself dissatisfied with all, and appearing like a man on a hot shovel, finding no place on which he could settle down."

He said the other day, if I am correctly informed—and if I am not some gentleman will correct me—that he was controlled by events, that he did not control events. In this speech he says Mr. Polk argued himself out of all the positions he had assumed. Suppose I were to turn back and see how many positions he has assumed during these four years and argued himself out of, or allowed events to argue him out of them. No man in any history, certainly none in modern times, has been such a weathercock on the house-top to show the shiftings of the wind in great emergencies where it required a statesman to hold the helm of the ship of State with a firm and manly hand, that he may guide her to port where the storm can beat against her no more. But he goes on and says:

"Again, in relation to the termination of the war, the President nowhere, if he had read the message right, intimated any opinion as to when this war would come to an end. It did not seem to have occurred to him to say anything about that. Now, if he remembered right, General Scott was thrown into disfavor, if not into disgrace, by the same Administration for intimating, when the war commenced, that peace could not be conquered in less than four or five months. It was now more than twenty months before this last message was written; it had been prosecuted most vigorously; officers and men had done all that it was thought men could do, and hundreds of things never before dreamt of; and the President, who was so impatient at a veteran officer for having expressed the opinion that it would take at least four or five months, came to Congress with a long and elaborate message, in which he did not even express an imaginary conception of his own as to when it would terminate? How is this? Was it not true, as he had said before, that Mr. Polk was lost—that he did not know where he was—that he did not know what to do? He was not satisfied with any position. He forgot to take up the points that arose most obviously out of what he did say. All this went to show that he was most completely bewildered, and (he Mr. L.) should be most happy to be assured that there was not something about his conscience that was more harassing than all his mental perplexities."

Mr. President, I believe the President of the United States told us a while ago, or if he did not his Secretary of State did, that the war was to be over, first, I believe, in ninety days, then it was to be over in the fall campaign, and then in another campaign, and then in another campaign, and we have been told here day after day that the backbone of the rebellion was certainly broken; that it was all gone. We are now told that the President and the Secretary of War want more men; but they do not inform us when the war is to end. They are at fault; they are bewildered; and gentlemen tell us now we must fight it out and bequeath it to our children. I think you have to fight it out during this and certainly another campaign. I do not think the great Powers of Europe that have such vast influence in the affairs of the world will wait longer than one more campaign after this; and notwithstanding the fact that they have been abused here day after day for their interference I will do them the justice to say that upon that subject they have forbore with remarkable forbearance. This country knew of no people struggling anywhere that it did not recognize them as soon as they had won a battle. Our own example, our own history was against us. For nearly four years they have forbore to interfere. I do not think that a recognition would amount to much. So far as the contest between armies is concerned, it would not. But, sir, you have to conquer the armies of the enemy during this campaign or next summer or our people will not be willing to fight any longer. You might as well understand that to-day as at any other time.

Mr. WILSON. I hardly think you are commissioned to speak for the people on that point.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am certainly, with all deference to the Senator—

Mr. HOWARD. Will my honorable friend yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. I suppose he is willing to answer an inquiry. I wish to know upon what authority he speaks when he says that the people, "our people," meaning, I suppose, his own, that is the population of Illinois, will not continue the prosecution of this war beyond another campaign. He must not assume to speak for my people; that is, the people of Michigan. I take it he only means to speak for his own people.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I speak from the Senator himself. He says you cannot get armies unless you force them into the field, and he said so over and over again to-night. He said so repeatedly to you during the last week. He is the witness, not me. The declaration has not only been made by him, but by half a dozen Senators, that you cannot get armies unless you employ force to bring the men into the field.

Mr. HOWARD. Does the honorable Senator from Illinois allude to me when he says that Senators have declared we cannot get men or armies?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I allude to the Senator when I say the Senator said that unless you pass the bill under consideration with the commutation clause out you cannot get armies.

Mr. HOWARD. The honorable Senator will allow me to say that he is totally mistaken so far as I am concerned. I have never said any such thing; I have never intimated it; I do not believe it; and certainly the honorable Senator will not, in the presence of this denial, undertake to impute such a statement to me.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have been very unfortunate in understanding the meaning of the Senator. I do not wish to attribute to him words he has not used.

Mr. HOWARD. Of course I know that. If the Senator will pardon me, I believe the people, his people, my people, your people, sir, all loyal people will fight this battle to the bitter end, if that end is not reached until a quarter of a century shall pass. That is my opinion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why then all this talk about passing this bill? If you can get armies into the field what do you want to pass it for? You want to pass it for the purpose of getting armies. The proposition to pass the bill is the confession of the fact that you cannot get men without it. I suppose the Senator is in favor of passing this bill; and yet he says we can get plenty of men without it.

Mr. HOWARD. No; I did not say that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I do not understand the Senator, and I do not think he understands himself. The President, the Secretary of War, the Provost Marshal General, urge this bill because you cannot get men without you draft them. The chairman of Military Affairs [Mr. Wilson] has said time and again that General Grant needs men. If you did not need men and could get them any other way except by draft you would not pass this bill.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. We want to equalize the burden.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. President, I must confess that I sometimes find it difficult to understand the views of gentlemen here. Some of them are so incomprehensible that I doubt whether they understand them themselves. The fact cannot be denied that you cannot this day get men except by draft by force, and gentlemen say the people are furious for war forever.

But, sir, I was drawn off into this episode. I trust it will not be an impertinent inquiry to ask when you do expect to end this war? You say you will not compromise; you will reject all compromise; you will receive no propositions. I know you assume that these people down South will not agree to any terms but independence. I remember in our own history that we said in 1844—and I was one of those who said so—talking to Great Britain about some little possession in the Northwest, we would have up to 54° 40' or fight, and fight forever; we never meant to give it up. But, sir, that was all settled without a fight. We said, during the progress of the war with Mexico, that we must have indemnity for the past and security for the future. I do not think we got either. If you will turn back to the history of nations everywhere you will find that they have said pretty much the same thing, and yet they have compromised. Lay your position firmly down that from the flag no star is to be stricken, from your domain no inch of soil is to be taken away; tell those people South amnesty for the past, the Constitution and Union is our proposition. Repeat at once your confiscation bills, withdraw your proclamation of emancipation, that amounts to no more legally than the last year's almanac; let us try it a while on that line and see if it will not bring peace, Union, happiness, concord, and prosperity to this nation now engaged in civil strife. Try that for three months and you will have no trouble about it.

Sir, you have tried it upon your line for three years; you have sent into the field armies as brave, as courageous, under leaders as skillful, as any the world has ever seen; but you have made but little progress; you are fighting to-day before Richmond. We have progressed about ninety miles. Your policy against a united people involves their destruction. That is what you have to accomplish. Sir, turn back in history, examine it, and tell me where it was that a people united, scattered over three thousand miles of country, with a population of eight millions, have been conquered in war.

Mr. President, I may be mistaken about it, but in my opinion we are going to lick you gentlemen tolerably comfortable in the presidential election. I believe it is for the benefit of the country, for the interest of the whole human race that we should have a change. I believe the people will think so. When Mr. Lincoln entered the presidential chair and you into power in both Halls of Congress, the sun in its circuit of the earth had never seen such a country anywhere in any period of time. We could feed and fight the world. Wherever your flag floated upon the face of the earth, wherever the breeze of heaven unfurled it, it was honored and respected. No minister of ours was reduced to the sad condition of going with his hat in hand and telling the minister of a crowned head, "This is not the act of my whole Government." Sir, if we had been in power and reduced to that alternative we would have spoken to them through the cannon's mouth upon their own soil, upon ours, or wherever their flag was unfurled on land or sea.

Sir, what is our condition now? It is beyond all controversy that the policy of this Administration is a failure, and has ruined the country and burdened with taxation our people. I may be wrong, but I believe as firmly as I stand here to-day that another policy would have terminated this conflict, and placed us again, if not in as good condition as we were, certainly in an infinitely better position than we are in now.

Before I take my seat I desire to say that I intend to vote against the repeal of the commutation clause. The election of any other person this fall will render all such laws as this and all draft unnecessary, for no man in the land would or could be so mischievous as Mr. Lincoln has been to our cause and country. No other citizen could exhibit such weakness and such imbecility in the management of our affairs. The good of the country requires that we should relieve him from the responsible position that he now occupies. For one I shall do whatever in my power lies to help to relieve him from that position.

It has been sometimes said that Mr. Lincoln was sent to us as a great national blessing. The Almighty has been afflicting this land terribly for the last three or four years, and I do not know but what Mr. Lincoln is the instrument sent to punish us for our sins. No doubt we deserve it all. I shall try to get rid of him. I want him to come back to Illinois, where he can tell his jokes without injury. I am perfectly willing to hear him in the bar-rooms or the court-rooms. He is a very agreeable companion there, and perfectly harmless. But, sir, in great times like these the thoughts of the Chief Executive of the country should be turned upon something else than jokes and anecdotes. If we discharge our duty we can defeat him. We should defeat him for the good of our country, for common humanity. The memories of the past, the hopes of the future, the sad realities of the present all unite in the stern demand, turn the despot, the heartless joker out, leave him to commune with his own conscience as the most awful punishment that earth can give.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. COLLAMER.]

Mr. SPRAGUE. Let the amendment be reported.

The Secretary read the amendment, to strike out the first section of the bill after the enacting clause and to insert in lieu thereof:

That the thirteenth section of the act entitled "An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, is hereby so amended that the sum to be paid by a drafted man to the Government for the procurement of a substitute shall not exceed $500, instead of $300.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no, let us vote.

Mr. MORGAN. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest that it is not necessary to call for the yeas and nays. We can vote it down. I do not think anybody else wants to speak.

Mr. MORGAN. I will withdraw the call.

Mr. McDougall. I want to speak. I renew the call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOWE. I desire to state that I have paired off with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS,] who has been obliged to leave the Senate, and for that reason I desire to be excused from voting, except on the question of the pending amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 7, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, Davis, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, and Saulsbury—7.

NAYS.—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Howard, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, Wiley, and Wilson—25.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Collamer, Conness, Cowan, Dixon, Fessenden, Hale, Harding, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Sumner, and Wright—17.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. FOOT. I am aware, sir, that the hour is late and that the body is weary and impatient of further debate upon this question to-night. I had intended at an earlier hour of the evening to have submitted some few remarks in response mainly to some suggestions made by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. Davis,] but I am not in the habit of detaining the Senate in debate at any time, especially at so unseasonable an hour as this, and if the Senate desires to take a vote now upon this question without further discussion, I will not detain them.

Mr. McDUGALL. If the Senator will allow me, I will move an adjournment.

Mr. FOOT. I ask no adjournment and cannot consent to an adjournment for my accommodation. I shall detain the Senate but a few moments at the outside.

I do not rise for the purpose of speaking now upon the question directly before the Senate; that is, upon the question of commutation. I have already very briefly expressed my opinions on that question. I have no occasion to repeat them, and as yet no occasion to change them.

The Senator from Kentucky dilated at some length, and with much emphasis, upon the cost and the sacrifices of the war in which we are engaged; upon the afflictions, the wretchedness, and the woe that it was bringing upon the country; that the public mind had become tired and weary and in disgust at the manner in which the war had been conducted, and the object for which it was now conducted, all calculated, as it seemed to me, to disparage the war and to disaffect the public mind. It is true, Mr. President, it is but too sadly true, that our country is involved in war, in flagrant, bloody, civil war, but a war, nevertheless, into which it has been driven by the inevitable necessities of self-existence. It is a war of self-defense.

Mr. SPRAGUE. And self-preservation.

Mr. FOOT. It is a war of self-preservation, to repeat the suggestion of my friend. It is a war for the rescue and for the salvation of this Republic, and for the salvation of republican institutions and of republican liberty, against the assaults of a gigantic and causeless and unprovoked rebellion.

Shall we prosecute the war to its final issue, or shall we ignobly and ignominiously surrender our national life and our national being? That is the question before us to-night, Mr. President, and the American people have answered that question for themselves, and for you, and for me. The true and loyal people of the country have long since fully made up their minds upon this whole subject of the war and of the rebellion. They have taken their stand upon it. They have spoken their purpose in relation to it. They have proclaimed it in the face of the nations that this accursed rebellion shall die, and that this Republic of ours shall live, cost what it may: yea, more, as a necessary incident of the war, or, if you please rather to have it so, as an inevitable result of the rebellion and of the war for the suppression of the rebellion, the instigating cause and the sustaining power of the rebellion must die out with it, so as never to rise again to plague this people and to desolate this land of ours. To this great consummation—the suppression of the rebellion, the restoration of the Union, and the salvation of the Republic—the loyal people of our country, like the immortal authors of the Declaration of Independence, have consecrated their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor.

Though the trial may be long and severe, though the contest shall wax fiercer and hotter than ever before, though the cost and the sacrifice may be great indeed, it is to be borne in mind all the while that the stake at issue is far greater still. Sir, whatever may be the cost or whatever may be the sacrifice of saving your country, it will be in-initely less than the cost and the sacrifice of losing your country. If the Republic be saved all else, comparatively speaking, is saved with it. If the Republic be lost all else of this world's goods or of this world's hopes, which are worth living for or worth dying for are lost with it, and lost irrecoverably and forever.

Sensors may dilate upon and deplore as they may the cost and the sacrifices of the war. They may expatiate upon and pour out their lamentations over the miseries and the manifold horrors of the war. We concede it all. We have no controversy or disputation with them upon that question. But, sir, who caused it all? Who brought all this horror and misery of civil war upon our country? Who are responsible for this great iniquity that afflicts our land? Who are answerable for it before the tribunals of God and man? The Senator from Kentucky did not answer that question; he did not anticipate that question; he did not anticipate the answer to that question. Treason, rank, bold, audacious treason, plunged your country into all the horrors of civil war. Treason in its madness and in its blindness brought this great affliction upon your country, appealed to arms, fired the first gun, struck the first blow, and forced upon your country the terrible issues of civil war. It left us no other alternative except the still greater calamity of national abasement, of national dishonor, and of national degradation. It challenged us to the wager of battle. From necessity we accepted the issue. By that issue we abide. By that issue treason itself must abide, be the consequences what they may.

There can in the nature of things be no terms of settlement; there can be no terms of compromise; there can be no profers of negotiation to traitors in arms against your assailed and betrayed country, short of their entire subjection, the complete overthrow of their military power, or their unconditional surrender and absolute and unqualified submission to the authority and the laws of the Government they have attempted to destroy, and with ample sureties for keeping the peace forever thereafter. Would you concede anything more? Would you concede anything less?

Talk of compromise on such a question! Talk of negotiation with such a foe at such a time and under such circumstances! Compromise! Compromise of what, pray tell me? Compromise of the question of our right to exist and to have a being as a nation? Compromise of the question whether we shall subdue the rebellion or whether the rebellion shall subdue us? Compromise of our right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness? Compromise of the question of our right to self-existence and to self-protection as a nation upon the earth? Is that what you mean?

Negotiate! Negotiate with whom—in Heaven's name, with whom? Negotiate with armed traitors in the field who are seeking the life of the very Government that gave them birth and nourished them and brought them up? Negotiate with armed assassins who are seeking to cut your throat, who demand your life or your inheritance? Negotiate with an enemy who spurns and laughs to scorn your every suggestion of settlement? The very consideration of such a proposition at the present time and under the existing condition of things is derogatory, is abhorrent to every loyal and manly and independent and patriotic mind.

Mr. President, there is but one plain and palatable course for us, and that is to prosecute the war with all the vigor and with all the energy and by all the means that God and nature have placed in our hands, and within the recognized limits of civilized warfare to put down this rebellion. Sir, this Republic must conquer the rebellion or the rebellion will conquer this Republic, and there is no other alternative. Trusting that the God of battles, through the agency and the instrumentality of our gallant and heroic officers and men now fighting in the field for the cause of the Union and of free republican government, will soon crown our arms with triumph and give us victory and peace, we wait in patience, we wait in hope and in confidence, the final issue of the contest.

Never despair of the Republic. This rebellion must be put down. This Union must be restored. This Republic of ours, with all its promises and with all its hopes for the future and for the world, must be saved. I repeat, this monster rebellion must be put down; this foul conspiracy against the life of the best and the most beneficent Government the world has ever seen must be crushed out. We are not at liberty to doubt about it; we are not at liberty to speculate about it; I had almost said we were not at liberty to debate about it. It is simply and only a thing to be done, to be done at all events, to be done at all hazards, to be done at all sacrifices. If more men are wanted to save the Government more men will be had. If more men are needed, whether it be one hundred thousand or two hundred thousand or five hundred thousand to save this Republic of ours, my life upon it, you have only to make that necessity known and they will not be found wanting in the day of their country's peril. They will be prompt to answer the call. They are not yet willing nor yet prepared to give up this Government.

I will speak for my own State; a small and unpretentious State, small in territory, small in population, but large in the spirit of patriotism as the expanse of this Republic, with a courage and fortitude and a fidelity as firm and as immovable as the foundations of her own everlasting hills. Though she has already paid her sacrifice of blood in full measure to the demon of this rebellion, yet if more of her sons are wanted, if the exigencies of the country require it, I, who know them well and whose life-long has been spent among them, tell you the call is only to come, the summons to arms only to reach them, and every man of them capable of bearing arms, if need be, will be prompt to leave his farm, his workshop, his home, his household, and make haste to the red fields of war; yea, and every mother will make haste to lay her last son in the prime and the strength of his early manhood upon the altar of her country's sacrifice, sooner than see the bright orb of this Republic go down in perpetual darkness and night.

That, sir, is the spirit of the green mountain State. That is the spirit of the loyal people of every State in this Union. That is the spirit and that is the determination that is to put down this rebellion, that is to restore this Union, that is to save this Republic; and it is therefore that I say again, this Republic will be saved. Such is my faith, such is my reliance upon the loyalty, upon the patriotism, upon the valor, upon the fidelity, upon the self-sacrificing endurance, and above all upon the unconquerable will and the undying purpose of my fellow-countrymen. Though long and severe and terrible may be the ordeal, yet, God helping them, I believe the strength of the American people will prove equal to the task—that the virtue of the American people will prove equal to this great trial.

Sir, I will detain you no longer. This Republic must be saved, and twenty million responsive voices give back the answer, "This Republic of ours shall be saved."

Mr. SPRAGUE. I have no doubt that almost every Senator believes every word that has been uttered by my honorable friend from Vermont, and I therefore move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. McDUGALL. I have been more than pleased, I have been edified by the old Roman talk that I have heard from the Senator from Vermont, worthy of his experience, worthy of his years, and of his high and well-known character. But, sir, while I endorse all those noble old Roman sentiments that he has so well pronounced, and I know has so strongly felt, I cannot concur with him in his conclusions. I concur with him in the heart of what he says, in the spirit of what he says, and in the will to do all that he would himself, and yet I am compelled to express the opinion that the philosophy of the doctrine which is involved in his conclusions is, in my judgment, altogether unsound. Sir, if we were old Romans or old Greeks, or men of the Republic as it was in 1776 and incarnated in 1787, we would not ask for additional commutation. It is the evil of the whole course of our policy with regard to this war; and I protest again, humble as my opinion may be, or as my judgment may be, or as my position may be as against the Senator from Vermont, that we make a grave mistake in supposing that the citizens of the Republic should be purchased to go into the field.

This is a proposition to increase the price of commutation. We forget the law that lies at the foundation of republican institutions. I do not propose to discuss the question, and I shall not dare myself to undertake to rebuke the very able and long-experienced Senator who represents the green hills of Vermont. He is always able to teach me, and I bow my head to him for instruction. But, sir, I trust that we shall get back to the true principles upon which armies should be organized, and upon which a republican people should be put into the field of battle. I am confident that I am right on this point, or otherwise I should not be so persistent in repeating my convictions. We should not undertake to carry on war upon the principle involved in the proposed amendment; and if we do not learn it to-day or to-night, if we do not learn it this year, if we do not learn it next year, it will be compelled into our recognition by the experience of years.

I was as highly pleased with the discourse of the Senator from Vermont as by anything I have heard this session. I think it has somewhat elevated my own feelings of patriotism. As regards everything he has said in the form of general remark and appeals to the high sense of the Senate and the American people, I would be proud could I have expressed myself so well and said what I thought in the same form of language. But, sir, I insist, and it will come to be the conviction yet, that it is not the paying of large sums to bring men into the field that will accomplish victory. We commenced with a grave error, and we have got to retrieve that error before we shall be able to establish ourselves perfectly as a strong, commanding power as between ourselves and our adversaries.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall detain the Senate for but a few moments. I am not going into any political discussion, or to say who was or who was not the cause of this war, or the terms upon which it can be settled. I rise simply to say a word in reference to the amendment proposed by the honorable Senator from Vermont. As I understand, that amendment proposes to increase the commutation money from $300 to $500, and to reduce the term of service from three years to one year.

Mr. FOOT. Let me correct my friend, as my colleague is absent. It is not an absolute sum fixed. It leaves it discretionary with the Department.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then it is reasonable to presume that the Department, being extremely anxious to obtain men, will fix the rate of commutation at the highest sum, the sum of $500. In my judgment this is equivalent to saying there shall be no commutation; because where there is one man who is able to pay $500 commutation money for one year there are fifty who are not able of the class who would be bound. The adoption of this amendment, therefore, is equivalent to saying to the young men of this country who are willing to pay their money in order that substitutes may be obtained, "You shall go into battle; there is no escape."

If I were governed simply by party considerations, and wanted a measure to pass this body simply from party considerations, I should rejoice at the passage of this bill by the dominant party, simply because I believe as firmly as I believe I exist that no Administration who is responsible for the adoption of such a measure as this can possibly meet with public approval in the presidential election; but while I would be most glad to see hurled from power never to return to it those who administer the Government, I cannot allow mere partisan considerations to influence my vote.

I know, sir, that in my own State there are hundreds of young men who are liable to this draft, who are opposed to going into this war, who wish to live in peace and quiet at home, who are willing to sell everything they have got on earth to contribute the money to exempt them from a draft, yet who will ever be unable to raise this amount of money. I believe there are hundreds and thousands of men in this country who will die on their own thresholds before they will ever by the strong arm of power be dragged from their quiet homes simply because they are not able to raise the amount of money which unreasonable legislation imposes upon them.

Now, Mr. President, if it be true, as has been said by the honorable Senator from Vermont, that the loyal people of this country have made up their minds to fight out this war to the bitter end, if it be true that they have made up their minds to respond to every call which may be made upon them, whence the necessity and why the necessity for this draft? Why be so unreasonable as to fix the price of commutation so high that nineteen twentieths of the men subject to draft will not be able to pay it? Mock them not, sir; you might just as well say at once that every man shall go to the field of battle who is summoned to go. I trust, not only for the benefit of those in whom I am more immediately interested, the people of my own State, but for the peace and harmony of the country, for the purpose of avoiding scenes at which the imagination becomes appalled, that the Senate will neither make the commutation so high that those to be affected by the draft cannot pay it, nor strike out the commutation clause. If your draft is but for a year, $300 is a very exorbitant price to pay. I have seen the young men in my own State, in the county in which I live, sell the last thing they had on earth, and then call upon their friends, going around with subscription papers to get their friends to contribute their mite to relieve them from going to war even by paying the sum of $300. I have had mothers come into my office, with tears in their eyes, begging that the humane portion of the community might save to them their only boy. Nobody who does not mingle with the people can tell the amount of suffering and agony that are endured by the parents of this land in the humbler walks of life, when it is proclaimed by the provost marshals that a draft is to be made.

Sir, I invoke the Senate by all the considerations that can move the generous heart and stir the warm generous blood, crush not the last hope of the young man just entering upon the theater of life who desires to spend his days under the paternal roof; drag not away from the agonized mother and the heart-stricken father their only boy, simply because in the providence of God and from the misfortunes of life they are not able to raise the amount which the rich man may well afford to give. In the midst of this desolating war, for almost every house is clothed in mourning and almost every eye is bathed in tears, add not to the moan of the heart-stricken; cause not an additional flood of tears. If for the noble purpose indicated by the honorable Senator from Vermont, the preservation of the Union of these States, in the judgment of those who have the management of political affairs it be necessary to continue this most fratricidal war, mix with the cup of bitterness as much of comfort as you can.

Sir, the speech of the honorable Senator from Vermont awakened in my mind many thoughts and caused it to revert to the history of the past. The speech made by the honorable Senator, with a change of name, a change of date, and a change of theater, was made nearly a hundred years ago. The Parliament of Great Britain rang with such utterances: "No compromise with traitors," "nothing but absolute obedience, perfect acquiescence in the will of the Government;" "the war against the colonies must be fought out to maintain the dignity, the character, and the renown of the British Government." "It would be degradation and humiliation," said the lords and commons, in obedience to the wishes of the king, "to have compromise with rebels;" and then as now the cry was, "Prosecute the war for the preservation of the integrity of the Government;" and yet, in the course of a very short time, taught by the sad lessons of experience, but not half so powerfully or instructively taught as we have been by the awful slaughter and by the dire calamities of this war, even the king upon his throne, and the lords and commons in their Parliament house, sent their propositions of peace if the errant colonies would return. Let me tell honorable Senators to-night that every general you have in the field may continue to fight the battle on this line not only during all the summer, but many coming summers, and unless the teachings of history be a lie you will be no nearer the end upon the policy you are pursuing of "no compromise with rebels and traitors," "no terms to be proposed and no terms to be received," than you were in the beginning. To use the language of another, "Tell me, thou reverend chronicler of the grave, tell me, voice of history, upon what page of your recorded annals is written the example of twelve million people, scattered over a territory of such vast extent, which have ever been subdued, which have ever been conquered when the cry has been 'war, no compromise,' when the alternative presented has been 'submission with the loss of property and life also,' or the other alternative of 'fighting for your property and your life with the chance of securing both.'" Sir, I know that the utterances of one so humble as myself and of those entertaining similar notions cannot influence legislation here; but the time will come, and those of us who shall be alive to witness it will see the day, when this policy of a vigorous prosecution of the war and summoning reluctant men from their homes to go to the bloody field of strife, and discarding all other means whether as independent or assistant to the obtaining of peaceful results will prove to have been an error; and if a dismembered empire shall be the awful price you pay, if the disintegration of the greatest, the mightiest, and the freest Republic that ever existed shall be the dread price of your legislative and executive folly, when you open your eyes to the dread reality, (which will come) as if the teachings and lessons of history be true,) say not to us who asked you to profit by those teachings and to learn those lessons that the fault was ours; but in the quietude of your own homes, amid the wreck of constitutional liberty, and a once proud, great, and mighty empire, reflect that you spurned the warning voice of reason, that you imputed improper motives to those who vainly endeavored to persuade you from the suicidal course, and that you, and you alone, have been the authors of a nation's destruction.

Mr. HOWARD. I desire to say one word—

Several SENATORS. No, no; let us vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. If a member of the majority wishes to speak, I will move an adjournment.

Mr. HOWARD. I will take my seat.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw my motion, then; but I will renew it if our own friends seek to consume time.

Mr. HOWARD. Allow me to state that I did desire to say a word in reply to the imputations of the Senator from Delaware against the Union party in this Senate.

Several SENATORS. Some other time.

Mr. HOWARD. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. COLLAMER.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GRIMES. I now offer as an additional section to this bill the third section of the printed amendment of the Senator from Vermont:

And be it further enacted, That the number of men furnished for any district for the service of the United States beyond and above its quota on calls heretofore made, and the term of service of such men, shall be considered and allowed to said district in calls hereafter made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I send to the Chair an amendment as an additional section.

The amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That any persons, resident in the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, or Arkansas, who may voluntarily enlist in the military service of the United States for the term of three years or during the war, shall be entitled to the benefits and privileges of existing laws, and such persons shall be mustered into the regiments, or other organizations, of whatsoever State they may elect, or, in the case of colored troops, shall be assigned as now provided by law. And the States, or subdivisions of States, procuring such enlistments, shall receive credit for such persons, in accordance with the laws in other cases; but such enlistments as are authorized in any State, under the provisions of this act, shall only continue until such State shall have been made subject to a call for troops.

[“No,” “No.”]

Mr. WILSON. I will not press the amendment, as I see it is distasteful to the Senate, and there is a desire to take a vote on the bill to-night, but I understand that the House of Representatives are determined to put this provision on any bill they pass. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. I offer as an additional section to this bill the fifth section of the printed amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That no person drafted on future calls or who shall volunteer to fill the same shall be liable to be again drafted until the existing enrollment shall be exhausted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time. On its passage,

Mr. BUCKALEW called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Doolittle, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Howard, Howe, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, Willey, and Wilson—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Carlile, McDougall, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, and Sautsbury—7.

ABSENT—Messrs. Collamer, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Fessenden, Hale, Harding, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Morrill, Nesmith, Sumner, and Wright—18.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. MORGAN, its title was amended by adding the words "and for other purposes."

On motion of Mr. WILSON,
The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 23, 1864.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. CHANNING. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Mr. STEELE, of New York, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee for the District of Columbia House bill No. 537, to incorporate the Young Men's Christian Association of the city of Washington.

The bill was read at length.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEELE, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLFAX STREET.

Mr. STEELE, of New York, also, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, by unanimous consent, reported a bill to establish Colfax street in the city of Washington and District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. COX. There is no objection to that bill, Mr. Speaker, none whatever. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE, of New York. I will simply say that the bill only changes an alley to a street.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEELE, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

On motion of Mr. PATTERSON, by unanimous consent, Senate bill No. 26, to provide for the public instruction of youth in the county of Washington and District of Columbia, was taken from the Speaker's table.

The amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House, striking out the clause which makes provision for the payment of compensation to school commissioners, was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CORRECTION OF AWARD.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask the consent of the House to report from the Committee for the District of Columbia a joint resolution amending the award of the commissioners under the act of the 16th of April, 1862, entitled "An act for the release of certain persons held to service or labor in the District of Columbia," in the case of Nicholas Bowie, claiming for Martha Manning. The object of the joint resolution is simply to correct a clerical error and make the payment correspond with what was really the award of the commissioners.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was introduced and read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PATTERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALARIES OF JUDGES OF SLAVE TRADE COURT.

Mr. COX asked unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs a bill to increase the salaries of the judges and arbitrator of the mixed court under the treaty with Great Britain for the suppression of the slave trade.

Mr. HOLMAN objected.

OREGON LAND GRANT.

Mr. SLOAN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back Senate bill No. 279, to amend the act of Congress making donations to settlers on the public lands in Oregon, approved September 27, 1850, and the acts amendatory thereof.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SLOAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PATENT LAWS.

Mr. CHANLER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Patents, reported back Senate bill No. 162, amendatory of an act to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the progress of the useful arts," approved March 3, 1863; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that any person having an interest in an invention, whether as the inventor or assignee, for which a patent was ordered to issue upon the payment of the final fee, as provided in section three of an act approved March 3, 1863, but who has failed to make payment of the final fee as provided by that act, shall have the right to make the payment of the fee, and receive the patent withheld on account of the non-payment of the fee, provided payment be made within six months from the date of the passage of the act; and provided that nothing therein shall be so construed as to hold responsible in damages any persons who have manufactured or used any article or thing for which a patent was ordered to be issued.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHANLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON LEVY COURT.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, of New York, the House took from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 115, for the proper organization of the levy court of the county of Washington, in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that the first clause of the third section of the act to define the powers and duties of the levy court of the county of Washington, District of Columbia, in regard to roads, and for other purposes, be amended so as to read as follows:

That the said court shall have the care and charge of and the exclusive jurisdiction over all the public roads and bridges in said county, except such roads and bridges as belong to and are under the care of the United States, and except such roads and bridges as shall have been or may hereafter be specially provided for by Congress. And the said court shall have power and it shall be their duty.

That the tenth section be amended by striking out the words "thirty-first" and inserting the word "thirtieth;" that all cemeteries in the District of Columbia, outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, the owners of which sell lots or burial rights therein indiscriminately to those applying therefor, shall be assessed and taxed as other property in the same parts of the District; provided that all lots in cemeteries, when actually sold for burial purposes; and any cemetery held and owned by a religious society, having a regular and known place of worship, shall be exempt from taxation; that hereafter the court shall have power and it shall be their duty to appoint the county surveyor of the county of Washington, to define his duties from time to time, to fix his compensation, and to remove him whenever they shall deem it proper so to do; that it shall be the duty of the collector of taxes for the county, whenever the owner or keeper of any dog shall neglect or refuse to pay the tax thereon, to kill or cause to be killed every such dog; that the time specified by the act of February 21, 1863, within which certain roads in the county shall be surveyed, platted, and recorded, be extended to three years from July 1, 1865; that the court shall have power to issue, classify, and tax licenses for taverns, hotels, and restaurants, and for retailing goods, wares, and merchandise in the county, in proportion to the amount of business the person applying for a license is likely to do; the maximum sum to be charged for any one license not to exceed $250, and the minimum to be so charged not to be less than $2; and that all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the act be repealed.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POTOMAC FERRY COMPANY.

Mr. MORRIS, of Ohio, moved to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 298, to incorporate the Potomac Ferry Company.

Mr. ALLEY objected.

COLORED CATHOLIC BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.

Mr. TRACY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported a bill to incorporate the Colored Catholic Benevolent Society; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TRACY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. TRACY. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the justice and propriety of providing by the immediate enactment of a law for the payment to soldiers who volunteered for a term less than three years and not less than nine months, and who have died or may hereafter die in the military service of the United States in the line of their duty, the same bounty as is now allowed by existing laws to soldiers who volunteered for three years; and report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. FENTON. The Committee on Military Affairs have been already instructed on this subject, but I do not object.

The resolution was adopted.

HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY, ETC.

Mr. ORTH. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Foreign Affairs Senate bill No. 187, to carry into effect the treaty between the United States and her Britannic Majesty for the final settlement of the claims of the Hudson's Bay and Puget Sound Agricultural Companies.

Mr. HOLMAN. What are the salaries to be paid to the umpire and commissioner?

Mr. ORTH. Five thousand dollars each.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object unless the salary for each is reduced to $4,000.

Mr. ORTH. The committee tried to reduce it, and they were unanimous in fixing it at this rate. This is necessary to carry out the provisions of existing treaties.

Mr. HOLMAN. Four thousand dollars is all that we have heretofore paid for like services; and these officers also have their personal expenses paid. I object.

THE SLAVE TRADE.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill to increase the salaries of judges and arbitrators of the mixed court under the treaty with Great Britain for the suppression of the slave trade; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. COLE, of California. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I believe the regular order is the naval bill.

The SPEAKER. It is the Pacific railroad bill until it is disposed of; and then the naval bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, informed the House that the Senate have passed a joint resolution and bills of this House of the following titles:

Joint resolution (No. 95) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to amend the contract with John Ericsson for the construction of two impenetrable floating batteries, the Dictator and the Puritan; and

An act (No. 453) to increase the pension of Isaac Allen.

Also, the Senate have passed an act (H. R. No. 466) for the relief of Martha Jane Skaggs; and an act (H. R. No. 470) to authorize assimilated rank to be given to the warrant officers of the United States Navy, and for other purposes; severally with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

That the Senate have also passed joint resolutions and bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Joint resolution (No. 50) for the relief of the contractors for the machinery of the side-wheel gunboats known as "double-enders;"

Joint resolution (No. 70) to authorize the acquisition of certain land for the use of the Government hospital for the insane;

Joint resolution (No. 69) regulating the investment of the naval pension fund;

An act (No. 303) for the relief of Charles A. Hichborn;

An act (No. 308) repealing so much of "An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1864, and for other purposes," approved March 14, 1864, as appropriates $25,000 for erecting a naval hospital at Kittery, Maine;

An act (No. 299) authorizing the levy court of Washington county, in the District of Columbia, to levy and collect its portion of the direct tax imposed by the act of Congress of August 5, 1861;

An act (No. 301) for the sale of a lot of land in Iowa in the Fort Crawford reservation;

An act (No. 324) prescribing the punishment for enticing and aiding seamen to desert the naval service of the United States;

An act (No. 246) for the relief of seamen and others, not officers, borne on the books of vessels wrecked or lost in the naval service; and

An act (No. 190) to establish a navy-yard and depot at Cairo, in the State of Illinois.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. HOOPER. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the loan bill.

The question was put; and no quorum voted.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. COLE, of California, and Mr. J. C. ALLEN.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 10.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOUTWELL in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 540) to provide ways and means for the support of the Government, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. POMEROY] to the second section of the bill. The Chair is informed that the amendment under direction of the House yesterday was sent to the printer, and has not yet been returned. If there be no objection, the second section will be passed over informally until the amendment is returned.

There was no objection.

The third section was read, as follows:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the interest on all bonds heretofore issued, payable annually, may be paid semi-annually; and in lieu of such bonds authorized to be issued, the Secretary of the Treasury may issue bonds bearing interest, payable semi-annually. And he may also issue in exchange for Treasury notes heretofore issued bearing seven and three tenths per cent. interest, besides the six per cent. bonds heretofore authorized, like bonds of all the denominations in which such Treasury notes have been issued; and the interest on such Treasury notes after maturity shall be paid in lawful money, and they may be exchanged for such bonds at any time within three months from the date of notice of redemption by the Secretary of the Treasury, after which the interest on such Treasury notes shall cease. And so much of the law approved March 3, 1864, as limits the loan authorized therein to the current fiscal year, is hereby repealed; and the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to borrow money and issue therefor bonds or notes conferred by the first section of the act of March 3, 1863, entitled "An act to provide ways and means for the support of the Government," shall cease on and after the passage of this act.

Mr. BROOKS. I move to amend that section by striking out the words "and so much of the law approved March 3, 1864, as limits the loan authorized therein to the current fiscal year is hereby repealed." I move the amendment to enable me to say that the Secretary of the Treasury has laid on our tables, or somebody in his name has, a statement of the amount of the public debt June 14, 1864, and from that I have been able to compile exactly the amount of loans proposed by this bill. It is important that the public should understand it, and therefore I state it. The first section of this bill appropriates $400,000,000. In the lines to which I am directing attention two other appropriations or loans are made, if I may so speak. Under the $200,000,000 loan which passed March 3, 1864, $155,760,750 are yet unused; and of the temporary loan of $150,000,000, in the fourth section of the bill, $65,598,501 have been thus borrowed, leaving to be borrowed $84,401,499. The bill, therefore, provides for exactly $614,162,249. The gentleman from Massachusetts and myself had some misunderstanding about this matter yesterday, but these are the precise facts. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HOOPER. I move to amend the fourth section by striking out in line four the words "one hundred" and inserting "fifty" in lieu thereof; so that the section will read:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury may authorize the receipt, as a temporary loan, of United States notes or the notes of national banking associations on deposit for not less than thirty days, in sums not less than fifty dollars, by any of the Assistant Treasurers of the United States, or depositaries designated for that purpose, other than national banking associations, who shall issue certificates of deposit in such form as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, bearing interest not exceeding six per cent. annually, and payable at any time after the term of deposit, and after ten days' subsequent notice, unless time and notice be waived by the Secretary of the Treasury, &c.

The object is to allow smaller sums to be received.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKS. It is provided in the fifth section "that the Secretary of the Treasury may issue notes for the fractions of a dollar as now used for currency," &c. Is it meant by that that he may issue notes for $1 25 and $1 50?

Mr. HOOPER. There is a law which prohibits the issuing of any such fractional notes.

Mr. BROOKS. But this law gives him the power.

Mr. HOOPER. There are no such notes issued now, either by the Government or by the banks.

Mr. BROOKS. I think there are some issued by the State banks.

Mr. HOOPER. I think not; certainly none by the Government.

Mr. BROOKS. What I want to understand is whether this provision authorizes the issue of notes for $1 25 and $1 50.

Mr. HOOPER. No, sir.

Mr. BROOKS. I move to amend section six by inserting after the word "Secretary," in the ninth line, the words "in a room set apart especially and exclusively for that purpose under the care of some person appointed directly by him;" so that the section will read:

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the coupon and registered bonds shall be in such form and bear such inscriptions as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct, and shall be signed by the Register of the Treasury, or for the Register, by such person or persons as may be specially designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall bear, as evidence of lawful issue, the imprint of the seal of the Treasury Department, to be made under the direction of the Secretary, in a room set apart especially and exclusively for that purpose under the care of some person appointed directly by him, &c.

My object in offering this amendment is to rescue the red seal of the Treasury from the printing department of the Treasury. It may not be known to all the members of the House that the whole of these interest-bearing notes are printed in the Treasury Department. The name of the Treasurer, Mr. Spinner, is not written by Mr. Spinner, but printed in the Treasury. The name of Mr. Chittenden is not written by him, but printed in the Treasury building. Indeed, the ten dollar bill which I hold in my hand is manufactured exclusively in the Treasury printing office. The red seal, which was the last guard and protection which the public had, is affixed by print in the very heart and bosom of the printing office in the Treasury. The object of my amendment is to take that red seal from the printing office of the Treasury and place it in a room exclusively set apart for that purpose, under the direct control of an appointee of the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not see any objection that there can be made to the amendment. It will be a great guard to the Treasury, and I hope it will receive the support of both sides of the House.

Mr. HOOPER. I doubt whether that amendment is necessary. It appears to me, that the mere offering of the amendment will be sufficient. We have confidence in the Secretary of the Treasury that he will do whatever is necessary to prevent the possibility of any fraud of this character. I doubt the propriety of the House prescribing such a provision as this.

Mr. PRICE. I would ask whether the Secretary of the Treasury ever sees these notes?

Mr. BROOKS. Never, never.

Mr. PRICE. I think there ought to be some check, some guard.

Mr. HOOPER. I have confidence that the Secretary of the Treasury will furnish all necessary checks, and he can do it better than this House can.

Mr. ASHLEY. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKS. I desire to call attention to this clause of the sixth section:

And the coupons attached to such bonds shall bear the engraved signature of the Register of the Treasury, and such other device or safeguard against counterfeiting as the Secretary may approve; and it is hereby declared that all bonds heretofore issued, bearing the signature of the Register, shall have the same force, effect, and validity as if signed also by the Treasurer, and all bonds bearing the signature of the Register, erroneously described as Treasurer of the United States, shall have the same force, validity, and effect as if his official designation had been correctly stated.

I wish the gentleman who reported this bill would tell me what is the use of that phrase "erroneously described as Treasurer of the United States."

Mr. HOOPER. I understand that there were a number of bonds issued on which the name of the Treasurer of the United States was put in the place where the Register of the Treasury had been in the habit of signing his name. The Register signed those bonds over the printed signature of the Treasurer of the United States. The mistake was not discovered until the bonds had been issued, and the object of this provision is to make that signature legal.

Mr. BROOKS. The explanation is perfectly satisfactory, and this proposed legislation is wise and just; but this illustrates the necessity of the utmost care in the printing of the public money. We are called upon here to correct by public statute an error of the printer. The correction is indispensably necessary.

Mr. HOOPER. Not an error of the printer. The printing was correct, but this signature was written in the wrong place.

Mr. BROOKS. Yes, sir; an error of the printer. The name of Mr. Chittenden was printed in the wrong place.

Mr. HOOPER. The signatures upon these bonds are written.

Mr. BROOKS. No, sir, not a signature is written; they are all printed.

Mr. HOOPER. I understand differently. The printing was correct; but the Register signed his name where the Treasurer should have signed his.

Mr. BROOKS. In order to make the amendment perfect there should be added the words "as before directed."

Mr. HOOPER. There is no objection to that. The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HOOPER moved to amend section eight by inserting in the twelfth line, before the word "issues," the words "or equivalent;" so as to make the amendment read:

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue, upon such terms and under such regulations as he may from time to time prescribe, registered bonds in exchange for, and in lieu of, any coupon bonds which have been or may hereafter be lawfully issued; such registered bonds to be similar in all respects to the registered bonds issued under the acts authorizing the issue of the coupon bonds offered for exchange. And for all mutilated, defaced, or indorsed coupon or other bonds presented to the Department, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue, upon such terms and under regulations as aforesaid, and in substitution therefor, other bonds of like or equivalent issues.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER. I move to amend the eighth section by inserting after the word "due" the words "or presented for conversion under any act of Congress."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HOOPER. I move to amend further in the same section by inserting in the fifth line, after the word "corporations," the words "other than the person or corporation."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. HOOPER. I move to amend further the same section by inserting in the eighteenth line, after the word "indebtedness," the words "or direct the conversion of the same if convertible."

The amendment was adopted.

The section, as amended, reads:

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That whenever any bond, Treasury note, or certificate of indebtedness of the United States which shall be presented to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment, being due or presented for conversion under any act of Congress, shall be or shall have been claimed by any person or corporation other than the person or corporation in whose possession the same shall be, by filing a caveat with the Secretary of the Treasury against the payment of the same, the Secretary of the Treasury shall notify such claimant in writing of the fact of such presentation and require him within a reasonable time, to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, to commence proceedings for the adjudication of the claim before some court of competent jurisdiction, and to transmit a duly certified copy of the bill or complaint to the Secretary of the Treasury. And in case of the failure of such claimant to comply with such requirement, the Secretary of the Treasury shall make payment to the party in possession of and presenting such bond, Treasury note, or certificate of indebtedness, or direct the conversion of the same if convertible, as though no such contesting claim had been made or caveat filed. But this act shall not be construed to compel the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend the payment of coupons detached from bonds by whomsoever presented.

Mr. KERNAN. I will suggest that there should be an amendment in the twelfth line. The bill provides very properly that the person who makes claim for a bond outstanding which he may present, against which payment protest has been made, as I suppose, on the ground that it has been stolen or fraudulently obtained, "shall be required within a reasonable time, to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, to commence proceedings for the adjudication of the claim before some court of competent jurisdiction, and to transmit a duly certified copy of the bill or complaint to the Secretary of the Treasury." Now, I think there should be inserted after the word "jurisdiction," and I move to insert the words, "and to give satisfactory security to pay any damages occasioned by delay of payment and costs of suit." I think that should be made in order to prevent persons from making fictitious claims from malicious motives to prevent the payment of sums properly due.

The amendment was agreed to.

Section ten was read, as follows:

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the necessary expenses of engraving, printing, preparing, and issuing the United States notes, Treasury notes, fractional notes, and bonds, hereby authorized, and of disposing of the same to subscribers and purchasers, shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; but the whole amount thereof shall not exceed one per cent. on the amount of notes and bonds issued.

Mr. BROOKS. I wish to call the attention of the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts to the last clause of that section, which says that the whole amount to be paid for the printing of these bonds shall not exceed one per cent. upon the whole amount issued. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts is a little at a loss in his figures here. One per cent. upon $400,000,000 would be $4,000,000, or for the $600,000,000 which in the aggregate is provided for in the bill, there is an amount of $6,000,000 set apart to pay the cost of printing. Now, I can hardly believe the gentleman intended to set apart so large a sum for that purpose.

Mr. HOOPER. That is as it came from the Department. I had not particularly examined that clause.

Mr. BROOKS. I hope the gentleman will move to reduce the percentage, and will give me the credit of being a useful watch-dog of the Treasury.

Mr. HOOPER. I will then move to strike out the latter clause of the section altogether and leave it at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BROOKS. Oh, no; I hope not. Whatever confidence I may have in the Secretary of the Treasury I would prefer that there should be some limit to these expenses.

Mr. HOOPER. On looking further at the section I will withdraw my amendment altogether. I see that it provides for not only the expenses but all costs of issue and sale, which may amount to perhaps one per cent. I understood the gentleman from New York to say that it was for printing only, and I made my proposition rather upon the gentleman's statement instead of reading the section itself.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, this becomes a most serious matter, and I call the attention of the House to it. The other day in an appropriation bill we appropriated $440,000, in the very last appropriation bill which went through this House, for the printing of public money. I thought that that sum would be sufficient, but here in this section turns up a provision for the necessary expenses of engraving, printing, preparing, and issuing the United States notes, Treasury notes, fractional notes, and bonds, the whole amount whereof is not to exceed one per cent. on the amount of notes and bonds issued. I repeat that there are $400,000,000 of bonds to be issued under this bill; there are $425,760,750 to be issued under the third section of this act; and $84,401,499 to be appropriated as payment of the temporary loan of $150,000,000. For issuing those we put at the disposition of the Secretary of the Treasury $6,000,000; for printing Treasury notes one per cent. upon $400,000,000 is not $400,000, but $4,000,000.

Mr. ASHLEY. This is not only for engraving and printing, but for all the expenses attending them; for disposing of the same to subscribers and purchasers, &c.

Mr. BROOKS. Is it to be that much, $4,000,000 for $400,000,000? I will print the public money for one half of that price. If you will remove all of the penalties I will print it for one tenth, and give $1,000,000 for the privilege. I think that the first impulse of the gentleman from Massachusetts was right. Let us understand whether the expense of printing $400,000,000 is to be $4,000,000.

Mr. ASHLEY. It is not that much for printing; it is $4,000,000 for all the expenses.

Mr. BROOKS. Is it to be $4,000,000?

Mr. ASHLEY. Does the gentleman know of any way of procuring loans for less than one per cent.?

Mr. BROOKS. If gentlemen are disposed to put $4,000,000 in this section let it be understood. Let the record be made. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Or if any person shall print, photograph, or in any other manner make or execute, or cause to be printed, photographed, or in any manner made or executed, or shall aid in printing, photographing, making, or executing any engraving, photograph, or other print or impression in the likeness or similitude of any obligation or other security, or any part or parts thereof, or shall vend or sell any such engraving, photograph, print, or other impression, except to the United States, or shall bring into the United States from any foreign place any such engraving, photograph, print, or other impression, except by the direction of some proper officer of the United States, or shall have or retain in his custody or possession, after a distinctive paper shall have been adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury for obligations and other securities of the United States, any similar paper adapted to the making of any such obligation or other security, except under authority of the Secretary of the Treasury or some other proper officer of the United States, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment and confinement at hard labor, not exceeding fifteen years, or by both, according to the aggravation of the offense.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. I move to strike out the words "according to the aggravation of the offense," and insert in lieu thereof these words, "in the discretion of the court." I do that for this reason: according to the bill there is no mode of determining the degree of aggravation, and the whole thing is left to the discretion of the court, and with that discretion it should be invested by the terms of the act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That if any person having control, custody, or possession of any plate or plates from which any obligation or other security, or any part thereof, shall have been printed, or which shall have been prepared for the purpose of printing any such obligation or other security, or any part thereof, shall use such plate or plates, or knowingly suffer the same to be used for the purpose of printing any such or similar obligation or other security, or any part thereof, &c.

Mr. ASHLEY moved to insert after the word "prepared" these words, "under direction from the Treasury Department."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. I move to strike out the words "or shall print, or cause to be printed, any letters, figures, or devices with green ink, or with any green color or pigment." I move this amendment for this reason: it is well known in many portions of this country the banks, for a long time past, have printed their notes with this green color. They have gone to great expense to circulate notes of that character; and I think that it would be unjust and oppressive to those institutions to prohibit the use of the notes now existing or which may hereafter be issued.

I do not believe that this is necessary for the protection of the Government. The United States notes are engraved and prepared in a way dissimilar from those issued by State authority. The Government has the entire control of the mode in which these notes are prepared, and this bill provides for the punishment of those who imitate it. The words I propose to strike out are not necessary, and will only operate oppressively upon these institutions.

Mr. BROOKS. The banks of New York and Pennsylvania which have been printing their notes in this green color are to be subjected to heavy penalties under this bill. It is the same species of legislation that took place on the gold bill the other day, in which it was enacted that any person who deals in foreign exchange or gold, shall be subjected to a large fine, and if not paid, consigned instantly to prison. There is consistency in this legislation. A large portion of the circulation of New York, and all the circulation of the Pennsylvania new free banking system is in greenback notes; and I would like to see some Pennsylvanians and New Yorkers tried and convicted for circulating them as currency, and some of them doomed to hard labor, some of them to ten years' imprisonment and a fine of $10,000. There is nothing like consistency in legislation whenever you enter upon this system of legislation in regard to colors, or anything of that kind. By and by you will prohibit ladies from wearing green shawls, green bonnets, or green articles of any kind whatever.

I insist upon it, as it is necessary for me to oppose the amendment, that our legislation throughout be consistent from the beginning to the end; and we are indebted to the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts for his consistency. It is of the same sort and character of his gold bill, and should receive the same sort of support and encouragement. It is legislation against public intercourse, public feeling, public duty, public customs, public fashions, and public and private rights; and to be consistent this legislation should be thoroughly carried out. I am therefore opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill having been read through, the committee returned to the consideration of the second section of the bill, passed over informally, the pending amendment being the following substitute for the section offered by Mr. POMEROY:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury may issue, upon the credit of the United States, bonds of any denomination not less than $100, payable in lawful money three years from the date thereof, and bearing interest not exceeding eight per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually in lawful money, and may receive at par therefor the lawful money of the United States; Treasury notes, certificates of indebtedness, or certificates of deposit issued under any act of Congress. And the Secretary of the Treasury, in addition to the total amounts of bonds authorized by the first and second sections of this act, shall issue at par, in redemption of any outstanding notes, certificates of deposit, or certificates of indebtedness of the United States, bonds similar to those hereinbefore in this second section authorized, in denominations of not less than $100, or of like denominations similar to those authorized by the first section, and payable five years from date, with interest at six per cent., payable semi-annually. And the Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized to issue, in lieu of any bonds heretofore authorized by law, and not now issued in pursuance thereof, bonds similar to and in the denominations hereby authorized. All outstanding notes, other than United States notes, shall cease to be a legal tender in payment of public or private indebtedness on and after the 1st day of October, 1864. And no notes, other than United States notes, shall hereafter be issued or reissued. Nor shall the total amount of United States notes issued or to be issued ever exceed $400,000,000, and such additional sum, not exceeding $50,000,000, as may be temporarily required for the redemption of temporary loan.

Mr. POMEROY. As this proposed substitute embraces several propositions, I will submit to the House at this time barely a statement of the points of difference between the two sections.

Before proceeding to such statement I will ask permission to make one or two verbal amendments, and to call the attention of those who were not in the last Congress and may not have had their attention directed to it to the technical meaning of the words "United States notes" and "Treasury notes." I desire to insert after the word "outstanding," where it occurs in my amendment in line twenty-two, the word "Treasury," so that it shall read "outstanding Treasury notes." I also desire to strike out "notes," where it first occurs in line twenty-six, and insert in lieu thereof the words "Treasury notes made legal tender;" so that it will read, "and no Treasury notes made legal tender other than United States notes shall hereafter be issued or reissued."

For the information of the House I will say that by a law of last Congress the original non-interest-bearing greenbacks were denominated "United States notes," and all others "Treasury notes."

The amendments were agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. POMEROY. I believe the substitute I have offered brings directly before the House the whole substantial difference of opinion upon the subject of the issue of these bonds and Treasury notes. The policy to be adopted in the negotiation of loans first arose two years ago, in reference to the bonds authorized by the act of February, 1862. The Committee of Ways and Means then recommended to the House a loan of $500,000,000 upon five-twenty six per cent. bonds, the interest to be payable in legal-tender notes. The Senate amended it, and the bill came back with the interest payable in coin. That amendment was concurred in by the House, and from that day to this I believe that has been conceded by the Secretary of the Treasury, by the Committee of Ways and Means of this House, and by the whole country, to be the established financial policy of this country in raising money. At that time I took occasion to make some remarks to the House upon that question, in favor of proceeding upon the gold basis as to our bonds, and I adhere now to the statements I made then. There is no mode by which the Government can raise money except through loans and through taxation. It cannot make money any more than I can make it. The legal-tender notes then authorized were a simple loan without interest, necessarily made to serve the purposes of currency by the exigencies of the time, protected from depreciation by convertibility into bonds, and were thus made an available instrument in conducting the finances of the country, and have since remained and still are so.

But there must be a limit to this issue of paper by the Government, and the principle on which the Government should act is to make such a limit, and to prevent now and forever the issue of the hybrid legal-tender notes, such as are authorized by the second section of the original bill, paying interest, and still made a legal tender for their face, which, I believe, have produced more financial disaster within the last six months than any one thing that has occurred.

The principal difference between the original section and the substitute which I propose is that the latter prohibits the further issue of any Treasury notes made legal tender other than the non-interest-bearing United States notes. The original section authorizes the issue of $200,000,000 in Treasury notes to run not exceeding three years at seven and three tenths per cent. interest, the interest to be accumulated, or to be made payable semi-annually, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury; and if the interest is accumulated, then such notes to be legal tender at their face for all purposes, except the redemption of the currency of national banks. In effect, the Secretary of the Treasury may further inflate the currency by $200,000,000 more of this mongrel interest-bearing paper.

Now, the amendment I have proposed provides in place of that the issue of bonds of any denomination not less than $100, to run three years, and at a rate of interest not exceeding eight per cent., payable, principal and interest, in the paper currency of the country, to be issued in redemption of the outstanding interest-bearing Treasury notes, and the other outstanding floating indebtedness of the Government.

It also withdraws all authority from the Secretary of the Treasury to issue or reissue any Treasury notes made legal tender other than the United States notes; that is, it confines him to the "old original genuine Dr. Townsend" greenbacks. It authorizes further the substitution of these bonds for other bonds authorized by other acts and not yet issued, if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, it shall be deemed advisable. It further provides that all outstanding Treasury notes other than United States shall cease to be a legal tender from and after the 1st day of October next. The time is immaterial only that some definite time be fixed. The substitute finally provides that the entire amount of United States notes issued or to be issued shall be limited to $450,000,000. This latter provision is the same as contained in the original section.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the success of the loan authorized by the acts of February and July, 1863, commonly known as the five-twenties, which were six per cent. gold-interest-paying bonds, was unprecedented. The world has hardly ever seen a popular loan thus taken. When Congress met in December last the Treasury was being fully supplied, and so eagerly were the bonds sought after that when the entire amount of $500,000,000 had been taken, before the telegraph with lightning speed could bring the announcement home to the people that the loan was exhausted, more than $10,000,000 additional had accumulated in the various agencies authorized to receive subscriptions, requiring subsequent action by this Congress to enable the Government to furnish these additional bonds; and the condition of the Treasury was so easy that you, Mr. Chairman, will recollect that the Secretary of the Treasury was enabled to advance money from the Treasury to prevent a financial crisis in New York.

How is it now? I ask the question of gentlemen around me and of gentlemen upon the other side of the House, for I am speaking of a matter in which we have all a common interest. However much we may differ upon other subjects, I take it that we all agree upon one thing at least, that the credit of the Government must be maintained. This Congress has been in session seven months, and yet no tax bill has been sent to the President for his signature; and during all that time the receipts from taxation have been the merest pittance of our expenditures. This Congress has been in session seven months, and yet in that time no money to any amount has been received into the Treasury from permanent loan except about $70,000,000 at par from the ten-forty five per cents.; and deficiencies have been largely made up by the issue of these hybrid interest-bearing legal-tender Treasury notes. This condition of things has been well known to Congress. The Secretary of the Treasury is not the party to blame for it. He cannot collect taxes which we have not authorized him to levy. We have no right to ask him to make brick without straw. The principal responsibility rests upon the shoulders of Congress by reason of the delay that has occurred in our legislation. For every hour speech that has been made during this session the Government has lost $1,000,000. It is this Congress that is responsible. The Secretary of the Treasury it but its agent. And if he has not been properly conducting the finances of the country, we have known from day to day, and from week to week, and from month to month how he has been conducting them; and it was for us to bring him to account and to establish the policy on which the finances of the country should be conducted.

Deceived by the great success of the popular loan, the Secretary of the Treasury was in my opinion lured into a great mistake, but a mistake which we might at any time have corrected. Instead of following on in the wake of that prosperous loan with another like it, an attempt was made to reduce the rate of interest to five per cent., and the result has been that, money not being procurable at five per cent., an issue of $150,000,000 additional of legal-tender currency has been made necessary. And there being no taxation adequate to sustain our large expenditures on which to base the national credit, it is no wonder that yesterday on the streets of New York it was hard to tell whether gold was worth 210 or 250. The people as well as the Government have rights involved in this question. Commercial men, manufacturers, all classes of business men, stand aghast at the presentation by us of such a condition of our finances. We have been told, and we have believed, that that was a successful financial plan which was based upon taxation sufficient to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government, and to lay up a small sinking fund to meet the accumulated debt. It is not so; we cannot afford to issue bonds for a dollar of money for which the Treasury does not receive the value of a dollar in gold; and for all gold values funded into debt we can pay interest in gold. What are we doing to-day? For every dollar represented in the twenty year six per cent. loan, which has just been negotiated at a rate less than one hundred and six per cent. in paper, we will be paying, in the legal currency of the country, an annual interest of twenty-four per cent. Calling gold worth two to one of paper, we receive fifty dollars in gold for every $100 borrowed in paper. On that we are to pay six per cent. in gold, which makes twelve per cent. on every $100 in gold, or twenty-four per cent. in paper currency. In other words, under the delusion of cheap money we in fact borrowed at a shave of fifty cents on the dollar of principal, and that at twelve per cent. interest, or at the rate of twenty-four per cent. in paper for every real dollar that we now get.

Now, I ask, can the country live under such a state of things? And I ask why is it? I say it is because, while in theory we established gold as a basis three years ago, we have departed from it in practice. And so I now contend that unless the theory thus established is to be followed up in practice, the theory proposed by the distinguished chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. SREYERS] is unquestionably the policy of the United States; that is, now and at once to repudiate and discard all obligation to pay interest and principal in coin, and to set afloat on the vast ocean of paper money. The gold dollar must be the standard of value, or there can be none, and unless the amount of paper circulation can be proximately fixed, and its value ascertained by that standard, how can taxation be graduated to meet the wants of the Government? Unless the value of the thing in which the tax is to be paid is reasonably ascertained, how can the tax itself be adjusted?

Mr. Chairman, it is still in our power, with the exercise of only ordinary wisdom and ordinary statesmanship, to carry ourselves back over the financial misfortunes of the past seven months to a safe and successful basis. But, Mr. Chairman, in order to do it we must go in practice as well as theory back to the gold basis which was then established. I am myself for fighting the devil with fire, for fighting gold with gold, and not with paper, and for going back to a gold basis; I do not mean a resumption of specie payment, but that every dollar of funded debt shall represent a gold equivalent received by the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. POMEROY. I move to amend, pro forma, by striking out the last line. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that the present price of gold is not the result of speculation. It may have been aggravated by it. It is the result of the want of wisdom in ourselves in not adhering to the theory which we originally proposed to the people. It is not to be encountered and put down with gold bills, by female dress-reform associations, or old-clothes societies. It is to be met and to be overcome by other instrumentalities. The fact of the notes proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means being legal tenders does not add one single iota to their value. We have already $800,000,000 of banking and national paper in circulation, and you may pour $200,000,000 more into it and it is worth no more; you may pour in all that the Treasury can issue from this time on to the end of the year and the whole aggregate will be worth no more. The $800,000,000 is worth only its equivalent in gold. You cannot contend against it except as you take hold of natural laws as strong as the laws of trade themselves, and meet it by a power equal to the power which is already shattering our credit.

I say further, that no nation ever did and no nation ever will pay an indebtedness accumulating at the depreciation at which our indebtedness is accruing at this day. If we are to save our credit we are to save it, as I said before, by getting a dollar's worth of commodities for the Government for every dollar's worth of bonds we issue, and if we cannot do it directly then we must redeem or repudiate the excess of paper money—I care not by which name you call it—through vigorous and energetic taxation. No matter whether it be $100,000,000 or $500,000,000, the excess of paper money over the wants of the Government must be persistently taxed out of existence. The act of the rebel congress which excited the horse laughter of the whole North, by which they repudiated through taxation the whole of their national currency was the highest act of statesmanship that I have yet seen as emanating from that confederate congress. We must follow pro tanto their example, or eventually we must follow it in tanto.

What I maintain, therefore, is, that these disturbing interest-bearing legal tenders which are not needed for circulation, and which were issued in the hope and expectation that they never would get into circulation, shall be retired at the earliest practicable moment, and the limit named by the Secretary of $450,000,000 of greenbacks be fixed definitely. Then Congress can lay a tax with some expectation as to what will be produced by it, and should lay a tax sufficient not only to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government and lay up a small sinking fund, but also sufficient to pay so much of the extraordinary expenses as shall leave the funded debt to represent an actual equivalent received in gold. The credit of the country will thus be maintained to the extent of its whole resources, and those resources are not yet exhausted nor even impaired.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is only one other point to which I wish to call attention. One other provision in my proposed amendment is to compel the Secretary of the Treasury on demand to fund into the eight per cent. currency bonds or into the five years six per cent. gold bonds the whole floating indebtedness of the United States. Anybody who holds indebtedness of the United States may then fund it into these securities. It does not leave it discretionary with him. I believe, and I have believed at all times since the original five-twenty bonds were taken, that there was the wealth in the country to take $500,000,000 more of them as fast as they were needed, and that with a decent measure of taxation prepared in decent time the credit of the Government would have been sustained and gold would now have been below 150. I need not dwell upon the effects of the present inflation. The wealth of the country is in great part a fictitious wealth. There is no wealth except through production. So far as the production of the country has been stimulated by this war, so far we have grown rich, and no further. But that is not the wealth that is spoiling the country to-day. It is a wealth made out of the rise of property through inflation, through the loss of harmony between supply and demand caused by the disjointed nature of the times, and through anticipation of a tax which must be almost universally extended if this Congress ever does its business and goes home. It is, I say, in a national sense, to a large extent a fictitious wealth. Why, every merchant that had a year ago a stock of goods of the value of $50,000 in his store might better have turned the key in his door and gone fishing for a year than have sold his goods at the current rates. The advance through loss of supply, inflation, and the fear of taxation has actually raised the price of the goods more than he could have made on them by attending to his ordinary and legitimate business; but no national wealth has been thereby created; and so of the great mass of commodities, foreign and domestic. Through inflation of values from these various causes many individuals have, of course, made great gain, but the home consumer pays it. We are dealing with questions of national wealth and resources.

In conclusion of all I would like to say upon this question at this time, I ask to have read from the Clerk's desk an editorial from the New York Evening Post of April 29, 1864, because it condenses much matter into a small space, more than I could hope to utter from my position on the floor. I need not say that in its arguments I most fully concur.

The Clerk read, as follows:

"THE NATIONAL FINANCES.—It is rarely that in the complicated questions of finance the judgment of the public is so nearly unanimous as in the existing condition of things. The question is one involving momentous interests to the Government and the people. Shall there be maintained an inflation of currency and prices and a consequent depreciation of paper such as will make five per cent. gold bonds relatively valuable enough to be taken by the people? Or shall we have an issue of six per cent. bonds with a contraction of the currency and a reduction of prices? "The latter policy is clearly the safe, conservative, and economical one. When the subscription to the last six per cent. loan of four hundred millions was so triumphantly filled up, so great was the eagerness of the people for the bonds that the offerings greatly exceeded the required amount. Had the Secretary of the Treasury then called for subscriptions for two hundred millions more, payable in such installments as would meet his wants—say an average of two millions per day—the whole would have been taken in a week and the inflation would have been avoided, the banks, the currency, prices, and speculation, all would have been held under the steady curb of a constant demand for 'greenbacks' wherewith to make the payments, and the Secretary might have gone on his way rejoicing, printing his bonds, and like a skillful banker reissuing his currency without increasing it.

"An opposite policy has been pursued, with the most honorable purposes, but with what alarming results the people, and none more than the Secretary, see and feel. This country can carry from one hundred and sixty to two hundred millions of bank paper. The lower limit is one of moderate and safe movement in finance and commerce; the higher indicates panic and revulsion. Forty millions is about the range of variation of the bank paper currency.

"Now, with these standards let us attempt to measure the movement of the last three months. To the enormous amount of about four hundred and seventy millions of paper money already outstanding, there has been added in this short period one hundred and fifteen millions of 'legal tender,' making an aggregate of nearly six hundred millions of 'paper money' afloat, besides the now expanded bank circulation, estimated at two hundred millions, making in all not less than eight hundred millions of paper currency. Now, allowing two hundred and fifty millions of this sum to replace an equal estimated amount of gold coin 'demonetized,' and we have still five hundred and fifty millions of paper money, or fully three times the amount under which the banks can maintain specie payments in ordinary times.

"An expansion of one hundred and fifteen millions before the war would have broken all the banks in the Union. Under the 'legal tender' law the effect can only be shown by depreciation of the paper, under the misnomer of the rise in gold.

"How futile it is to magnify the expansions of the banks, speculations in gold, and other minor causes into importance, when these are consequences chiefly of this one cause! Without the over-issue of Government paper, and with bonds valuable enough to absorb the excess of money, bank expansions and over-importation would have been restrained and gold speculation comparatively harmless. Laws to regulate these, sales of gold by the Treasury, and other expedients will at most accomplish no more than they aim at; but they will not reach the grand source of our difficulty. With such an over-issue it is an unprecedented marvel that our paper money should retain so high a value as sixty cents on the dollar. It could not be but for the master power which Congress has so wisely put in the hands of the Secretary—that of funding into gold-bearing bonds. Yet the peculiar value of that power which lies in the ability to limit and regulate the inevitable though baneful paper money, and to keep it near to the value of gold, Mr. Chase seems indisposed to appreciate at its true worth. The natural idea of economizing in interest on an enormous debt, and the delusion that a low rate of interest proves a high credit, (even when the bonds are virtually sold at sixty cents on the dollar,) have been allowed to overcome considerations of far greater moment.

"Let us attempt a demonstration. The saving of one per cent. per annum in interest on the loan of two hundred millions now in the market would amount in five years to about ten millions. Now, pending the issue of these bonds, at least one hundred and fifteen millions of 'legal tender' were put out, no part of which need to have been issued if a six per cent. bond had been immediately offered to the eager public. The great advance in prices during this issue is universally recognized. In gold and many other things that advance is not less than twenty or twenty-five per cent. Now, suppose the average increase of the expenses of the war consequent upon this over-issue should be ten per cent. The loss on one year's expenses (estimated at one thousand millions) would be one hundred millions, against a saving of ten millions in interest. In other words, the loss in increased expenses would be nearly equal to the whole issue. And the nation would have so much added to its ultimate debt without being able to put 'for value received' into its bonds. And that is the whole case. Beyond a certain point, increase of paper makes no increase of resources, but only piles up debt. That point was passed long ago by the confederates; it has been reached by ourselves. Further increase is simply pouring water into a full pail.

"When Congress gave Mr. Chase the power to make and issue irredeemable paper money, it gave a power which no man and no Government ever yet kept within safe limits. It is almost universally conceded that Mr. Chase has, thus far, and in the main, exercised his powers with splendid ability. But the nation feels and says through the press that it is time to stop. On the one hand Mr. Chase should cease to extend his issues; on the other, Congress should revoke the power and require the funding of all but the greenbacks. The total bank circulation, old and new, should be limited, during the suspension of specie payments, to two hundred millions, that being all that experience shows the country can hold. After resumption, laws stronger than those of Congress will bring them within that limit.

"It is not too late yet to issue a six per cent. bond, allowing an exchange on fair terms to those who have taken the five per cents. Let that be payable by installments as wanted, and the money market and the price of gold will be taken care of by those who know how to do it. Consistency does not require Mr. Chase to persevere in a wrong course, nor does patriotism require the people to help him. Without a change the inflation must be kept up, gold will go higher, and we shall have Mr. Chase back in Wall street to scare away the evil spirit he himself has raised."

MR. POMEROY. I now withdraw my amendment.

MR. HOOPER. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York will not be adopted. I think there is a great deal of danger in accepting amendments in this hasty way to a bill that has been prepared as this has been, at the Treasury Department, with the greatest care and anxiety. I know myself that the Secretary of the Treasury has had sleepless nights over this bill, in considering and preparing its details, and now it is proposed to take a section hastily prepared, and probably without much more reflection than the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIS] to the thirteenth section just now, and which, I am sure, the House would not have adopted if they had understood the effect of it. I wish to call attention to that amendment for a moment, to illustrate the evil of such hasty legislation here, and of the attempts to carry on the Treasury Department by the members upon this floor who have given no special attention to the subject. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIS] was to strike out, in the seventeenth and eighteenth lines, the words "or shall print, or cause to be printed, any letters, figures, or devices with green ink, or with any green color or pigment," which has been adopted. As the section now reads, with those words stricken out, it is felony for any one to print, or to cause to be printed, any letter, or figures, pictures or devices, or anything to be used as the representative of value, and intended to be circulated and used for currency, except at the Treasury Department. It will be a felony for any one hereafter, if this becomes a law, to print any bank note except at the Treasury Department, and all the State banks hereafter must come here to the Treasury Department to procure their circulating notes. Now, I cannot believe the House intended to pass such a law; but they must have been dazzled and misled by the eloquence of the gentleman from New York when they adopted his amendment, and I trust he will not insist upon retaining it.

I fear the consequences of the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. POMEROY] would be far more objectionable. He says that each speech made in this House costs the country $1,000,000. But if the effect of his speech should be to induce the House to adopt his amendment in place of the carefully-prepared section of the bill, I fear it will cost the country a great many million dollars. If the gentleman is not more familiar with finance than with figures there will be some danger in adopting his recommendation. He says that the interest on a six per cent. bond of $100, when bought for fifty dollars in gold, the interest being payable in gold, gives twenty-four per cent. for the annual interest.

MR. POMEROY. I said at par of gold for the bond.

MR. HOOPER. I do not understand that. By no arithmetic that I know of can I get more than twelve per cent. out of it. I will not detain the House, however, but I hope that the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to reply to some of the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and for that purpose I move to strike out the last word of the pending amendment.

He wishes to give to this bill the sanction of the Treasury Department. I hold in my hand three distinct bills which came from the Committee of Ways and Means. I wish to know which of them has the sanction of the Treasury Department? Here is a bill introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOOPER,] from the Committee of Ways and Means, which was printed and laid upon our tables, but afterwards withdrawn. Here is another bill, June 20th—

Mr. HOOPER. I never withdrew the first bill I offered. It was not from the committee, but I had it printed and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. BROOKS. Which one has the sanction of the Treasury?

Mr. HOOPER. The original bill came from the Treasury Department, and was concurred in by the Committee of Ways and Means, with some amendments, mostly of a verbal character. The present printed bill is the same one received from the Secretary as it was reported from that committee.

Mr. BROOKS. Has the bill the gentleman introduced here the sanction of the Committee of Ways and Means, and that of the Secretary of the Treasury been repudiated?

Mr. HOOPER. The bill of the Secretary has not been repudiated, as I before stated; it is the bill which has been reported back from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. BROOKS. The bill reported back has two or three additional sections.

Mr. HOOPER. There are several verbal alterations, and a new section in reference to claims for bonds that have been lost or stolen, to protect the rightful owners.

Mr. BROOKS. These are essential changes, as gentlemen will find by examining them.

Mr. HOOPER. I ask the gentleman to point out one essential change.

Mr. BROOKS. Here is one bill from the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. HOOPER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; there is no such bill.

Mr. BROOKS. Here is one from Mr. STEVENS, chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. HOOPER. Does he report it as chairman of that committee?

Mr. BROOKS. He reports it as Mr. STEVENS, and he is chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman refers to House bill No. 515?

Mr. BROOKS. I do.

Mr. STEVENS. That was presented as an amendment I intended to the bill reported by my colleague on the Committee of Ways and Means. I did not agree to the bill as reported, and that was the amendment I gave notice I would offer.

Mr. BROOKS. What I mean to say is that here are three bills from the Committee of Ways and Means. The gentleman from Massachusetts represents that his has the sanction of the Treasury Department.

Mr. SPALDING. I insist that the gentleman shall confine himself to his amendment.

Mr. BROOKS. When members are fairly discussing measures they ought not to be interrupted. I will not detain the House longer.

The question recurring on the amendment to the amendment,

Mr. BROOKS withdrew his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. POMEROY called for tellers on his amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. POMEROY and Mr. HOOPER were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 42.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER moved that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 540) to provide ways and means for the support of the Government, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House, with sundry amendments.

Mr. STEVENS. I now offer the amendment of which I gave notice in committee yesterday. It is to amend the first section by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof what I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to borrow, from time to time, on the credit of the United States, $400,000,000, for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865, and to issue therefor coupon or registered bonds of the United States, redeemable, at the pleasure of the Government, after any period not less than twenty nor more than thirty years, and, if deemed expedient, made payable at any period not more than forty years from date, payable in coin. And said bonds shall be of such denominations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct, not less than fifty dollars, and bear an annual interest not exceeding eight per cent., payable semi-annually, and the interest on all bonds heretofore issued, payable annually, may be paid semi-annually; and in lieu of such bond, authorized to be issued, the Secretary of the Treasury may issue bonds, bearing interest, payable semi-annually. And the Secretary of the Treasury may dispose of such bonds, or any part thereof, in the United States, or, if he shall find it expedient, in Europe, at any time, on such terms as he may deem most advisable, for lawful money of the United States, or, at his discretion, for Treasury notes, certificates of indebtedness, or certificates of deposit issued under any act of Congress. And he may also issue in exchange for Treasury notes heretofore issued bearing seven and three tenths per cent. interest, besides the six per cent. bonds heretofore authorized, like bonds of the denomination of $100 and of $50. And all bonds, Treasury notes, and other obligations of the United States shall be exempt from taxation by or under State or municipal authority.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a point of order. It is based upon the 110th rule, which provides that "No motion or proposition for a tax or charge upon the people shall be discussed the day on which it is made or offered; and every such proposition shall receive its first discussion in a Committee of the Whole House."

If anything can be regarded as a charge upon the people, it would be a loan of $400,000,000.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana under the rule which he has read.

Mr. STEVENS. What tax is laid in this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that the five, six, or seven million dollars of loans authorized by the amendment is a charge upon the people.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the only object I have in raising the point of order is to get a direct vote upon the proposition with reference to the taxation of these securities by the States. If the gentleman is willing that a direct vote shall be taken upon that in the House, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union in order to introduce my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not in the Committee of the Whole. It is now in the House. The gentleman can move to recommit the bill to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STEVENS. I make that motion for the purpose I have indicated, and I would inquire if that motion is debatable.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. STEVENS. I am taken somewhat by surprise by the ruling of the Chair, which, however, I suppose is right; but I suppose I can say what I desire to say upon this motion. I did desire to make one more effort, probably the last I shall ever make upon this subject, for the purpose of arresting what I believe to be the rapid downward course to absolute ruin of our system of currency.

I say I suppose it will be the last, for even if I should happen to survive and be here again, if we do not make the arrest now in our progress, we shall have sunk so deep into this "Avernus" that no prudent man would venture to thrust down his hand to pluck us out. In my judgment, all the difficulties which we are now encountering, from the high price of gold and consequently the high price of everything, has arisen from the cause sustained by the gentleman from New York who criticised it so freely this morning, and still adheres to, though by his amendment he seems to have contradicted his own theory.

Let me say, while I am upon this point, that the Committee of Ways and Means feel thankful for the censorship of the learned and able gentleman who has rebuked them this morning. He supposes that our calamities result from the tardy reporting of the taxation measure. Now, at the very commencement of the session the committee reported a bill which, if it had been adopted here, would have given us before this time $10,000,000 of revenue, and that bill was retarded more than two months by those gentlemen who resisted its passage because they were anxious to put a tax on what they call "stock on hand."

Mr. POMEROY. I was not one of them.

Mr. STEVENS. The committee then went on to the general taxation bill, and though I arrogate to myself no part of the credit for their labors, yet the committee generally labored more hours in the day by one half than any committee of this House has ever labored on any other occasion. Seldom did some of them go to bed until twelve o'clock at night. They may not have been rapid workmen, but there were large interests to be examined and more than a hundred committees to listen to before they acted. Of course they did no business before the holidays because there was no time, but coming here in January they reported that voluminous bill in March, and they not only reported it, but passed it, and sent it in that month to the Senate. It is not the fault of the committee if the bill has not finally passed yet. They have done their best according to their ability, and, sir, I shall rejoice, when the gentleman from New York shall be deemed competent to take charge of the business of that committee, to find him laboring more hours and laboring more wisely than the present unfortunate committee, if, in the course of divine Providence, that time shall ever come.

But, sir, I will now proceed at once to the proposition which is before the House. I believe that all our financial troubles arise from the extraordinary demand for gold when gold is not the currency of the country, and the business of the country does not produce it to pay the taxation of the country. I thought so from the first, although it looks like tautology to repeat it every time when this question comes up.

When the Committee of Ways and Means and the House first framed a system of finance which was to continue during the war it consisted of two branches. It provided first for the issue of legal-tender notes. It must be remembered that in the preceding December all the banks of the country had gone into suspension, and there was nothing in circulation but the irredeemable currency of the banks. The committee deemed it wise that the Government currency should be the currency of the nation under these circumstances, because there would be more confidence in its final redemption, and because the profits of the interest would in the mean time inure to the benefit of the nation instead of to the benefit of the banks. Any one who remembers the terrible crisis through which we passed in 1862 knows that the banks had not only ceased to pay specie even for the last loan of $50,000,000, which was taken upon a specie basis, but that they refused, and that the people refused to lend another dollar payable in anything. We were driven, therefore, to this terrible necessity which is so censured in this House by the wise men in it; we were driven to the legal-tender system; and I venture to say that none has ever worked better in this or any other country. I supposed then, as I suppose yet, that specie payment will not be resumed for the next ten years to come at least. I could not help remembering what history taught us, that during the great Napoleonic war the Bank of England was authorized to suspend, and did suspend her specie payment about 1796, and never resumed it until 1822, seven or eight years after the termination of that war; and who looks for a more speedy resumption of specie payment in this country has not well studied history, and, in my judgment, is doomed to be disappointed.

Then, sir, having taken upon ourselves the responsibility of issuing legal-tender notes as the currency of the country, when it was proposed to make a difference between those who dealt in Government bonds and those who dealt in lands and other bonds, this House, when the vote was first taken, by a majority of thirty-nine refused to entertain the monstrous proposition. It went to the Senate, and the New York brokers and gamblers and bankers came here and besieged all the branches of the Government, from the Secretary of the Treasury down, until they—I do not say corrupted their judgment, but influenced their judgment to introduce into that bill the fatal clause of paying interest in coin. That came back into this House, and notwithstanding the resistance of those who thought otherwise, it was admitted. Hence all our woes. At that moment we found it necessary, as a small palliation to the Government, to make the duties on imports payable in gold. That is a drop in the bucket. But it still creates a demand for the article to the amount of sixty or eighty million dollars a year, and merchants must buy it from the bullion brokers at their own price. And that amount increases from day to day and from year to year, from the fatal policy which sits like an incubus on this Congress and on this nation; and the price of gold is increasing in proportion, and will go on increasing, until this nation cannot bear the taxation to pay it, and will not bear the taxation to pay it. It is, therefore, to save us from the disgrace of inevitable repudiation that I make one more effort to save the national credit.

Sir, I feel a little on this subject, for I abhor repudiation, and I see it staring us in the face, at no great distance in the future, just as plainly as if I saw it here to-day, if this policy be continued any longer. Everybody will admit that if we had no demand for gold in this country there would be no rise in gold. Wherever there is no demand for an article it bears no value beyond its intrinsic value. Just as in proportion to the increasing demand will be the increasing rise, so in proportion to the smallness of the demand will be the fall in price. And he who charges this rise in gold to the Jews and gamblers in Wall street is but a shallow statesman. Before you undertake to correct that evil by some small salve spread over a raging cancer, before you can expect to regulate this evil by gold-selling and gold-prohibiting bills, you had better take away the demand for gold, for in no other way will you, in my judgment, depreciate gold one per cent.

What are we doing? If the construction of the law given by the Secretary of the Treasury be correct there is to-day a debt of $337,000,000 bearing interest in gold. That does not include the $75,000,000 lately bid for, which my amendment excepts, letting it be issued for immediate relief. In that sum, however, is included what the Secretary says is law, but what all the courts of the country say is not law; that is, that bonds given before the war, without any reference to coin, must be paid in coin. The Secretary has said, in a letter sent to the Clerk's desk the other day by the gentleman from Massachusetts, that their interest is payable in coin. Two months after the legal-tender bill was passed I was called upon by a constituent of mine to say whether a debt of $23,000 which he owed, and which was to be paid in gold, could be paid in legal-tender notes. I gave it as my opinion that it could be. He made the tender, and it was refused. A suit was then brought against him before the proper court in Philadelphia, and it was decided that the tender was an adequate one. It has been so decided in three, at least, of the States since then. In every case, except in one single insignificant nisi prius case in New York, it has been held that for all the transactions of this country legal tender was gold. I therefore place but little credit on the hasty opinions of the Secretary of the Treasury on a question of law where he is overruled by all the courts. I know it is contended by gentlemen who hold the old bonds that the interest must be paid in gold, because it enhances their value one hundred per cent.; but it is a fraud on the honest men of the country who have to pay it. There is no reason why a man who holds $20,000 in bonds issued in 1853 should be paid in gold, or in its equivalent, at the rate of two hundred per cent., any more than there is reason why I who now borrow money should be called upon to pay it in the same way. It is a perversion of the law. It is injustice to the people. It is a favor to a few moneyed men. I do not begrudge the money to the men who hold these bonds, but it is not their right.

Mr. SPALDING. I desire to ask the gentleman if in his judgment the principal of the $500,000,000 of five-twenty bonds is payable in gold?

Mr. STEVENS. It is just as clear as anything is clear that the interest is payable in gold, but the principal in lawful money.

Mr. SPALDING. I ask the gentleman if he knows whether that is the opinion of the head of the Treasury Department?

Mr. STEVENS. Well, sir, I have not consulted him. I know that a great many legal gentlemen of distinction agree with me in the opinion I have expressed. I suppose I should bow to the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject if I had it and it was right, but I have not.

Mr. PRUYN. I would like, with the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] whether he has any information that the Secretary of the Treasury has decided that the principal of the five-twenty bonds was payable in gold.

Mr. SPALDING. If I may be permitted to reply to the gentleman from New York I will say that I have this morning learned from the Secretary of the Treasury that in his opinion the principal of the five-twenty bonds is payable in gold.

Mr. STEVENS. Then, sir, his opinion is entirely different from the law. These bonds are made payable in money by the express terms of the law, and if legal-tender notes are money then the notes are payable in that. But, sir, if both principal and interest are payable in gold, then the difficulties in which the Government is becoming involved are all the more aggravated.

Mr. WILSON. Was not the statement just now made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania based upon the payment of these five-twenties in gold?

Mr. STEVENS. Upon the payment of the interest in gold. There is no doubt that the interest is payable in gold.

Mr. WILSON. I speak of the principal. I understood the gentleman to say that there were now about eight hundred million dollars of the public debt payable in gold.

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir; the interest is payable in gold. I say that no man who is a lawyer—and I could not say that the Secretary of the Treasury is not a lawyer—who will carefully read the law can possibly come to any other conclusion than that the principal of these five-twenty bonds is payable in currency. The law says expressly that the interest is payable in coin and that the principal is payable in money. The difference in the terms employed is as distinct and definite as if it had been, in so many words, that one is payable in coin and the other in paper currency.

But, sir, I will proceed. I was remarking that we have already $800,000,000 funded on which we have pledged the Government to pay the interest in coin. With the floating or outstanding indebtedness the entire amount for which the Government is to become obligated at the present day is from $1,700,000,000 to $2,000,000,000. And I repeat that if the war goes on for two years our indebtedness will be $4,000,000,000. It cannot be a dollar less. Instead then of having $50,000,000 interest payable in gold we shall have $240,000,000 annually. And I put the question to the House whether if when we have $50,000,000 payable in gold the brokers can put us in their power and run the price of gold up to two for one for money, what may we expect when instead of $800,000,000 on which we have to pay interest we have $4,000,000,000?

Some two years ago I said in this House, very much to the dissatisfaction of some of my friends, that within two years this gold-bearing interest system would bring the price of gold to 175, and that before another year it would go up to 200. It was said then that I was discouraging the people. Sir, I was telling what I supposed to be the truth, and what is now history. I repeat the question, that if this result occurs when we have only $50,000,000 interest payable in gold beside, what is required for importation, what may we expect when we shall have $240,000,000? Why, sir, it will go to three hundred per cent., which will give $720,000,000 in currency to be raised by taxation besides the $100,000,000 which will be necessary to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government, and this you will have in two years from this time. You will have $820,000,000 to pay without reducing the indebtedness of the country one cent, and this to be raised by taxation of the people.

Now, sir, no man will pretend that a nation of twenty million people impoverished by war can bear such a taxation as that. There is not any man here so sanguine as to suppose or expect for a moment that the people will bear it. The loan lately offered, the ten-forties, is made payable in coin, principal and interest. It is the only one issued since 1861 where the principal is made payable in coin. The interest, as I said before, is at present made so. In the bill we are acting on, the principal is payable in money, whatever that money may be.

Now what I propose is this, that we shall reverse this and make the interest payable in currency and the principal in coin by express words. We cannot raise coin now, for there is no circulation of it now. We can pay in currency, and it will answer all the purposes of life as well as gold. We can use it to buy land and everything else—to be sure at a high price, but everything is high now, and this will answer all purposes. The principal, twenty years hence, the holder is to receive in solid money. If the owner dies he leaves to his heirs an amount in gold equal to the amount he paid in paper money. In my judgment these bonds will be better than where the principal is payable in currency and the interest in gold.

The difference between the two systems is as follows:

When the debt shall be $4,000,000,000:
Interest in gold..... $240,000,000
It must be bought at three for one..... 3

Interest..... 720,000,000
Ordinary expenses..... 100,000,000
820,000,000

In currency..... $4,000,000,000
Interest at six per cent..... $240,000,000
Ordinary expenses..... 100,000,000
340,000,000

Difference in favor of lawful money..... 460,000,000

In order to insure a loan I have provided that the interest on these bonds shall be eight per cent. instead of six and eight per cent. in currency. It will leave $480,000,000 in favor of the system which I propose shall be adopted, and that will afford the greatest relief to the present generation. Thirty years hence it will be no distress, I trust, to pay in coin. This and the next year, and the year after, it will be a constantly increasing distress. My proposition would relieve this generation from the exaggeration in the price of gold. We will have better and happier times when coin will be the currency of the country. Then we can make payment in coin which we now cannot do.

I cannot see, sir, why such a system is not adopted. I have no doubt that any man who has money to lend will lend it at eight per cent., the interest payable in currency and the principal in gold.

I have also provided that there shall be issued the same kind of bonds to the amount of $500,000,000 to be tendered to the holders of the five-twenty bonds at eight per cent. in exchange. I say that in five years we have the right to pay them off and pay them in money; and that whatever functionary of this Government undertakes to overrule the law deserves the censure of the nation and of the people who are to bear these burdens.

Far be it from me to suggest that in reference to bonds where the interest is payable in coin it shall not be paid to the last farthing. That is to be paid under my proposition; but if they will not convert them, one into the other, in five years, I provide that the five-twenties shall be redeemed by the sale of eight per cent. bonds for lawful money.

The bill of the committee proposes to give these bonds for what? For currency. It proposes to issue them for the present currency, to take that which is worth two hundred per cent. less than that which it gives.

Gentlemen will determine on this finally, for this is the last chance we shall have. They will decide whether this is right or wrong. I have spoken my opinions. I am sorry that so far my predictions have been fulfilled. If the House in their honest judgment think I am wrong now they can take a different course, and I only pray that I may prove a false prophet; but I have no doubt myself that I have painted the results in milder colors than the facts will develop.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, informed the House that the Senate have agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate (No. 85) to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army.

That the Senate have passed a bill and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

An act (No. 545) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of horses and other property destroyed in the military service of the United States;"

Joint resolution (No. 87) amendatory of an act to provide for the deficiency in the appropriation for the pay of officers and men actually employed in the Western department or department of Missouri; and Joint resolution (No. 107) for the relief of Major Morris S. Miller, of the quartermaster's department.

That the Senate have also passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (No. 273) to compensate the officers and crew of the iron-clad gunboat Essex for the destruction of the rebel ram Arkansas; and

An act (S. No. 292) to provide for the efficiency of the Navy.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 453) to increase the pension of Isaac Allen; and

An act (H. R. No. 192) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1865, and for other purposes.

WAYS AND MEANS—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I regret that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania should have felt it his duty to have presented such an argument to the House as he has no doubt felt it his duty to do. If I did not regard it fraught with infinite mischief I should not say a word upon this occasion. It is surprising to me that a gentleman with so clear a head as the gentleman from Pennsylvania, utterly denying that he is proposing anything which will lead to repudiation, should propose the very first step that will inevitably lead to repudiation if it should be adopted by the House.

Now, what do we see in the southern confederacy? They have no demand there for gold. Only a few days ago the congress at Richmond refused to appropriate the sum of $2,000 in gold to their president, and yet we know the price of gold in Richmond as well as in Wall street. Does the gentleman, while repudiating all extreme legislation in relation to the sale and speculation in gold, (wherein I do not disagree with him,) expect to avoid it by extreme legislation, by which there will be no opportunity to measure the price of gold? Ignore gold as much as you please, it will still exist and have its value. Any other idea is utterly preposterous. If we do not pay our debts in gold, would there not still be a market value for it in every city in the country? It is utterly impossible to prevent the measurement of the value of gold, legislate as we may.

Now, a word in relation to the payment of interest. The parties who negotiate loans with the United States are as keenly alive to what they get as the gentleman from Pennsylvania is. They know now when they loan to the Government, and get six per cent., payable in gold, they get ten or twelve per cent. according to the premium on gold; and does the gentleman suppose that in a time of war like this, when the country is torn and lacerated from center to circumference, that we can obtain a loan for six per cent.? If there is any gentleman of that opinion in the House I pity his intelligence. No nation has ever yet raised money in a long, exhausting, and expensive war at the ordinary rate.

Mr. STEVENS. My bill proposes eight per cent.

Mr. MORRILL. I know it does; but that sum is not equal even to five per cent. in gold; and our Secretary of the Treasury has undertaken, as I think unwisely at such a time as this, to obtain money at five per cent.—much less than the ordinary rate—and the loan has proved less popular than the six per cent. five-twentieths. If the gentleman's proposition should carry, what may we probably expect? Why, that the rate of interest would be double or treble, just in proportion as our currency should decrease in value. Then, instead of the small sum we are paying for interest, it would be double, triple, or quadruple. It might be as hard to pay one hundred or one hundred and fifty millions in paper as fifty in gold. This is as plain as any proposition can be, and a result sure to follow an exclusive paper basis.

Again, the gentleman states here that if our war shall continue for two years longer our debt, instead of being as it is now, a little over seventeen hundred million dollars, would amount to $4,000,000,000; and yet that gentleman is the chairman and head of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman will allow me to ask him whether he believes that our whole debt, if collected together, is not two or three thousand millions.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not think it amounts to even two thousand millions at the present time. I take the Secretary of the Treasury's statement as correct, or a little over seventeen hundred millions. Certainly the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, should know something of what we expect to accomplish by the legislation now before the House and heretofore reported. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania and other gentlemen in the House must know that they will realize not less than $350,000,000 of revenue, and if the expenditures should not be more than $100,000,000 over what has been estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury, our expenses at the end of two years more, with the same aggregate expense in each year, cannot even reach $3,000,000,000, nor much over $2,500,000,000.

That is an important error in the gentleman's calculation. We have been over three years in the war, with everything to create for war purposes, and with very little unusual taxation, and now, with all our implements of war on hand and with an enormous increase of taxation the gentleman is pleased to say our debt will increase more for two years to come than in the three years past. I do not expect that we can carry on this war for a great length of time at this extraordinary rate of expenditure. I clearly foresee that the time may come when we may have to stop from sheer exhaustion, but not now, nor next year, nor the year after; but under the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania the war will stop at a much earlier period—a period we can compute. If we should inaugurate a system of paper money and paper bonds, entirely without ballast, I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that they will become as inflated as soap-bubbles, and rise equally light and equally valueless. Our only salvation is in clinging to the solid securities and of paying our interest in gold and paying our bonds in gold.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I think that we should receive from the members of the Committee of Ways and Means declarations prepared with much more care than are dropping from their lips here constantly. The gentleman from Vermont has just made a remark which I think should not have been made by him or any other member of this House; and that is, that we shall have to stop this war from sheer exhaustion. Now, sir, does the gentleman suppose that the resources of the Government of the United States will be exhausted before the same process will bring the rebellion to a close?

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir.

Mr. WILSON. Then I hope that gentlemen occupying the position that he and others on that committee do in this House will be a little more guarded in the expressions which they send to the country from their places here.

Mr. MORRILL. I thought I had sufficiently guarded my statement by the intimation that it would be at a period at a considerable distance from this time, because I said that it would not be this year, next year, or the year after. Not a time to be apprehended, and yet possible. I think that no other gentleman in the House understood me that it was very near. I only meant to suggest that some time might be reached when it was possible to become exhausted; but I fully agree with the gentleman from Iowa in supposing that the rebels will be likely to be exhausted much sooner than we can be.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I trust that we are not about to adopt this proposition, although the gentleman from Pennsylvania has pressed it with more than his usual emphasis and with his accustomed ability, which has been haunting him, and which has been presented by him on so many former occasions. I trust that we are not at this late period of the session, and in a hasty manner, about to revolutionize our whole system of obtaining loans and maintaining the credit of the country. I should regard it as an error for which, if made, no remedy would remain. I believe that with the revenue measures now pending between the two Houses we have ample security that all the money that we want, beyond the amount that shall be paid in as taxes, will be obtained on our bonds and other securities at reasonable rates, and I trust and believe that it will not hereafter be necessary for the Secretary of the Treasury to issue another dollar of legal tender, but rather that he will be able to withdraw and diminish the amount now in circulation.

Mr. HOOPER obtained the floor.

Mr. FENTON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HOOPER. Certainly.

Mr. FENTON. I had not intended to discuss this question, and I am not prepared to do so now, but if the subject shall go over until to-morrow, I will attempt to answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania as well as I can, and to show that his positions are not only unsound but mischievous to the credit and finances of the Government. I do not wish to ask that action on the bill shall be delayed, but I simply say that if it shall go over I shall seek an opportunity to address the House to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The pending motion is to recommit the bill with the pending amendment to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOLMAN. I raised the point of order simply for the purpose of having an opportunity to have a vote in the House on the amendment made in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union with reference to the taxation by the States of bonds issued under the authority of Congress. I will withdraw the point of order if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will give me the opportunity of submitting that amendment to the House.

Mr. STEVENS. I did not understand the gentleman before. If I have the power, I will give him the opportunity he seeks.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HOOPER. I renew the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania by striking out the words "and all bonds, Treasury notes, and other obligations of the United States shall be exempt from taxation by or under State or municipal authority."

Mr. HOOPER. I now move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has moved to recommit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The motion of Mr. STEVENS was agreed to; and the bill was recommitted to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOOPER. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the loan bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOURWELL in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 515) to provide ways and means for the support of the Government, and for other purposes, the question being on the amendment offered by Mr. STEVENS to the first section, in the nature of a substitute, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to borrow, from time to time, on the credit of the United States, $400,000,000, for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865, and to issue therefor coupon or registered bonds of the United States, redeemable, at the pleasure of the Government, after any period not less than twenty nor more than thirty years, and, if deemed expedient, made payable at any period not more than forty years from date, payable in coin. And said bonds shall be of such denominations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct, not less than fifty dollars, and bear an annual interest not exceeding eight per cent., payable semi-annually; and the interest on all bonds heretofore issued, payable annually, may be paid semi-annually; and in lieu of such bonds, authorized to be issued, the Secretary of the Treasury may issue bonds, bearing interest, payable semi-annually. And the Secretary of the Treasury may dispose of such bonds, or any part thereof, in the United States, or, if he shall find it expedient, in Europe, at any time, on such terms as he may deem most advisable, for lawful money of the United States, or, at his discretion, for Treasury notes, certificates of indebtedness, or certificates of deposit issued under any act of Congress. And he may also issue in exchange for Treasury notes heretofore issued bearing seven and three tenths per cent. interest, besides the six per cent. bonds heretofore authorized, like bonds of the denominations of $100 and of $50.

Mr. STEVENS. In order to settle the question simply of paying the interest in currency and the principal in coin, I withdraw the rest of my amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to differ at this time with the views put forward by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] As the Representative on this floor of a portion of the people of the United States, I have but one question to ask myself, and that is, in what manner I can best and most efficiently sustain the Government. To that I am pledged at all times and under all circumstances. And although I may disagree in my individual opinion with the opinions of those who control the Government, I shall not falter in my support of the Government by reason of that disagreement.

As an original proposition I should have agreed with the views put forth by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. But, sir, we have to take things as they are. We must look to the facts not of the past but of the present. Our Government is committed to a policy in reference to the character and nature of its loans; and although I would have disagreed originally with the policy which the Government has pursued, I am bound now to sustain the policy adopted because I believe we cannot with honor or with safety depart from it.

We hold the Administration and its Departments responsible for carrying on this war; and I am not yet prepared as a Representative to deny them the means, the facilities, the instrumentalities by which alone as they assure us this war can be successfully prosecuted. The time may come when all the predictions of my friend from Pennsylvania may be realized. If so let it come. I am ready to share the destinies of the American people. I am ready to sink under the old flag of the Republic; and, so help me God, I will go to my grave under no other.

I am not so much afraid of the future as some gentlemen upon this floor appear to be. I have confidence in the power and the resources of the country, and if we can properly exercise our power and develop our resources we may look upon the existing liabilities of the country without apprehension.

Allusion has been made in the House to the great national debt of England at the close of the war of 1815, resting as is said as an incubus upon that country.

That, sir, is a comparison unworthy of the American people and the American Republic, even in the present condition of public affairs. What were the resources of England then compared to ours now? We have almost a continental domain which is still loyal, fertile in its soil and inexhaustible in its mineral wealth, containing in its bosom, beyond the Sierra Nevada and in the Territory of Colorado, gold and silver enough to pay the national debt ten times over; and we, like England in her wars with Napoleon, must in our conflict with rebellion look to the development of the agricultural, manufacturing, and mining interests of the country.

We have, then, the means in ample abundance of paying every dollar of debt which the war may impose, if we will avail ourselves of them, and can bring the conflict to a successful close.

If we cannot do this, let us go down like men in a determined and patriotic effort to do our duty as citizens of the great Republic.

I am, sir, for the prosecution of the war in the most vigorous and efficient manner; and to sustain the Government in those financial measures which are found essential to this end I would give to the country and its cause the last dollar, the last man, the last interest to suppress the rebellion and preserve its unity and greatness.

Mr. STEVENS. I will ask the gentleman whether he does not think that with a tax of over $320,000,000 per year we should not be more likely to put it down than with a tax of $840,000,000?

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. I answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] by saying that what I fear is that the proposition now brought by him before the House, with the statements made by him, will shock the credit of the country; that men will feel that the Government has no confidence in its ability to carry on the war upon the system of finance which the proposition recommends; and that the currency of the country will be so much deranged and its securities so much impaired as to bring us to a position analogous to that which existed in the latter days of the Revolution, and we know from history what was then the worthlessness of all Government securities.

Now, sir, I believe that if we pursue a judicious course, if we draw judiciously upon the resources of the country and make a just and economical application of those resources, we shall be able to derive an income that will be sufficient to pay every dollar of interest upon any obligations we may assume. The people are ready to assume those obligations, they are ready to submit to taxation; and although, as I have said before, I would have approved the scheme of the gentleman from Pennsylvania as an original proposition, I am not ready to do it now, when I know the effect will be to impair seriously the credit of the American Government.

Mr. Chairman, our indebtedness now existing or existing on the 14th of June, 1864, is $1,719,395,000. That is an amount which I say that we can pay without difficulty if we can only put down this rebellion; and that we can put it down as true as that there is a God in heaven, if we only stand united and firm together, agreeing upon sound measures of policy by which the war is to be prosecuted. I therefore deprecate most earnestly, upon the part of those who claim to be and as I know are the honest friends of the Government, any attempt to favor such measures as will of necessity impair the credit and jeopardize the safety of the country. This is no party question; it involves no party issue; it relates to the whole people and affects the very life-blood of the nation, which is the credit of the Government. On such a question, and at such a time, I am ready to sacrifice my individual opinions to the great public necessity. Sir, there is no sacrifice which is too great; if it be property, the little I have I am willing to offer; if it be life, I am willing to give it for the preservation of my country. It is not then, as I believe, an error or a crime in matters which are not of conscientious obligation to defer my private judgment to the matured opinions of those who are constitutionally charged with the responsibilities of guarding the Republic from danger and of conducting its affairs.

Sir, I hope most fervently that in this House, when we have approached so near the close of this session, which must put it beyond our power to retrieve errors if we now commit them, we shall not adopt the pending proposition, which will prove, I fear, a measure of discord.

Mr. STEVENS. Certainly not a measure of discord if we agree to it!

Mr. DAVIS, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I can see in it nothing but discord, if we force upon the financial Department of the Government a system to maintain and increase our financial strength, which in the judgment of that Department will blight the public credit. We invite the Government to fill up the armies, equipped with all the arms and material for active service. We direct the increase of our Navy, and in a thousand ways we pledge the faith of the Government to redeem the onerous obligations we assume, and then we provide for the payment of these liabilities by authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate the bonds of the nation, on which interest shall be paid, not, as before, in coin, but in currency, worth now not half as much as coin.

I am well aware, sir, that the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] offers his proposition with no unpatriotic motive, and with no desire to embarrass or hinder the operations of the Government; but if it shall produce discord between Congress and the Treasury Department; if it shall cripple and take away the power of that Department to do what is necessary to maintain the public credit, how are the Army and Navy to be preserved in their efficiency, or to be increased; in what way is the public credit to be preserved? By what means is the machinery of the Government to be carried on? If we fail in the accomplishment of these purposes, I see before us nothing but disaster, desolation, and bankruptcy, and upon bankruptcy will follow repudiation.

In my judgment this is no time for doubtful experiments, and I believe it for the present safer to continue upon the existing system than to try a new one in which failure would be fatal. It may be safely assumed that upon the basis proposed in the bill before the House the public credit cannot be presently depreciated; indeed, I hope it will be perfectly preserved. At all events, we can learn in a short period what its effect will be, and shall then be better prepared to say who is right and who is wrong. A few months only will bring us to the opening of another session of Congress, and if we in the mean time find by actual experiment that the operation of the bill is unsatisfactory and inefficient we can then with greater reason and with greater confidence try the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, or any other which may be deemed expedient. I hear my honorable friend from Pennsylvania suggesting some enactment like the "gold bill." I believe we did not differ on that measure. I have always regarded legislation to regulate the value of gold, or any other article of universal value, as utterly idle and worthless; and although I should rejoice to find that any law could arrest speculation in coin, I have no confidence in or expectation of such a result. I did not support the gold bill because I believed, ay, I think I knew that, passed or not passed, the market value of gold would be substantially unchanged. But the measure before us is one of vital importance, and we should ponder well before we determine to overturn the basis on which our finances have hitherto been successfully conducted.

The proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania relieves the Secretary of the Treasury from the responsibility of carrying on the war, because we shall have denied to him the means by which he says we can alone carry it on. Sir, I pray that we may unite here and at the other end of the Capitol upon whatever measures of public policy are adopted. I know of no safe, no consistent, no proper way in which we can meet our responsibilities in this regard except by acting in accordance with the wishes and views of the Treasury Department, and in that way I shall give my vote.

Mr. ARNOLD. The House seems to have been very much disturbed to-day by the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] I think we ought to bear in mind that when that gentleman has an object which he desires to accomplish he sometimes chooses to indulge in some considerable extravagance of assertion; and his statements in regard to the political affairs of the country to-day must be taken with some considerable allowance, for we must remember that they were made in this House with a view of inducing the adoption of a particular line of policy other than that we have hitherto pursued. Sir, it has been said that the resources of the country were being exhausted, and that the time would come by and by when they would fail, and it might come before this rebellion was suppressed. What evidence is there apparent to the traveler throughout the loyal portion of the country that we have begun to exhaust our resources? Go where you will, go into the great cities of the North, go into the East, go into the manufacturing portions of New England, go to the great commercial marts, go to the West, and I ask you to tell me what indications there are that the resources of the country are exhausted? Why, sir, you see wealth so lavishly exhibited and expended that it has no parallel in our previous history.

Talk to the American people to-day about national bankruptcy and ruin! They will not believe it. All that is necessary to sustain national credit is that adequate taxes should be imposed, economy and frugality prevail, and that our armies shall be filled up, and we shall accomplish the end, the suppression of the rebellion. Let the resources of the country be used, be fully and efficiently used to suppress this rebellion; but if the necessity arise, American citizens will rush en masse to arms to maintain the honor and glory of our country. The idea of possible failure or exhaustion is not entertained by the loyal masses.

Allusion has been made to the resources of Great Britain and her ability to carry on the long and exhaustive wars in which she has been engaged. Great Britain is but a small portion of the globe, a small island in the sea, yet we have seen what English pluck and English determination and persistence have done. Let us emulate her action at some periods of her history, in standing by the country, in imposing taxes and placing the resources of the country, of men and money, at the disposal of the Government, and there can be no sort of doubt of the issue of the great contest in which we are engaged.

Sir, the question is between maintaining the Union and bringing to the Government all the resources of the continent, or of vacillation and weakness in the midst of a conflict to break up this glorious Confederacy. The resources of this country developed by labor, as they may be and will be, are greater than those of the continent of Europe.

And I wish to call the attention of the House for a moment to the following statement of the resources of the country to carry on the war:

There are those who doubt whether the resources of our country are adequate to carry successfully through the stupendous work in which we are engaged. In reply, let me suggest one consideration not often adverted to. Our national resources are, when developed, equal to those of the whole continent of Europe. What Europe could do as one nation we can do when united in one great Republic. If all Europe could pay our national debt with ease so can we when national unity is established. Let me illustrate this idea:

If the map of our country, extending from the base of the Rocky mountains to the shores of the Atlantic, were laid over the map of Europe, that portion of the globe which for the last thousand years has engrossed the attention of the civilized world would be entirely covered. It would overspread those monarchies, empires, and nationalities which for ages have been antagonistic, belligerent—the great battle-fields of Europe. The map of the United States would cover the theater of the great wars which have desolated and depopulated again and again the eastern world, from France and Waterloo to Sebastopol. Human beings by the million have been sacrificed in the wars of the Fredericks, of the Louises, of the Philips, and the Charleses, of the Marlboroughs, and of the Bonapartes. Millions and millions of treasure, wrung from the toil of the laboring masses, have been expended in fortifying frontiers and in operations of these wars. Rivers of blood have flowed, so that you cannot take a day's ride in Europe without passing over fields memorable for human slaughter. Shall these scenes of butchery and desolation be reenacted in our own beloved country? Shall this fair land, lately so peaceful, prosperous, and happy, become disintegrated and broken up into fragments? Shall the Hudson, the Susquehanna, the Delaware, the Potomac, the Ohio, and the Mississippi bristle with fortifications? Shall the Atlantic States contend in battle with the generous West? Shall we ever reenact upon our fair prairies and broad lakes the bloody pages of European history? God forbid!

Could some divine agency, a thousand years ago, have made of Europe a great nationality, leveling its dividing mountains, and mingling its clans into one great homogeneous people, and made it free, virtuous, and wise enough to maintain unity, what untold misery would have been prevented! No leveling of dividing mountains is here necessary. God in His goodness has fashioned our country, vast as it is, for unity. He has given us one language, the same laws, and one glorious flag. He has made one great nationality a necessity. He has blessed us with liberty. Let us second God's plans, and aid and strengthen by every generous means the influences which shall hold us together forever.

Let our nationality be once restored and the entire resources of the country brought to the support of the Government, and our debt will be discharged without ruinous taxation.

The duty of to-day is to stand firm. To-day our duty is to fill up the ranks. To-day our duty is to lay taxes upon the people that our national credit shall be maintained until the war is ended. The other day when it was telegraphed over the land that the President had issued his proclamation for three hundred thousand more soldiers to fill up the thinned ranks of our armies, although it turned out to be a forgery, the business men of Chicago, those who have spent their money like water in raising regiments, in taking care of the families of soldiers and in every possible way aided the Government, cheered it upon the exchange because it indicated a determination on the part of the Government vigorously to carry on the war to crush out this rebellion. Every day I am receiving letters from my constituents, urging upon Congress to take every measure to fill up the ranks of our armies. Fill up the ranks, and success is within our grasp. Recently a boy escaping from the city of Richmond into our lines told us that every man in the rebel States between fifteen and fifty-five was pressed into the rebel ranks. How is it here? Go to New England; her operatives are scarcely perceptibly diminished. Travel throughout the country, and you would scarcely believe that such great numbers have gone to the field when such crowds of fable-bodied men still remain. Talk to me about the resources of the country being exhausted! Why sir, the wealth of the country and its fighting material are abundantly able, vigorously used, to carry on the war and to crush the rebels. Is this the moment to hesitate, when victory and complete triumph seems within our grasp? Our resources are inexhaustible, and it only needs nerve, and determination, and courage upon the part of the Representatives here to enact laws which will fill up the Army, and impose the requisite taxes, to crown the efforts of our armies with a glorious triumph; and I trust this Congress will not adjourn until such a tax bill is passed as will restore the credit of the country, and such an enrollment bill shall have been passed as will enable the Government to fill up the ranks, and raise all the men the necessities of the Government may require.

One other remark only, for I am not going to consume the time of the House by making a speech. Up to two days ago, during all this war, there never came a communication from the President and Secretary of War asking Congress for men and money, or suggesting any means for carrying on the war, that Congress has not promptly responded to it. Nay, more, up to that time Congress went beyond the calls of the Executive and War Department in voting men and money. But a few days ago the President sent to this House a recommendation, accompanied by the recommendation of the Secretary of War, and a statement of the Provost Marshal General, saying that under the present system the ranks of the Army cannot be filled up as speedily as necessary, and asking Congress to repeal the commutation clause of the law. The House has taken the responsibility of refusing to do that which the Government has asked at their hands. I desire that every member of this House should appreciate the responsibility of that act. If there are any better ways and means of filling up the ranks of our Army, let them be presented and adopted. If there are any better ways, and if Congress fails to adopt those ways, and in consequence of such failure to fill up the Army disaster comes, the responsibility of that disaster will rest upon those who have failed to adopt them, and who have also failed to carry out the recommendation of the President and Secretary of War, those who have the responsibility of carrying on the war.

Mr. KERNAN. I desire information, and I ask the gentleman, on this practical measure, what is the recommendation of those who have charge of carrying on the Government? Which bill is the right one, of the two bills before us?

Mr. ARNOLD. The question of the gentleman is not in regard to filling up the ranks of the Army, but in reference to a bill upon which I am not now remarking. I was making a general statement in regard to the necessity of filling up the Army, as well as in regard to sustaining the credit of the country. For the answer which the gentleman desires I refer him to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. KERNAN. They differ about it.

Mr. ARNOLD. The gentleman's question is not germane to what I am saying. From the Ways and Means the gentleman must seek an answer to his question.

Mr. GANSON asked a question in regard to this mode of getting men which was not heard by the reporter.

Mr. ARNOLD. I expect and believe if you repeal the exemption clause you will get men more rapidly than heretofore. I expect this because those charged with the execution of this law so advise us. I vote to repeal the commutation clause because the armies must be filled up; and those having the responsibility advise that as the most efficient means of doing it. I can very well understand the vote of those who, voting against that repeal, say they do not desire to fill up the ranks, that they are for peace on any terms. Those gentlemen upon this floor who desire to have the war ended without further fighting, who wish to see our armies withdrawn from the field and to obtain peace on any terms, if such there are, I can understand their votes, and it seems to me their votes upon the proposition are consistent with their views. They do not wish to send any more soldiers to the field, and to withdraw those already there, and therefore they vote against the repeal. But my friends upon this side of the House who voted for continuing the commutation will undoubtedly present some proposition which they deem better calculated to fill up the ranks to enable us to carry on the war to a successful termination. The ranks of the Army must be filled up, and the credit of the Government sustained, and I trust this House will not adjourn until these objects shall have been successfully accomplished. If we do, we assume a fearful responsibility.

Mr. PRUYN. I wish to inquire whether the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania comes from him as chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, or whether it is his individual proposition.

Mr. STEVENS. It is my own individual proposition. I did not submit it to the Committee of Ways and Means. For three years I have been of this opinion and the committee have been against me.

Mr. PRUYN. Then, as I understand the matter, the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOOPER,] representing the Committee of Ways and Means, introduces the pending bill as a measure recommended by the Government, and which he asks this House to pass accordingly. Am I right in this?

Mr. HOOPER. I was instructed to report this bill by the Committee of Ways and Means unanimously, with the exception of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] the chairman, and I think the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MALLORY,] There were no other dissenting voices.

Mr. PRUYN. Then I understand, or perhaps I ought to say I infer, from what the gentleman from Massachusetts has said that it is a bill which meets the approval of the financial head of the Government, the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOOPER. I have already stated that this bill was prepared at the Treasury Department.

Mr. PRUYN. I had forgotten that. I now recollect it.

Mr. Chairman, the debate of to-day has been, in many respects, one of the most significant, if not the most so, of any which has occurred this session. The charm seems at last to have been broken, and gentlemen on the opposite side of the House have come to the conclusion, at least some of them have, that events are staring us in the face which we ought to consider most carefully and deliberately; and that some of the views, at least, which have been put forward on this side of the House, and by gentlemen throughout the country who hold the views that we do, are worthy of the most serious consideration.

Mr. A. MYERS. I would ask the gentleman what he means by saying that the views entertained by gentlemen opposite are now expressed or entertained by members upon this side of the House.

Mr. PRUYN. I do not wish to go over the whole discussion. That is the inference I have drawn from it. The gentleman may draw another if he thinks any other can be drawn.

Mr. A. MYERS. Have gentlemen on the other side of the House ever taken the position which the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means now takes?

Mr. PRUYN. I do not refer especially to what the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has said. I refer to a great deal which has been said by other gentlemen upon the opposite side of the House.

I will look at the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] for a moment. I understand it to be opposed, not because it is wrong in itself, not because the Government should not under any circumstances borrow money on these terms, but because there are other obligations of the Government outstanding which it is insisted are all payable in coin, both principal and interest, and that this will be creating a species of debt which we ought not to initiate, especially in the present condition of our financial affairs. If the Government were asking for nothing else than this amount, if there were no other obligations of the Government in the market, the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if enacted into a law, would undoubtedly at once be accepted by many capitalists who would be glad with the present depreciated currency to make an investment by which at some future period they would be certain to receive coin in place of currency for the full amount invested. We all know what has been the inquiry for a year or two past in regard to investments. Every person, when consulted, has advised his neighbor to buy long bonds, those payable twenty or thirty years hence, with the hope that when they mature specie payments will have been resumed, and that they will receive the principal of the debt in coin.

The remarks of gentlemen upon the other side are based, as I understand them, upon the idea that the principal of all the United States bonds now outstanding are payable in coin, and I therefore asked the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] the question which I propounded to him a while ago, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the Treasury Department had come to any definite conclusion as to the mode of payment of the five-twenty bonds. The gentleman from Pennsylvania claimed that under the act of 1862, in pursuance of which the five-twenty bonds were issued, the principal of those bonds is not payable in coin, and that inasmuch as the Government had departed in that instance from the principle of paying everything in coin, there could be no objection on that score to his proposition to pay interest in currency. He claims that under the act of 1862 the Government agreed to pay the interest in coin and the principal in anything it pleased which it might call an equivalent. He now proposes to reverse that, and make the interest payable in paper and the principal in coin.

So far as the construction of the act of 1862 is concerned, my impression is that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] is right. The act of 1862 contains within itself declarations, and inferences are to be drawn from it, by which it would seem that Congress did intend to make a distinction between the payment of interest and the payment of principal, reserving the right to pay the principal as it pleased; that is, either in coin or in what is called lawful money. It is not necessary now, even were there time, to go into an analysis of the act of 1862. This view is much strengthened by the fact that the bill for the ten-forties contains an express proviso that both principal and interest shall be payable in coin, making a clear distinction, so far as the language of the two acts is concerned between the ten-forty and the five-twenty bonds.

I looked somewhat at this point a short time since when called upon by a member of the House, who inquired of me whether I was aware of any difference in the character of the two issues, with the view of determining whether the five-twenties at a premium or the ten-forties at par were the better investment. It then seemed to me that in view of the phraseology of the two statutes the ten-forties were to be preferred, because as to them there could be no question. It has now, however, been announced by the gentleman from Ohio that the Secretary of the Treasury holds that the five-twenties are also to be paid in coin.

But, Mr. Chairman, the question as to what should be done fairly rests with those who represent the Administration on this floor. In a very brief speech which I made on a former occasion, I undertook to point out the great financial errors which I believed the Administration had committed in the outset of the war. I do not propose now to repeat what I then said; but reflection on the subject and the opinions of those in whose judgment I have great confidence have fully confirmed me in the belief that the views I then presented to the House were entirely sound. But a different policy having been pursued by the Administration, we are now launched on an open sea of debt, of paper money, of obligations of all kinds, both near and remote, to a fearful amount; nor are we on this side of the House in a position to control the matter. It is a question which the friends of the Administration have the power to decide, and no doubt will decide as they deem to be most judicious.

I did not expect this debate to-day, nor did I come here prepared to engage in it by offering any substitute for the bill, nor should I have had the slightest hope, after what has occurred on the floor of the House during this session, that any financial plan coming from this side of the House could have met with any favor from the friends of the Administration. However much gentlemen on the other side may differ among themselves in their views of men and of things, we on this side know that whenever any question has come up understood to be an Administration measure the other side of the House has always been a unit.

I am therefore of opinion, Mr. Chairman, that the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] however objectionable for some reasons, is not so in all the lights in which it has been viewed by those who have opposed it. But it has been claimed that it would interfere with the purposes of the Administration in raising men and money to carry on the war, in which we, on this side, have uniformly endeavored not in any way to embarrass the Government. We therefore have a right to look to the Administration side of the House to inform us definitely which of the plans proposed meets their favor, and which they deem to be most conducive to the interests of the country.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the committee do now rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion to enable me to offer an amendment.

Mr. WILSON. I withdraw for that purpose, although I desire that the vote shall be immediately taken.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit the amendment which I indicated before.

Mr. WILSON. I now renew my motion.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration House bill No. 540, to provide ways and means for the support of the Government, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

ENROLLED RESOLUTION.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (H. R. No. 95) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to amend the contract with John Ericsson for the construction of two impregnable floating batteries, the Dictator and the Puritan; when the Speaker signed the same.

LOAN BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. HOOPER. Before moving to go into committee, I move that all general debate upon the loan bill be terminated in five minutes after the committee shall resume its consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOUTWELL in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill of the House (No. 540) to provide ways and means for the support of the Government, and for other purposes; the question being on the adoption of Mr. HOLMAN's amendment.

On the adoption of the amendment 50 voted in the affirmative and 59 in the negative.

Mr. HOLMAN called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HOLMAN and HIGBY were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 73.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The question then recurred on the adoption of Mr. STEVENS's amendment.

Mr. HOOPER. I will suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he strike out the clause from the twenty-sixth to the thirtieth line as follows:

And the Secretary of the Treasury may dispose of such bonds, or any part thereof, in the United States, or, if he shall find it expedient, in Europe, at any time, on such terms as he may deem most advisable, for lawful money of the United States, or, at his discretion, for Treasury notes, certificates of indebtedness, or certificates of deposit issued under any act of Congress.

The same provision is made in the third section of the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. That is true, and I will strike it out.

Mr. HOOPER. I will suggest, also, that in the ninth line he strike out "twenty" and insert "five," so as to make it read, "redeemable, at the pleasure of the Government, after any period not less than five nor more than thirty years."

Mr. STEVENS. I believe that long bonds always sell better than short ones, but inasmuch as the Secretary of the Treasury thinks otherwise, I am willing to accommodate my amendment to his wishes in that respect, and will strike out "twenty" and insert "five," although I am informed by gentlemen who know a great deal more about this matter than I do, for I have had no money to invest in bonds, that people will much more readily invest their money in long bonds.

Mr. HOOPER. Now, if the gentleman will insert in the fifteenth line, after the words "semi-annually," the words "in coin," I will then very cheerfully support his amendment. The clause would then read:

And said bonds shall be of such denominations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct, not less than fifty dollars, and bear an annual interest not exceeding eight per cent, payable semi-annually in coin.

Mr. STEVENS. That would bring it right back to the original bill; however, if the gentleman desires to offer it as an amendment to my amendment, let him do it, and the vote upon it will determine whether the House desire to adopt my amendment or not.

Mr. HOOPER. I would then support the gentleman's amendment very willingly.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I understand that the gentleman would be willing to pay eight per cent. interest in coin.

Mr. HOOPER. Not at all. It would read "not exceeding eight per cent.," leaving it at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. I will, however, modify my amendment by striking out "eight" and inserting "six."

Upon the adoption of the amendment to the amendment, 61 voted in the affirmative and 64 in the negative.

Mr. HOOPER demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. THAYER and HOLMAN were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee here informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate was received by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate have passed a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles, with amendments; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (H. R. No. 532) to establish certain post roads;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 63) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to release certain goods from the payment of duties; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 39) for the relief of Alexander Cross.

Also, that the Senate have disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate (No. 138) to regulate proceedings between landlord and tenant in the District of Columbia, ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and have appointed Mr. MORRILL, Mr. HARLAN, and Mr. HENDRICKS the committee of conference on their part.

Also, that the Senate insist on their amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill of the House (No. 495) to amend the charter of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and have appointed Mr. WADE, Mr. WILLEY, and Mr. RIDDLE the committee of conference on their part.

Also, that the Senate have agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the Senate (No. 55) in relation to the circuit court in and for the district of Wisconsin, and for other purposes.

The committee then resumed its session, and proceeded again to the consideration of the LOAN BILL.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 51.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. DAVIS, of New York, moved to insert in section thirteen, line twenty, after the word "medium" the words "with the intention of assimilating the same to the notes, bonds, or other representatives of value issued by the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER moved that the committee rise. The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally, under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 540, to provide ways and means for the support of the Government, and for other purposes; and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 545) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of horses and other property destroyed in the military service of the United States;"

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 107) for the relief of Major Morris S. Miller, of the quartermaster's department; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 87) amendatory of an act to provide for the deficiency in the appropriation for the pay of officers and men actually employed in the Western department or department of Missouri.

LOAN BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. HOOPER demanded the previous question on the loan bill and the amendments of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question first recurred on the amendment of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union adopted on motion of Mr. STEVENS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 59, nays 81, not voting 42; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William J. Allen, Anderson, Baily, Augustus C. Baldwin, Baxter, Blair, Blow, Boyd, Brooks, Broomall, William G. Brown, Cole, Dawson, Denison, Donnelly, Eden, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Grider, Harding, Benjamin G. Harris, Higby, Holman, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Philip Johnson, William Johnson, Kalbfleisch, Knapp, Law, Loan, Long, Marcy, McAllister, McClurg, McDowell, William H. Miller, Moorhead, James R. Morris, Morrison, Amos Myers, John O'Neill, Orth, Robinson, Ross, Scott, Shannon, John B. Steele, Stevens, Sweet, Thayer, Van Valkenburgh, Whaley, Wheeler, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Wilson, and Winfield—59.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Ancona, Arnold, Ashley, John D. Baldwin, Beaman, Blaine, Boutwell, Ambrose W. Clark, Freeman Clarke, Cobb, Creswell, Thomas T. Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Edgerton, Elliot, English, Fenton, Finck, Frank, Ganson, Garfield, Gooch, Griswold, Hale, Herrick, Hooper, John H. Hubbard, Hubbard, Jencks, Julian, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Kernan, Knox, Longyear, Marvin, McBride, Samuel F. Miller, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Leonard Myers, Noble, Norton, Odell, Charles O'Neill, Patterson, Pendleton, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, John H. Rice, Edward H. Rollins, James S. Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Sloan, Smithers, Spalding, William G. Steele, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Upson, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Webster, Williams, Benjamin Wood, and Fernando Wood—81.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, Bliss, Brandegee, James S. Brown, Chandler, Clay, Coffroth, Cox, Cravens, Henry Winter Davis, Deming, Dumont, Grinnell, Hall, Harrington, Charles M. Harris, Hutchins, Kasson, King, Lazear, Le Blond, Littlejohn, Mallory, McIndoe, McKinney, Middleton, Nelson, Perry, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Smith, Starr, Stebbins, Thomas, Tracy, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Wilder, Windom, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—42.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

During the vote,

Mr. ASHLEY stated that Mr. WILDER was paired with Mr. J. C. ALLEN.

The vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. What has become of the amendments to the first section of the bill relative to the taxation of these bonds for State and municipal purposes?

The SPEAKER. When that section was stricken out they fell as a matter of course.

The question next recurred on Mr. POMEROY's amendment.

Mr. POMEROY demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 44, nays 81, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Augustus C. Baldwin, Brooks, William G. Brown, Freeman Clarke, Coffroth, Cole, Cravens, Creswell, Dawes, Dawson, Edgerton, English, Farnsworth, Ganson, Griswold, Harrington, Herrick, Holman, Hotchkiss, Jencks, Kalbfleisch, Kernan, Law, Marcy, Samuel F. Miller, James R. Morris, Morrison, Nelson, Odell, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, Pruyn, James S. Rollins, Ross, Scofield, John B. Steele, Thayer, Van Valkenburgh, William B. Washburne, Whaley, Wheeler, and Wilson—44.

NAYS—Messrs. William J. Allen, Allison, Ames, Arnold, Ashley, Baily, John D. Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blair, Blow, Boutwell, Boyd, Broomall, James S. Brown, Ambrose W. Clark, Cobb, Thomas T. Davis, Denison, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eden, Eldridge, Elliot, Frank, Gooch, Hale, Harding, Benjamin G. Harris, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hubbard, Philip Johnson, Julian, Kelley, Francis W. Kellogg, Orlando Kellogg, Knapp, Knox, Loan, Long, Longyear, McAllister, McBride, McClurg, William H. Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Daniel Morris, Amos Myers, Leonard Myers, Noble, Norton, Charles O'Neill, John O'Neill, Orth, Perham, John H. Rice, Schenck, Shannon, Sloan, Smithers, Spalding, William G. Steele, Stevens, Stiles, Strouse, Stuart, Tracy, Upson, Elihu B. Washburne, Webster, Williams, Windom, Winfield, Benjamin Wood, and Fernando Wood—81.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James C. Allen, Anderson, Blaine, Bliss, Brandegee, Chandler, Clay, Cox, Henry Winter Davis, Deming, Dumont, Eckley, Fenton, Finck, Garfield, Grider, Grinnell, Hall, Charles M. Harris, Higby, Hutchins, Ingersoll, William Johnson, Kasson, King, Lazear, Le Blond, Littlejohn, Mallory, Marvin, McDowell, McIndoe, McKinney, Middleton, Patterson, Pendleton, Perry, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Robinson, Rogers, Edward H. Rollins, Scott, Smith, Starr, Stebbins, Sweet, Thomas, Voorhees, Wadsworth, Ward, Chilton A. White, Joseph W. White, Wilder, Woodbridge, and Yeaman—57.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection the question will be taken on the remaining amendments in gross, unless a separate vote is desired upon some of them.

Mr. HOOPER. I desire a separate vote upon the amendment to the thirteenth section, in lines seventeen and eighteen, which was to strike out the words "or device with green ink, or with any green color or pigment."

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

The remaining amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were agreed to in gross.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HOOPER demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. GANSON demanded the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

Mr. HOOPER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LANDLORD AND TENANT BILL.

Mr. WILSON. The Senate has non-concurred in the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate No. 138, in relation to landlords and tenants in the District of Columbia. I ask unanimous consent to take that bill from the Speaker's table in order that the House may insist upon its amendments and agree to the committee of conference asked for by the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman to allow that to lay over until morning.

And then, on motion of Mr. DAWSON, (at five o'clock and fifteen minutes, p. m.,) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 24, 1864.

Prayer by Rev. B. H. NADAL, of Washington, District of Columbia.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Adam Gurowski, praying that the horse cars in the city of Washington may be allowed to run on Sundays; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SUMNER presented four petitions of men and women of the United States, praying for the abolition of slavery, and such an amendment of the Constitution as will forever prohibit its existence in any portion of the Union; which were referred to the select committee on slavery and freedmen.

Mr. HARRIS presented a memorial of masters in the Navy not in the line of promotion, and attached to navy-yards, praying to be placed on the same pay with acting masters drawing sea pay; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the memorial of George H. Plant and the memorial of Francis I. Brooke, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of contractors and builders of the side-wheel gunboats known as double-enders, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Court of Claims; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 103) for the relief of Mary Kellogg, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the following petitions:

Petition of citizens of New York, praying a vote of thanks of Congress to Commodore W. D. Porter and the crew of the United States gunboat Essex for the destruction of the rebel ram Arkansas;

Petition of watchmen at the navy-yard at Washington, District of Columbia, praying an increase of pay; and Petition of Mary L. Watts, sister and sole heir of George Watts.

Mr. COWAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 117) to reimburse the State of Pennsylvania for expenses in calling out the militia of said State during the recent invasion, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. WILKINSON, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Haym M. Salomon, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 331) for the relief of Haym M. Salomon. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 318) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell certain property when no longer required for the public service, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. COLLAMER, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported a bill (S. No. 332) to establish salaries for postmasters, and for other purposes; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. DOOLITTLE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution of the Senate of May 27, calling for an account current between the United States and the united bands of Wea, Peoria, Kaskaskia, and Piankeshaw Indians, submitted a letter of the Secretary of the Interior addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, communicating the amount called for by the resolution; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred a petition of James Storm, of Stockbridge, Wisconsin, and a bill (S. No. 294) for the better protection of the tribal rights and interests of the Indians, moved that they be postponed to the first Monday of December next; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, communications, and memorials, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to:

A bill (S. No. 186) for the relief of the Peoria, Piankeshaw, Kaskaskia, and Wea Indians of Kansas;

A bill (H. R. No. 425) for the relief of the Wea, Peoria, Kaskaskia, and Piankeshaw Indians of Kansas;

A bill (H. R. No. 441) providing for the removal of certain stray bands of Indians from the State of Wisconsin;

A message from the President of the United States in relation to the amount of money received by the Government for the sale of the Wea trust lands;

A report of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating the papers and awards of the commissioners appointed under the act of February 16, 1863, "for the relief of persons for damages sustained by reason of depredations and injuries by certain bands of Sioux Indians;"

A letter of the Secretary of the Interior, recommending an appropriation for the Indian service in the Territory of Dakota;

A letter of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating an estimate of the appropriations required to fulfill treaty stipulations with the Chippewas of Red Lake, and the Pembina band of Indians under the treaty of October 1, 1863;

A letter of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating estimates of the appropriations required to defray the liabilities incurred for the subsistence of the Sioux and Winnebago Indians removed from Minnesota to Dakota;

A letter of the Secretary of the Interior recommending an appropriation for the Indian service in New Mexico for the current fiscal year;

A letter of the Secretary of the Interior communicating an estimate of the appropriation required to comply with the treaty stipulations with the Chippewa Indians of the Mississippi;

Resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas in favor of the negotiation of treaties and the enactment of laws for the removal of all the Indians residing in a tribal capacity within that State;

A memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota praying for the early payment of the damages sustained by the Sioux Indian war of 1862;

Resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas in favor of making such treaties with the Indian tribes in that State as will secure their removal therefrom, and allow the State to tax the lands now occupied by the Indians immediately after their sale;

A memorial of John Beeson, L. F. Peaslee, and A. D. Ruggles;

A memorial of John Beeson; and

A petition of settlers in the absentee Shawnee Indian reservation in Douglas county, Kansas.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 527) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1865, to report it back with amendments. As these amendments are comparatively few and simple, and this is the last of the appropriation bills, I ask that without printing the amendments the bill be set down as the special order for one o'clock to-day.

Mr. SUMNER. Does the Senator think it advisable to proceed with that bill so soon? Is it not customary to keep it till the very close of the session?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is the last of the regular appropriation bills.

Mr. SUMNER. I understand that, and on that very account it should be kept to the last. We do not know but during the last week it may be desirable to add to the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. The session has approached such a period that I think the bill ought to be considered in the Senate and sent back to the House of Representatives; it can be kept there, and they can propose amendments to our amendments; so that the matter will be open. As it is a regular appropriation bill, I think it better to act upon it before the revenue bill is reported back.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to consider the bill to-day. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move that the bill be made the special order for one o'clock to-day.

The motion was agreed to, two thirds concurring therein.

PRESERVATION OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 450) to provide for the repair and preservation of certain public works of the United States, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from their three amendments made to said bill.

Z. CHANDLER,
E. M. MORRILL,
E. D. MORGAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
E. B. WASHBURN,
JOHN W. LONGYEAR,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON. Do the Senate recede from all their amendments? Why is that, and what were they?

Mr. CHANDLER. There were only three amendments, all immaterial; but there was fuller information before the committee of conference than there was before the Senate Committee on Commerce upon the subject.

The report was concurred in.

CATALOGUE OF REBELLION PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be instructed to inquire into the expediency of causing a catalogue of all the publications relating to the present rebellion to be compiled.

RECRUITING IN IRELAND AND CANADA.

Mr. JOHNSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform the Senate if any authority has been given to any one, either in this country or elsewhere, to obtain recruits in Ireland or in Canada for our Army or Navy; and whether any such recruits have been obtained, or whether to the knowledge of the Government Irishmen or Canadians have been induced to emigrate to this country in order to be so recruited; and if so, what measures, if any, have been adopted to arrest such conduct.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (No. 540) to provide ways and means for the support of the Government, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 545) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of horses and other property destroyed in the military service of the United States;"

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 87) amendatory of an act to provide for the deficiency in the appropriation for the pay of officers and men actually employed in the Western department or department of Missouri;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 95) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to amend the contract with John Ericsson for the construction of two impregnable floating batteries, the Dictator and the Puritan; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 107) for the relief of Major Morris S. Miller, of the quartermaster's department.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (No. 540) to provide ways and means for the support of the Government, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HALE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 330) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish and equalize the grades of line officers of the United States Navy;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 71) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of certain moneys therein mentioned; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 72) to provide for payment of the claim of Colonel H. C. De Ahna for military services; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

NATIONALITY OF SEAMEN.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire the Senate this morning to consider some bills which have been reported from the Committee on Commerce, and which ought to be passed promptly. I move first to take up the bill (H. R. No. 519) repealing certain provisions of law concerning seamen on board public and private vessels of the United States.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to repeal so much of an act for the regulation of seamen on board the public and private vessels of the United States, approved the 3d of March, 1813, as makes it not lawful to employ on board any of the public or private vessels of the United States any person or persons except citizens of the United States or persons of color, natives of the United States; and so much of the third, fifth, sixth, and seventh sections of an act concerning the navigation of the United States, approved the 1st of March, 1817, as concerns the crews of vessels therein named; and so much of the first section of an act entitled "An act to repeal the tonnage duties upon ships and vessels of the United States and upon certain foreign vessels," approved the 31st of May, 1830, as makes discrimination in favor of vessels certain proportions of whose crews shall be citizens of the United States. It is however provided that officers of vessels of the United States shall in all cases be citizens of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer the following amendment as additional sections:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That no human being shall be held or transported as property in any vessel on the high seas, or sailing coastwise, or on any navigable waters within the jurisdiction of the United States; and every vessel violating the provisions of this act shall be forfeited to the United States; and every master of such vessel consenting to such violation shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof subject to the penalties hereinafter provided, one half of the fine to go to the informer; and every human being so held or transported as property shall be free.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith, including especially so much of an act approved March 2, 1897, as regulates the coastwise slave trade, are hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that the amendment as offered refers to what is "hereinafter provided," and there is no previous provision in the bill on the subject.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senate will vote down the amendment and let the Senator put his own bills through, and let those of the Committee on Commerce go through by themselves. I can pass my bills without discussion if gentlemen will let me alone. All I ask is that I may be permitted to go on with my bills.

Mr. SUMNER. I withdraw the amendment. The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

NAUTICAL MAPS AND CHARTS.

On motion of Mr. CHANDLER, the bill (S. No. 310) for the promotion of commerce and the improvement of navigation was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section of the bill provides that for the improvement of the mercantile marine, and for the promotion of commerce and navigation, by providing, under the authority of the Government, accurate and cheap nautical charts and books for the use of the naval, revenue, and merchant services, and of navigators generally, the Secretary of the Treasury may publish and sell domestic maps, charts, and nautical books, relating to the coast of the United States, at the cost of printing and paper, and to purchase the plates and copyrights of such maps, charts, and books, when he may consider it expedient to do so, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. By the second section the moneys received from the sale of such maps, charts, and nautical books, are to be returned by the Secretary of the Treasury into the Treasury of the United States, to be used in the preparation of other works of the same character, which are to be sold upon the same terms, and the sum of $30,000 is appropriated for the objects named. According to the third section, for the purposes mentioned, the Secretary of the Navy is to be authorized to publish and sell maps, charts, and nautical books relating to, and required in, the navigation of foreign seas, and to furnish them to navigators at the cost of printing and paper, and to purchase the plates and copyrights of such maps, charts, and books when he may consider it expedient to do so, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. By the fourth section the moneys received from the sale of such foreign maps, charts, and nautical books are to be returned by the Secretary of the Navy into the Treasury of the United States, to be used in the preparation of other works of the same character, which are to be sold upon the same terms; and that the sum of $139,640 is appropriated for the objects named in the third and fourth sections.

Mr. GRIMES. I have no doubt this is a very valuable bill, but I wish to suggest whether the word "engraving" should not be inserted, so as to read, "the cost of printing, engraving, and paper." The "printing," I suppose, would only include the press-work. I move in the tenth line of the first section and in the fifth line of the third section after the word "printing" to insert "engraving."

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection. The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HALE. It strikes me that this is a novel business for the Government, to undertake to print and publish maps and books for sale. I know the proposition has been made many times, but it has been universally objected to. I think there is no precedent for it.

Mr. CHANDLER. All other commercial nations do it. The committee had the matter under consideration for a long time, and finally, on the explanations of the Treasury, Navy, and War Departments, decided that it was for the interests of the commerce of the United States that this provision should be made.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe there is a report from the committee.

Mr. HALE. Let it be read.

The Secretary read the following report, made by Mr. SPRAGUE:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the petition of the American Shipmasters' Association, praying that the Government furnish to their seamen hydrographic books and charts at the cost of paper and printing, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report:

That the subject is deemed by the committee to be of such importance that they have thought proper to embody in this report, as partially embracing and expressing their own views, the petition; a report on the subject by the head of the Bureau of Navigation in the Navy Department, with a part of an accompanying communication; and a report on the subject by the head of the Coast Survey in the Treasury Department.

In addition to the views set forth in these papers, the committee would express the opinion that it is of the first importance that our large and increasing naval and revenue service should enjoy the additional facilities for navigation demanded by the commerce of the country.

The committee would, therefore, respectfully urge upon the Senate the importance of an early and favorable action upon the bill herewith submitted, Senate bill No. 310.

AMERICAN SHIPMASTERS' ASSOCIATION,
No. 51 WALL STREET, ROOMS 23 AND 25,
NEW YORK, February 3, 1893.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned respectfully represent that the Shipmasters' Association was organized for the purpose of advancing the character and efficiency of our mercantile marine by taking measures for the superior education and moral improvement of its officers and seamen, and thereby adding to the safety of our shipping; and as information of a hydrographic character stands prominent as a means of effecting such purposes, and in view of the fact that the Governments of the maritime Powers of the world have prepared and published, for the use of their seamen, hydrographic books and charts to be sold at near their cost, they would solicit similar action on the part of the Government of the United States.

It may be asked why the Government should be called upon to furnish hydrographic rather than any other kind of information; in reply to which they would say that this nation is competing for commercial equality on the ocean with the great maritime Powers of the world; it is therefore necessary to use the same proper means that they use to attain success.

They further represent that the creation and furnishing of nautical information is especially a Government function. All surveys of sea-coasts and the dangers of the ocean have been made at the expense of the Governments of the world; also the astronomical observations necessary for navigation. All the nautical almanacs published by the various nations are furnished at near the cost of printing and paper; the preparation of them by calculations, and the type-setting, are paid for by the respective Governments, which issue them.

They therefore respectfully ask that the Senate and Congress will take such steps as may be necessary to carry out the above-named object, namely, the supplying the seamen of our mercantile marine with charts and books at the cost of paper and printing.

Letter to the Secretary of the Navy.

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, March 23, 1894.

SIR: The Bureau has had under careful consideration the letter of Hon. Z. CHANDLER, chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate, dated February 26, and the petition accompanying it, of the Shipmasters' Association, and of the marine insurance offices of New York, praying that the Government will furnish to our seamen and mercantile marine, books and charts pertaining to the navigation of the high seas, at the cost of paper and printing, and has the honor to submit the following report:

The Bureau has prepared, with mature reflection, the accompanying outline of its views in regard to the extension of its foreign hydrographic labors and duties, and also the accompanying estimates of the cost of establishing an office for this purpose.

The Bureau entertains no doubt whatever that it is desirable (whenever it may be thought by Congress to be expedient and convenient) for our Government to follow the Governments of all the maritime Powers of the world, (Prussia, even, with her small navy and commerce included,) in preparing and publishing, under its own authority and in its own name, all the means and instruments of foreign navigation, and particularly charts.

To show how desirable this is, it may be mentioned that the British admiralty, which has been in the practice of sending copies of their charts and books to several of the public establishments of the country, such as the Coast Survey office, the Light House Board, the Observatory, and Smithsonian Institution, and of sending them also to the distinguished hydrographers, the Messrs. Blunt, of New York, withheld their publications in the autumn of 1861. In the autumn of 1863 the former practice of sending charts and hydrographic books was resumed.

I trust it will be thought that the time has now arrived when we may be able to adopt those measures of care and self-protection which must be adopted sooner or later, if American navigators and seamen are ever to recover the leading position they once occupied. I have endeavored to show in the accompanying outline that the loss of this position has been due in a great measure to the want of a sufficient guardianship on the part of the General Government of the interests of merchants and seamen in the very particulars which form the subject of this petition and correspondence.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
C. H. DAVIS,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. GIDEON WELLES, Secretary of the Navy.

Outline of views in regard to the extension of the hydrographic duties pertaining to the Bureau of Navigation.

GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS.

1. The commercial interests of the country require that the Government should assume a more active and extensive care and supervision over all the means and instruments of foreign navigation.

2. The benefits which would thence accrue to the mercantile community in general are exemplified by the Coast Survey, which has rendered invaluable service within the sphere of its action.

3. The General Government is alone capable of grappling with the subject in its whole scope, because it requires unrestricted communication with foreign Governments, the services of national vessels, uniformity of method, singleness of responsibility, and vast research.

4. This responsibility is one of the most important views bearing on the subject. For want of a proper responsibility erroneous charts are published, and charts of an old date, which have long been imperfect, if not worse, are kept in circulation, and are imposed upon the unsuspecting.

5. The navigator is now subjected to great and unnecessary expense in supplying himself with charts; one of the consequences of which is that he frequently goes to sea unprovided with the requisite means of safe conduct.

6. It is very desirable that the ignorance and neglect of seamen in these particulars should be corrected; they should be taught to know, and encouraged to use, the best books of navigation, sailing directions, and charts.

7. This can only be done by the Government, which must publish these various works on its own responsibility, and furnish them to the merchant and seaman on the terms prescribed in the proviso to section one of the act making appropriations for the naval service, &c., approved March 3, 1859, as follows: "That the Secretary of the Navy may, when in his opinion the interests of navigation would be promoted thereby, cause any nautical works that may, from time to time, be published by the hydrographical office, to be sold at cost, and the proceeds arising therefrom to be placed in the Treasury of the United States."

8. By doing this, the Government will drive out of the market the spurious publications of irresponsible persons, and substitute in the place of them the most accurate and reliable works.

9. The character of our merchant service has already begun to suffer from our failure to perform our duty in these respects; the more so, that our neglect finds the strongest contrast in the conduct of the British, French, and Russian Governments, all of which have taken the entire charge of the foreign hydrography of their respective countries. Our officers and ships, which in a report of a committee of the House of Commons (1836) were once acknowledged to be superior to any, are now regarded as inferior to the British; and that inferiority proceeds in part from the imperfection and insufficiency of the means of navigation.

10. The publication of hydrographic works is contemplated and provided for by several acts of Congress, which, however, were designed for the most part to meet special cases; the obligation has been recognized, but the sphere of action has hitherto been too limited.

11. The course pursued by other commercial nations renders it expedient that we should no longer leave it to private enterprise, knowledge, and fidelity to create the means by which the wide and increasing commerce of the country is conducted in safety over the great oceans. To continue to do so will be to endanger the best interests of that commerce, to imperil life, and to accept for our merchants and seamen an inferior position among the traders and travelers upon the sea.

PLAN OF PROCEEDING.

- a. In reference to charts, maps, drawings, views, plans, photographic illustrations, &c.
- b. In reference to works of instruction and information; as sailing directions, descriptive tracts, tables of geographical position, current and tide tables, general and special memoirs relating to the sea, &c.
- c. In reference to books of navigation, properly so called, and of nautical astronomy.

In reference to charts, &c.

1. In order that the Government may enter, as soon as possible, into the exercise of a beneficial control over the foreign charts of the country, it must begin not only to engrave its own charts, but to purchase engraved plates.
2. The process of engraving is slow; the establishment and complete organization of a hydrographic office from the resources now in the hands of the Government is impossible.
3. But the Government is in possession of much useful information which may be turned to account when it begins to print and publish on its own authority.
4. The Government commands very valuable resources for the improvement of foreign hydrography, in its cruising vessels, which would be systematically developed.
5. The hydrographic reports, records, and data of all kinds, surveys included, will be brought together and applied to the best use.
6. Communications will be opened with the offices of hydrography of other nations.
7. Compensation will be paid for valuable information, and by this means investigations, surveys, and observations will be stimulated.
8. The stamp of the Government, or its mark of authentication, will be put on all charts published by it.
9. A list of its charts will be published from time to time in a way in which it will be most likely to fall under the eye of the seaman, and keep him informed of what he is to ask for.
10. The original plates will be carefully preserved, and the printing will be made from electrotype copies.
11. The ultimate object will be wholly to supply the foreign cruiser and trader with charts either actually made by the Government and sold in compliance with the terms of the law above quoted, or with charts made under its sanction by private individuals, stamped with its authority, and sold with its permission.

In reference to books of information and instruction.

1. All such books of merit will be collected in a library for consultation and study.
2. Books of sailing directions and those relating to the geography and physical science of the sea will be published by the Bureau of Navigation or under its direction, as the means and occasion offer.

In reference to books of navigation, properly so called.

1. The use of books of navigation is so intimately connected with the use of charts and sailing directions, that the former cannot be conveniently separated from the latter.
2. If they are all under the same control they can be made so to correspond as to be of mutual help to each other.
3. The Government ought, therefore, to either acquire a right to the Navigator in common use among American seamen, or else to publish a Navigator of its own.
4. With the Nautical Almanac, the Treatises and Manuals of Navigation, and the foreign charts under its control, it will be able to carry forward each one in its own peculiar path of improvement, and make them all harmonize together.
5. The Government would then be at liberty to publish such manuals as it might think proper, without interfering with private property.
6. All that has been said concerning the effect upon our commercial prosperity, and upon the standing of our mercantile marine, to be produced by supplying our seamen with the best charts, applies with equal force to the Manuals of Navigation.
7. Those improvements in navigation which proceed from the application of the highest science enter chiefly into the Navigator and Nautical Almanac.
8. The Navigator and Nautical Almanac are inseparable companions at sea; they are complements of each other and they must be used together and can only be used together. Having the latter, the Government would find it expedient to acquire possession of the former.

Estimates for preparing and purchasing charts, plates, books, and copyrights, for the purposes of navigation, and for the publication thereof; and for the organization of an office of Foreign Hydrography in the Bureau of Navigation.

For the purchase of three printing presses.....	$2,300
For the purchase of finished plates.....	30,000
For the purchase of new plates, and of paper, ink, linen, and other printing materials, and for the cost of printing and backing charts...	20,000
For electrotyping plates.....	3,000
For the purchase and preparation of sailing directions.....	10,000
For the purchase and preparation of books of navigation.....	50,000
For salaries of engravers.....	6,000
For salaries of hydrographer and draughtsmen...	8,000
For salary of book-keeper.....	2,000
For salary of clerk.....	1,500
For pay of messenger.....	840
For pay of laborer.....	600
For rent of building.....	3,000
For fuel and light.....	500
For drawing tables and office furniture.....	500
For instruments and office stationery.....	500
For contingent.....	1,000
Total.....	$139,640

The sale of the charts and books of sailing directions and navigation, under the existing law, will repay the expense of printing and publication. The amount here estimated for the finished plates and books will in course of time be refunded; the actual cost of these charts and books for the Navy will hereafter be very much less.

COAST SURVEY OFFICE, February 25, 1863.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th instant, inclosing a letter from the chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, and the memorial of the Shipmasters' Association of New York, as to the necessity of providing by law hydrographic books and charts to be sold at near their cost for the superior education and moral improvement of American officers and seamen engaged in commerce.

The Treasury Department has, as already stated in my report to you of December 19, 1852, made a beginning in this direction by its action in the matter of the charts of the coast, prepared at this office. It has also done the same in its sale of charts of the United States exploring expedition.

It has also, in the same liberal spirit, provided by regulations that the results of the coast survey may be communicated to any one desiring a copy, provided that the communication is duly acknowledged, and that no expense be incurred in copying, &c.

It happens, however, as a drawback to the usefulness of this rule, that there is no security that this information may be used in an approved form, or even correctly given to the public, and the very acknowledgment may seem to make the survey responsible for work inaccurately set down, or even not at all executed by it.

The fact is, that this is a business which should be carried on exclusively by the Government, which can alone give to mariners the guarantees for accuracy which are needed.

If the survey of the coast had been left to hap-hazard private enterprise the work would have failed utterly, being partially executed, and only in certain favored localities, and in these even would not have commanded the respect and confidence of navigators, without which the enterprise would have proved quite useless.

The experience of all nations agrees in this. So in regard to the publication of charts experience speaks not less loudly.

By act of June 3, 1844, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to dispose of the maps and charts of the survey of the coast of the United States, and to present copies to foreign Governments, Departments of our own Government, and literary and scientific institutions. The Department adopted the principle that the price at which the maps and charts should be sold should be nearly that of the cost of paper and printing, with a margin for general expenses, as commissions and the like.

By the regulations of 1844 the sale of the charts at such prices as would pay for the cost of the printing and paper was authorized, so that the publication is without expense to the Government, and the mariners who purchase have the benefit proposed by the Shipmasters' Association to be extended to all charts whatsoever and to nautical books.

The maps and charts of the Coast Survey, required for the use of the Army and Navy, are furnished free of cost from the Coast Survey office to the War and Navy Departments, and a certain distribution authorized by the Treasury Department is made to literary and scientific institutions in all parts of the United States. In 1853, prior to the war, sixty-two hundred charts were thus distributed, and since the war there have been fifty-five thousand distributed to the Army and Navy.

The head of the Bureau of Navigation in the Navy Department has the sanction of the head of the Department to prepare and publish foreign charts, as recommended by the Shipmasters' Association.

Justice would seem to require, if this publication interferes with existing private enterprises, that an appropriation be made to pay for the property thus injured, and that, as far as convenient, it be converted to public and general use under the new plan.

The Navigator, first planned and executed by the eminent mathematician, Doctor Nathaniel Bowditch, and used by our Navy and mercantile marine, should belong to the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department, the primary object being the supply of the Navy with tables, &c., for purposes of navigation, while the Coast Pilot, originating with the elder Edmund Blunt, should be issued under the sanction of the Coast Survey, which alone has the necessary information for its improvement. No nation but ours depends upon private enterprise to furnish a Coast Pilot. At no place within the control of the Government can such a work be so well prepared as at the Coast Survey office, where the materials for its preparation are all to be found. The printing will be made under the general law, or by special resolution, as may be thought best. The details of publication could be arranged without cost.

A simple resolution like the following would enable the execution of the views of the Shipmasters' Association:

Resolved, That it is desirable for the improvement of the mercantile marine, for the promotion of commerce and navigation, by providing accurate and cheap charts and nautical books under the control of Government authority, and for the use of navigators generally, and of the naval and revenue service, that the Secretary of the Treasury should be authorized to publish and sell domestic charts and nautical books relating to the coast at the cost of printing and paper, and that the Secretary of the Navy should be authorized to publish foreign charts and general nautical books for the use of the Navy and of navigators, to be sold at the cost of printing and paper merely; and said Secretaries are so authorized accordingly.

Resolved, That the sum of ——— dollars be appropriated for the execution of this resolution, and that the moneys received for the sale of maps, charts, and books be turned over by the Secretaries of the Treasury and Navy to the Treasury of the United States for the preparation of other works for the same purposes, and to be sold on the same terms.

I return the papers inclosed to me.

Very respectfully, yours,
A. D. BACHE,
Superintendent United States Coast Survey.

Hon. S. P. CHASE, Secretary of the Treasury.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

TELEGRAPH TO THE PACIFIC.

On motion of Mr. CHANDLER, the bill (S. No. 290) for increased facilities of telegraph communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States and the Territory of Idaho was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the United States Telegraph Company, and their associates, to erect a line or lines of magnetic telegraph between the Missouri river and the city of San Francisco, in the State of California, on such route as they may select, to connect with the lines of that company now constructed and being constructed through the States of the Union. The company is to have the use of such unoccupied land of the United States as may be necessary for the right of way, and materials, and for the establishing of stations along the line for repairs, not exceeding at any station one quarter section of land, and the stations not to exceed one in fifteen miles on the average of the whole line, unless the lands shall be required by the Government of the United States for railroad or other purposes; but no right to preempt any lands under the laws of the United States is to inure to the company or their agents, or any other person or persons whatsoever.

The second section authorizes the United States Telegraph Company, under the direction of the President of the United States, to erect a line of telegraph from Fort Hall, by Walla-Walla and the Dalles and San Francisco to Portland, in the State of Oregon, and from Fort Hall to Bannock and Virginia City, in the Territory of Idaho, with the same privileges as to the right of way, and so forth, as is provided in the first section; the United States to have priority in the use of the lines of telegraph to Oregon and Idaho, and for such use the United States Telegraph Company is to receive for the term of ten years from the time of its completion, annually, the sum of $20,000, in full payment for all messages transmitted.

According to the third section, the company is to send and receive dispatches on payment of the regular charges for transmission of dispatches over any line that may now or hereafter be constructed by the authority or aid of Congress, to connect with any line or lines authorized or erected by the Russian or English Governments, and all dispatches received by the line are to be transmitted in the order of their reception, and the answers thereto to be delivered to the United States Telegraph Company for transmission over their lines to the office whence the original message was sent.

The fourth section provides that the several railroad companies authorized by act of Congress July 1, 1862, may enter into arrangements with the United States Telegraph Company so that the line of telegraph between the Missouri river and San Francisco may be made upon and along the line of that railroad and branches as fast as the roads and branches are built, and if such arrangements be entered into and the transfer of the telegraph line be made in accordance therewith to the line of the railroads and branches, such transfer shall, for all purposes of the act referred to, be held and considered a fulfillment on the part of the railroad companies of the provision of the act in regard to the construction of a telegraph line; and, in case of disagreement, the telegraph company are authorized to remove their line of telegraph along and upon the line of railroad therein contemplated, without prejudice to the rights of the railroad companies.

The Committee on Commerce had reported the bill with an amendment, which was to strike out the following clause in the second section:

And for such use the United States Telegraph Company shall receive for the term of ten years from the time of its completion, annually, the sum of $20,000, which shall be in full payment for all messages transmitted. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay to the United States Telegraph Company, in quarterly payments, the amount above stated; but no payment shall be made until said lines are completed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. CONNESS. I see that there is a section contained in the bill authorizing this company to make an arrangement with the railroad companies. I think it is substantially the provision contained in the Pacific railroad act. I do not understand why it is inserted here.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is granting the same privilege to this other company that is already granted to the existing company.

Mr. POMEROY. The old Pacific railroad act as passed gave the right to the American Telegraph Company, but not to any other. This is simply to extend it to this other company. The new Pacific railroad bill has not yet become a law, and we do not know exactly what shape it will assume.

Mr. CONNESS. This, then, I understand is to permit another line of telegraph on the line of the railroad.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is all. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

INTERCOURSE WITH DISLOYAL STATES.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move now to take up the bill (S. No. 232) in addition to the several acts concerning commercial intercourse between loyal and insurrectionary States, and to provide for the collection of captured and abandoned property and the prevention of frauds in States declared in insurrection.

The motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the bill was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SUMNER. I wish to call the attention of my friend from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] to the first two sections of the bill as originally introduced. The committee recommended that they be struck out; but I suggest that they be allowed to stand.

Mr. MORRILL. I have some amendments first to propose by way of perfecting the bill, and then I will listen to the suggestion.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well.

Mr. MORRILL. I move in section six, line six, to strike out the words "hereby repealed," and insert:

Except so far as may be necessary to authorize supplying the necessities of loyal persons residing in insurrectionary States, within the lines of actual occupation by the military forces of the United States, as indicated by published order of the commanding general of the department or district so occupied; and also, except so far as may be necessary to authorize persons residing within such lines to bring or send to market in the loyal States any products which they shall have produced with their own labor or the labor of freedmen or others employed and paid by them, pursuant to rules relating thereto, which may be established under proper authority. And no goods, wares, or merchandise shall be taken into a State declared in insurrection or transported therein except to and from such places, and to such monthly amounts as shall have been previously agreed upon in writing by the commanding general of the department in which such places are situated and an officer designated by the Secretary of the Treasury for that purpose.

Mr. BROWN. What is the effect of that?

Mr. MORRILL. At the request of the Senator from Missouri I will explain the design of this amendment. It will be seen by examining the sixth section of this bill that it repeals the proviso to the fifth section of the act of July 13, 1861, which proviso authorizes the President in his discretion to license and permit commercial relations with any State or section the inhabitants of which have been declared to be in a state of insurrection. I now propose, instead of repealing the proviso, to restrict that authority of the President to grant licenses in the manner specified in the amendment. That is the general effect of the proposition. By the act of 1861, all commercial relations between the States in insurrection and the loyal States were absolutely prohibited, with this saving clause in the fifth section. Now, if we repeal the saving clause, the statute of course would stand in its absolute character and be a prohibition of all commercial intercourse between the States in insurrection and the loyal States. By the amendment proposed, the authority of the President to grant licenses for trade will continue, but will be further restricted.

Mr. BROWN. Do I understand that this amendment is assented to by the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. MORRILL. I have offered it. The proposition of the committee was an absolute repeal. I have one other amendment to submit in order that it may be printed and go over with the bill until to-morrow.

The amendments were received and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL. As this bill has been several times before the Senate, and if it is passed at all must be passed soon in order to insure action on the part of the House of Representatives, I hope the Senate will indulge me in making the bill the special order for to-morrow at one o'clock. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to by a two thirds vote.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 133) for the relief of William Sawyer and others, of the State of Ohio; and a joint resolution (H. R. No. 110), to declare the construction of a joint resolution for the relief of W. B. Matchett, approved June 20, 1864.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 187) to carry into effect the treaty between the United States and her Britannic Majesty for the final settlement of the claims of the Hudson's Bay and Puget Sound Agricultural Companies.

PROPOSED INTRODUCTION OF A RESOLUTION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) The hour of one o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the special order, which is the civil appropriation bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask to suspend all prior orders to enable me to offer a joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It requires the unanimous consent of the Senate. Is there objection?

Several SENATORS objected.

Mr. DAVIS. On my motion to suspend the prior orders, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Several SENATORS. What is the resolution? Let it be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a resolution. The reading of the resolution for information is called for. Is the reading objected to?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to its being read for information.

Mr. DAVIS. I moved to suspend all prior orders that I may be enabled to offer a joint resolution, and on that motion I have asked for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONNESS. I first call for the reading of the resolution for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the resolution is first asked for. Is the reading of the resolution objected to?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, sir, I object to its reading or reception at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It cannot be read without the consent of the Senate, there being another subject before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust we shall proceed with the special order, the civil appropriation bill, and go on regularly.

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to a question of order. Is it in order for me to ask a suspension of all prior orders to offer a joint resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair it is.

Mr. DAVIS. That is the motion I make, and upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not so understand the Senator from Kentucky. The Chair understood the Senator from Kentucky to ask the consent of the Senate to introduce a resolution. Common consent was requisite for that. The Chair put the question to the Senate, and the Senator from California asked that the resolution be read for information. The Chair asked if there was objection to the reading, and the Senator from Illinois objected to its reading. The Chair then ruled that it being objected to it could not even be read, there being another subject pending before the body. If the Senator from Kentucky, however, moves that that subject and all prior orders be postponed, it is a motion, in the opinion of the Chair, in order, and will be so entertained.

Mr. DAVIS. That is my motion, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONNESS. Before that be done, so that I can know how to vote, I ask for the reading of the resolution.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The reason for my making the objection to the reading of the resolution was this; I understand that no member of the Senate has a right to introduce a resolution at any other time except when resolutions are in order, unless by unanimous consent. I understood that the Senator from Kentucky could not introduce this resolution without unanimous consent. The time had arrived for the consideration of the appropriation bill fixed by order of the Senate. The appropriation bill was before the Senate, the Chair having called for its consideration. If the Senator from Kentucky can by a majority vote introduce a resolution at any time, unanimous consent need never be asked; it depends then on a vote of the Senate. Now, I suppose that when the Senator from Kentucky out of order asks to introduce a joint resolution, he cannot do it by a vote of the Senate. For instance, this bill is before the Senate and has been once read. I believe the rules provide that it shall be read on different days; but a bill is often read three times upon the same day. Can a majority of the Senate direct it to be read three times upon the same day, or must it not be by unanimous consent? The rule requiring unanimous consent amounts to nothing in this body if a majority may control such a matter. Suppose I wish to introduce a bill, I deny that it is competent for me, when the introduction of bills is not in order, to move to suspend all other orders to allow me to introduce a bill, and then take a vote on that, and if a majority of the Senate so decide, introduce my bill; and it seems to me a joint resolution stands on the same footing. The practice of the Senate I know has been to ask if unanimous consent was given.

Mr. DAVIS. The motion I make is made every day and entertained, if I understand aright the uniform proceedings of the Senate. It is always in order, when there is not a pending subject being acted upon by the Senate, to move to suspend all prior orders to take up any particular business; and it is optional with the Senate (and they exercise that power every day or nearly every day) to dispense with all previous orders and take up any business which a majority deem proper to be considered.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I know we every day suspend one order of business and take up another species of business before the Senate; but I never knew, since I have been a member of the Senate, a motion made to suspend all prior orders and all business before the Senate to introduce a resolution into the Senate, and I think it is not in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. POMEROY. If consent had been obtained to introduce the resolution, I think it would then have been in order to suspend all other business so as to consider it; but it took unanimous consent to introduce the resolution, and as that was objected to, and as the resolution, therefore, could not be before the Senate, we cannot now by a majority suspend the rules to consider it when it took unanimous consent to introduce it.

Mr. DAVIS. When the Senate decide to suspend all pending orders, there is no business whatever then before the Senate, and it is in perfect order for the member who makes that motion then to offer to introduce business in any form or any class. It is only necessary to state the position that it may receive the assent of all minds who have any knowledge of parliamentary law. When the Senate have determined to suspend all business, the Senate then is a blank; there is nothing pending; and it is in order for a Senator to offer any business whatever. But the Senate have first to decide whether they will suspend all prior orders or not. If they refuse to suspend all prior orders, of course there is no chance of getting the resolution before the body.

Mr. CONNESS. The proposition of the Senator from Kentucky may be correct, but his question is not in that position. As I understand it, the honorable Senator rose, not when all prior orders were suspended, but when the Senate was in the process of considering the business before it in the order in which that business was before it, and he asked leave to present a resolution. I desired to grant the Senator leave to introduce a resolution for one; but I first desired to know whether the resolution was a fit one or not, and I desired to govern my vote by my opinion on that subject. I did not believe, and do not now, that he had the right to offer the resolution at the time he did, as stated by the Senator from Illinois, without unanimous consent, and before I would yield my consent I called for its reading. The Senate are presumed as yet, of course, to be entirely ignorant of the contents of the resolution. I would not yield my consent to consider it, as I have been to the desk to examine its contents. I may be permitted to state that it is the same resolution which was attempted to be offered on another day some time past by the honorable Senator concerning propositions of peace with rebels, or a suspension of the war. When the question was up before, it will be remembered that I suggested that I should like to have the question voted upon in this form, whether the Senate would receive such a resolution or not. I totally object, for one, to the reception of such a resolution in this body.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. CONNESS. I am done.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose that, as we are acting under a special order, a question of this kind cannot be raised. We are acting under a special order of the Senate to take up and consider a certain bill; and surely a Senator cannot now introduce a resolution when the rule of the Senate is imperative that it cannot be considered if there is a single objection. The Senate is acting under a special order; it is proceeding with the consideration of a bill that was made a special order for the time designated. He certainly cannot interpose by offering a resolution and then raising a point of order upon it, and then getting up a debate and delaying the business of the Senate. I insist, therefore, that the special order shall be proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order made by the Senator from Ohio the Chair thinks is susceptible of easy decision. The special order was before the Senate, having been announced by the Chair when the hour arrived. The Senator from Kentucky then asked leave to introduce a resolution—

Mr. DAVIS. No, sir. The Chair misapprehends the motion that I made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the motion as the Senator now makes it, then.

Mr. DAVIS. And I made it in those terms at first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky moves to postpone the present and all prior orders to enable him to introduce a resolution.

Mr. CONNESS. I object until the resolution is read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection to the reading in that state of things is premature, because the primary question is, will the Senate consent that the Senator from Kentucky shall offer the resolution? The objection to its reading is therefore premature, because the Senate must say in the first place whether they will receive it even for the purpose of being read.

Mr. CONNESS. Is it not the privilege of a Senator before he shall vote as to whether another shall have the right to introduce a resolution, to know its contents?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That may be, but the question asked by the Senator from Kentucky is a vote on his motion to suspend the present and all prior orders to enable him to introduce a resolution—a naked motion.

Mr. CONNESS. Unless the resolution be read, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is perfectly proper, and each Senator has a right to vote on the motion as he sees fit. In the opinion of the Chair the special order is under the control of the Senate, and may be postponed by a major vote of the Senate. It is before the Senate, but may be postponed by a major vote. The motion of the Senator from Kentucky the Chair regards as in order, but of course it is subject to the decision of the Senate upon the motion whether they will postpone all previous orders to enable him to introduce a resolution, the contents of which are wholly unknown to the body.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will vote to allow the Senator to introduce his resolution without reference to the contents of the resolution. I do not know what the resolution is, but as the Senator desires to introduce a resolution I will give him by my vote an opportunity to do so.

Mr. DAVIS. The gentlemen who object to my motion confound two separate motions that are entirely distinct. They confound a motion to present a resolution with a motion to suspend all prior orders to give an opportunity to present a resolution. The motion that I make is not to present a resolution. I have no doubt my honorable friend from California will vote against the presentation of the resolution; I expect it; but I have not made that motion. The motion which I make, and which is the only question before the Senate, is this: will the Senate suspend the pending and all prior orders so as to give me an opportunity to make that motion, or not?

Mr. CONNESS. Then I understand that the honorable Senator's resolution is not now before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in the possession of the body at all.

Mr. DAVIS. On this motion to suspend I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is that the Senate suspend the present and all prior orders to enable the Senator from Kentucky to offer a resolution, and on that motion the Senator from Kentucky asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONNESS. Now before the vote be taken, if in order, I ask for the reading of the title of the resolution that the Senator proposes to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair the resolution is not before the Senate, neither the substance nor title, and neither can be read.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am so well satisfied that such a practice as this would lead to the entire subversion of business in this body that I am constrained to appeal from the decision of the Chair. It cannot be, it seems to me, that a member can move to suspend a special order, made so by a two-thirds vote, for the purpose of introducing a thing that is out of order except by unanimous consent when he has done it. He cannot introduce his resolution except by unanimous consent after this motion is passed. His motion is to suspend the pending and all prior orders to take up, what? Not something that is before the Senate, but to allow him to bring in something. I insist that such a rule as that is subversive of the business of the Senate, and I am constrained to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. We are called upon to vote whether we will postpone—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the appeal of the Senator from Illinois from the decision of the Chair. The Chair decides to entertain the motion. The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?"

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The original question was to determine whether we would lay aside the regular order to allow the Senator from Kentucky to bring in his resolution. How can we judge whether we prefer to lay aside the special order and act on the resolution unless we know what the resolution is?

Mr. DAVIS. Will the honorable Senator permit me to make just a single suggestion? The question is not whether the Senate will suspend the pending and all prior orders to take up my resolution. It is simply whether they will suspend the present and all prior orders or not; and if they decide to suspend the pending and all prior orders they have the right to take up my resolution or any other business that the majority of the Senate may determine to take up. The motion to take up my resolution is not a part of the question at all.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It seems to me that the Senator is utterly mistaken. The question surely is not whether we shall suspend the special order without any purpose. It is not very probable that the Senate will suspend it without any purpose. If they suspend the special order they suspend it for a purpose, and the purpose is to take up something else; and if in the judgment of the Senate we think that something else had better be taken up than the special order, then we say so. But how can we say so unless we know in some way or other what it is that is proposed?

It is clear to my mind that when a Senator is called on to vote whether he will lay aside the special order to take up something else, or allow something else to come up, it is necessary to his forming the opinion whether he ought to do it or not that he should know in some way or other, by the reading of the title or the statement of the title or the statement of the contents, what it is proposed to take up. That seems to me so clear that I apprehend the Chair, on further consideration, will see that it is absolutely necessary that that should be so; and this whole matter of the decision of the Chair, and the appeal from the decision of the Chair, might be acted upon by the Chair without going to the trouble of an appeal. I think an appeal to those who are accustomed to and acquainted with the order of business herein the body will show that it always has been the case that if you move to lay aside one thing, you must move to lay it aside for some purpose. Now, what is that purpose? We want to know in some way or other the object of laying aside.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from Wisconsin will allow me, I want to suggest that he is a little mistaken in the statement that he makes. It is not to take up a resolution. That is not what the motion is. It is to allow the Senator from Kentucky to offer a resolution, and that is the reason we cannot have it read. It is not before us. The motion of the Senator from Kentucky was to postpone the pending business and all prior orders. Now, prior to what? Prior to this time. Not to take up anything, but for the purpose as he stated of introducing a resolution which he sent up to the table. I know the Senator undertakes to deny now that he had any such purpose as introducing a resolution, though—

Mr. DAVIS. I have not denied it. Do you say I deny it?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understood the Senator from Kentucky to say a moment ago that his motion was simply to suspend the pending business and all other prior orders without avowing what his purpose would then be—

Mr. DAVIS. I did not make any such statement.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then I misunderstood him. I stand corrected. I did not mean to state him wrongly. The Senator from Kentucky knows I would not intentionally state him wrongly. Then, if I understand him now, he couples it with the permission to introduce a resolution—

Mr. DAVIS. I do not couple it now with any such permission.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. DAVIS. I will make myself understood.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will give way for the Senator to state his proposition. I understood him so.

Mr. DAVIS. I stated that my proposition was to suspend the present and all prior orders.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Simply?

Mr. DAVIS. I stated at the same time that it was my purpose to offer a resolution, but I also stated that the only question before the Senate was whether it would suspend all prior orders or not. If it decided to suspend all prior orders it could refuse to take up my resolution or permit me to introduce it, and could take up what business it pleased, and I say the parliamentary rule is so administered in every deliberative assembly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Kentucky now to make a motion simply to suspend all prior orders? Is that the motion?

Mr. DAVIS. That is the motion; I avowing my purpose, if that motion is sustained by the Senate, to offer my resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has misunderstood the motion of the Senator from Kentucky, and is very clear that the motion as now stated cannot be entertained. A motion to suspend the present and all prior orders must connect with it some ulterior purpose on which the Senate can act. It is an indivisible thing, like a motion to strike out and insert. The Chair cannot entertain the motion as now stated.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Chair permit me to make a suggestion in a word?

Mr. SHERMAN. If it is not in order I must object. I am in charge of a bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The decision of the Chair is that the motion of the Senator from Kentucky as stated cannot now be entertained, the question being the bill reported by the Senator of Ohio, which was made the special order for one o'clock. From the decision of the Chair the Senator from Kentucky appeals, and the question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?"

Mr. McDUGALL. Is it not within the power of the Senate to conduct its order of business? Although the Senator from Ohio may have a bill pending now and under consideration, is it not within the power of the Senate to take up any new subject-matter by a majority vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so, in the opinion of the Chair, but no such motion has been made. At least the Senator from Kentucky does not make such a motion.

Mr. DAVIS. May I be allowed to say a word upon the appeal?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. DAVIS. The motion that I made was to suspend the pending and all prior orders, avowing the purpose that, if that motion was sustained, I wished to offer a resolution. Now, I maintain that that motion is in strict order, and has been entertained from time immemorial in every parliamentary body.

Mr. McDUGALL. I desire to ask a question of the Senator.

Mr. DAVIS. I yield for the purpose of receiving the question.

Mr. McDUGALL. I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky if he has sent his resolution to the table.

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly I have.

Mr. McDUGALL. And offered it to be read at the desk?

Mr. DAVIS. I sent it to the desk before I made my motion. Now, Mr. President, I merely want to state the point of parliamentary principle and practice without any argument about it. I made the motion in the form in which the motion is universally made, in which form only it can be legitimately made. I did not make, without avowing any purpose, a motion to suspend the pending and all prior orders, but I made a motion to suspend the pending and all prior orders, avowing that it was my purpose to offer a resolution, which was the inducement with me to make that motion. Now, sir, I maintain that the parliamentary practice in every deliberative assembly is that such a motion is always made in that form, and if it is sustained by the body to which it is made, it does not bring up necessarily nor at all the resolution or the business that was connected with the motion. On the contrary, the Senate may decide to take up any other business, and I have known the House of Representatives and the Senate to have such a motion made to them hundreds of times, the House of Representatives particularly, and the motion to be sustained to suspend the pending and all prior orders, and then I have known three or four distinct motions to be suggested, and all to be pending before the Senate or House at one time and each competing with the other. The determination of the Senate or of any deliberative body to suspend the pending and all prior orders does not necessarily bring up the resolution or the business that is connected with it by the person making the motion. When the House or the Senate has so acted, it is just as free to take up any other business as the business that has been mentioned in connection with the motion, and that is the parliamentary law.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. DAVIS. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The decision of the Chair was that the motion of the Senator from Kentucky could not be entertained. From that decision the Senator from Kentucky took an appeal, and the question was, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?" The motion now is to lay that appeal upon the table. Those who are in favor of laying the appeal upon the table will, as their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON. Before voting I wish to know exactly what the decision of the Chair is. I will state what I understand it to be. The member from Kentucky—

Several SENATORS. You are not in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is my duty to insist on order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand that; I am not going to debate it; I only want to understand what the question is. I cannot vote without it except by a guess. I only wish to know what it is. The member from Kentucky has moved to suspend all prior orders, and does not accompany it with any purpose as a part of his motion to take up other business. It is simply a proposition to suspend all prior orders. I understand the Chair to say that that cannot be received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the decision of the Chair.

Mr. McDUGALL. I should like to have advice. I do not understand exactly the reason of the rule laid down by the Chair. I should like to have the Chair, for the information not only of myself but of other Senators, to state the reason of the decision. I do not understand it myself. I hope the Chair will be kind enough to state the reason of the rule, and what the rule is exactly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair such a motion cannot be entertained, because it would leave the body without business. The Senate would simply vote that they suspend business, and there it would stop. In the opinion of the Chair no motion of that sort is a parliamentary motion.

Mr. McDUGALL. I understood the resolution had been brought to the table here, and that the motion was to postpone all prior orders to take up the resolution sent to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not the motion. The motion is not so made.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Collamer, Conness, Cowan, Dixon, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Hicks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Sherman, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wiley, and Wilson—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Davis, Hendricks, Powell, Riddle, and Saulsbury—6.

ABSENT—Messrs. Carlile, Clark, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Harding, Harris, Henderson, Lane of Indiana, Ramsey, Richardson, Sprague, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wright—17.

So the appeal was ordered to lie on the table.

MILITARY INTERFERENCE WITH ELECTIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The special order is before the Senate.

Mr. POWELL. I move to suspend the order under consideration for the purpose of taking up the motion entered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARLAN] to reconsider Senate bill No. 37. I do not desire to say one word on the subject; I merely wish to take the vote by yeas and nays.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope we shall not postpone the appropriation bill for that purpose. I simply ask for the question.

The motion was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPherson, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 296) in relation to the fees and emoluments of the marshal, attorney, and clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 435) concerning location of lands in the State of Missouri; a bill (H. R. No. 553) to facilitate the repayment of depositors at the assay office in New York; and a bill (H. R. No. 534) to provide for the improvement of the grounds of the Government hospital for the insane by an exchange of land.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (S. No. 55) in relation to the circuit court in and for the district of Wisconsin, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House insisted on its amendments to the bill (S. No.

130) to regulate proceedings in cases between landlord and tenant in the District of Columbia, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate, and had appointed Mr. J. F. Wilson of Iowa, Mr. T. T. Davis of New York, and Mr. E. Wheeler of Wisconsin, managers at the conference on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 26) to provide for the public instruction of youth in the county of Washington, District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 85) to provide for the examination of certain officers of the Army;

A bill (S. No. 115) for the proper organization of the levy court of the county of Washington, in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 162) amendatory of an act entitled "An act to promote the progress of the useful arts," approved March 3, 1863;

A bill (S. No. 279) to amend the act of Congress making donations to settlers on the public lands in Oregon, approved September 27, 1855, and the acts amendatory thereto; and

A bill (H. R. No. 537) to incorporate the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I desire to make a personal explanation. Last evening the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] being compelled to leave the Senate, I agreed to pair off with him in the vote upon the measure then pending to repeal the commutation clause. The first vote that was taken was upon a motion to adjourn, and I then stated the arrangement that I had made with that Senator and declined to vote; but the final vote was not taken until after twelve o'clock, and by that time I had entirely forgotten the arrangement, and when my name was called I voted and immediately left the Senate Chamber, and the mistake I had made did not occur to me until I had got some way down the avenue. I ask leave, therefore, with this explanation, to withdraw my name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FOSTER.) The Senator from Wisconsin asks to withdraw his name from the vote of last evening.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Of course I care nothing about that. It is not necessary that the name be withdrawn, for it does not change the result. All I desired was that it should appear that my vote was compensated by the withdrawal of another vote.

Mr. HOWE. If the Senator is satisfied, I do not insist upon the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin then makes no motion.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

A bill (No. 133) for the relief of William Sawyer and others of the State of Ohio—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (No. 435) concerning locations of lands in the State of Missouri—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (No. 553) to facilitate the repayment of depositors at the assay office in New York—to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (No. 554) to provide for the improvement of the grounds of the Government hospital for the insane by an exchange of land—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 527) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1865.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was in lines one hundred and thirty-four and one hundred and thirty-five of section one to strike out "during the sickly season" after "Home;" so as to make the clause read: "For repairs, refitting, and furnishing the President's summer residence at the Soldiers' Home, $3,000." The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and forty-three of section one, after the word "Potomac," to strike out "navy-yard;" so as to read: "For repairs of the Potomac and upper bridges, $6,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section two from the enacting clause to and including line twenty-four, in the following words:

That a marble floor, similar to that of the Congressional Library or the Senate vestibule, shall be constructed in the old Hall of the House of Representatives, using such marble as may be now on hand and not otherwise required, and that suitable structures and railings shall be therein erected for the reception and protection of statuary, and the same shall be under the supervision and direction of the Commissioner of Public Buildings; and so much of the moneys now or heretofore appropriated for the Capitol extension as may be necessary, not exceeding the sum of $24,000, is hereby set apart and shall be disbursed for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned. And the President is hereby authorized to invite each and all the States to provide and furnish statues, in marble or bronze, not exceeding two in number for each State, of deceased persons who have been citizens thereof and illustrious for their historic renown or from distinguished civic or military services, such as each State shall determine to be worthy of this national commemoration; and when so furnished the same shall be placed in the old Hall of the House of Representatives, in the Capitol of the United States, which is hereby set apart, or so much thereof as may be necessary, as a national statuary hall, for the purposes herein indicated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line thirty-six of section two to insert:

To enable the Commissioner of Public Buildings to inclose Franklin square with a wooden fence, and to grade the same and plant it with trees and shrubbery, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out from line forty-eight to line fifty-three of section two, as follows:

For balance due the draughtsman for his services in charge and continuation of the series of maps ordered by resolution of May 4, 1843, for part of the fiscal year ending in 1862, $1,520 38.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "dollars," in line fifty-five of section two, to strike out "to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, who is hereby charged with the care of said bridge;" so that the clause will read: "For repairs to the bridge across the Potomac river at Little Falls, $500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the words "penitentiary and" before "jail" in line sixty-three of section two.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines eighty-three and eighty-four of section two, which contain the following item for the Government hospital for the insane:

For continuation of the wall inclosing the grounds of the hospital, $10,000.

Mr. GRIMES. I inquire of the Senator from Ohio why that clause is to be stricken out.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only reason I can give is that the wall is now in a condition, with the fence which is also there, to make a very good inclosure around the hospital for the insane, and we thought it better not to continue the work on the wall at this time when the expenses of materials, &c., are so very high. We thought it was a work that might properly be postponed.

Mr. GRIMES. There is a good deal of work that might be postponed. The appropriation of $3,000 for Franklin square might be postponed with quite as much propriety as this. The Government has undertaken to construct a brick wall around the hospital grounds, and it is partially built, and this appropriation merely proposes to continue the work so as to complete it. Where the brick wall is not completed there is a mere temporary board fence that does not confine patients at all. The purpose is to allow the patients to have the range of the grounds and keep within the wall, the wall being so far away from the grounds as not to be observable by the patients until they come right to it. I do not see the propriety of striking out the appropriation.

Mr. SHERMAN. The $10,000 here appropriated will not be sufficient to make the inclosure complete by a great way. It will take a great many more thousands besides these $10,000. This is simply to continue a work that is now completed around the front and main sides of the hospital, as I am told. This brick wall will only supersede a fence that is now sufficient as a fence, which they have got along very well with for many years. The price of brick has advanced far beyond the ordinary advance of other materials, and we thought it best to postpone the construction of this work for the present.

Mr. HARLAN. I hope retrenchment will be made in some other direction. The object of this appropriation seems to be to enable the superintendent of this institution to permit the patients to go a little at large. If the wall is not built, they will be restrained as prisoners. It is well known to all those who have had the care of such patients that they do not recover so rapidly when they feel that they are confined as prisoners; but restraint must be thrown off, what mind is left must be at its ease. The fact that it will require a longer period than one year to complete the work is to my mind a reason in favor of the appropriation. If retrenchment is necessary I think we ought to make it in some other direction, and not punish the insane patients who are in the hospital.

Mr. HALE. I listened to the suggestion of my friend from Iowa with a good deal of pleasure, and I beg to suggest to him that continuing this brick wall around there would give the appearance of confinement and imprisonment which he deprecates so much, and in that way would be deleterious to the patients. I think we had better leave the fence. That will not look so bad.

Mr. COWAN. The reason given for the continuation of this brick wall utterly fails. If it was a continuation of it entirely around the grounds of the hospital there would be force in the argument in favor of the appropriation; but it is only partially around it; it still leaves the patients in, the same condition they were before, because as long as there is any fence there over which they can climb the wall amounts to nothing as a preventive to their excursions. If the appropriation was to complete the wall entirely, there would be great force in what has been said in favor of it, and I should be inclined to vote for it; but as it is, I think the reason which influenced the committee is controlling, and that we had better not appropriate money to continue this wall until we can complete it all the way round, so as to make it effective in restraining the inmates of the establishment.

The question being taken on the amendment, there were, on a division—ayes 12, noes 11; not a quorum voting.

Mr. SHERMAN. We had better have the yeas and nays so as to get a quorum.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRIMES. It seems to me that the suggestion of my colleague [Mr. HARLAN] is a wise one, that if we are going to commence retrenchment and reform we had better begin that work somewhere else than in connection with this institution where the unfortunate inmates are deprived of their reason. We have undertaken to take care of the people of this District, and persons connected with the Army and Navy who may be deprived of their reason, and the asylum has become full; it is almost over-running. It is necessary to the health and convenience of the patients themselves that they should be permitted to occupy the grounds.

The Senator from New Hampshire says that it would not look so much like a prison if you had not the fence. The fence, it is known to most of the Senators here, is beyond sight from the asylum except at one place; the inmates are obliged to walk a considerable distance before they can see it. The purpose is to have it as far as possible from the asylum; but when they have reached that point, it is necessary to have some obstruction so that they shall not be able to escape.

The fact that this appropriation will not complete the brick wall, is to my mind a very substantial reason against making the appropriation. I think it is a reason why we should make the appropriation so as to get it more advanced toward completion. I would infinitely rather strike out the appropriation for the Botanic Garden, which is only designed to furnish members of Congress with flowers, and strike out the appropriations for decorating the squares of the city, setting out trees in them, paying in front of them, and fencing them, than to stop where we are and allow this work, instead of being completed, to go to decay as it will if we do not make an appropriation. I was not aware that the Committee on Finance had any such proposition in contemplation. If I had known it, I suppose the Committee on the District of Columbia, who have some charge of this subject, would have taken counsel in regard to it, and would have attempted to prevent it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 8, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Cadlie, Cowan, Hale, Howe, Sherman, and Trumbull—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Collamer, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Harris, Johnson, Morgan, Morrill, Pomeroy, Powell, Ramsey, Richardson, Riddle, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, Wade, Wilkinson, and Willey—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Doolittle, Fessenden, Harding, Henderson, Hendricks, Hicks, Howard, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Nesmith, Saulsbury, Sprague, Wilson, and Wright—17.

So the amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out the following items from line eighty-eight to line ninety-nine of section two:

For constructing the Washington aqueduct from a point between the White House and the receiving reservoir, to unite with the aqueduct at a point near the station-house, below said reservoir, without passing through the said receiving reservoir, and to defray the expenses incident to managing said Washington aqueduct, $100,000.

For the purpose of completing the cut-stone dam across the Potomac river, and constructing a telegraph line from the fire department, in the city of Washington, to the said station-house below the receiving reservoir, $50,000.

Mr. MORRILL. Having devoted some attention to this subject under the direction of the Senate in the early part of the session, I am in some doubt whether these appropriations ought to be stricken out. I do not know what disposition the Senator from Ohio proposes to make of the subject; but unless the Committee on Finance have some facts which I have not been able to gather, I doubt exceedingly the propriety of striking out these appropriations. If the Senate will indulge me, I will state in a few words why I think there is a necessity for the appropriations.

At an early period of the session the Committee on the District of Columbia were instructed by the Senate to investigate the subject of this aqueduct. The enterprise of bringing water into this city from the Potomac was started, I believe, something like ten years ago or more. A survey was made, and finally a plan for bringing water into the city from the Great Falls, about sixteen miles above the city, was agreed upon. A plan for the construction of the work was submitted to Congress, and an appropriation made. Appropriations have been annually made from that time to the present, amounting now, I believe, to about three million dollars, and the work is still incomplete; and it is incomplete in the two particulars intended to be covered by these two appropriations; and without going into other details I will state the incompleteness which is intended to be covered by these two specific appropriations.

About ten miles out from the city, the water taken from the Potomac river at the head of Great Falls, seven miles beyond, and which is brought down in the main conduit, some nine feet in diameter, is poured into what is called a receiving reservoir, which receiving reservoir is constructed by a high dam across a natural ravine making a large basin, the shore line of which, I believe, is some sixteen thousand feet, and with a capacity of about two hundred million gallons. Through this ravine runs a stream which is the natural drainage for about one hundred thousand acres of land. The dam being thrown across that stream, it is found that whenever there is a storm, the whole country being drained by that natural basin, which now, by the method of constructing this work, is the receiving reservoir for all the water that is brought from the Potomac above, the water is disturbed and rendered impure; and the engineer reports that the city may never expect to have the water in that state of purity in which it is when it is taken from the Potomac at the head of Great Falls unless you devise some method of avoiding this receiving reservoir. The object of the receiving reservoir was to create a supply from that natural stream which would serve the city when by reason of any failure in the aqueduct above, or from other cause, the general supply should fail.

All the water brought from the Potomac is brought down seven miles in the conduit and poured into this natural ravine, the consequence of which is that by the time it gets here it is muddy water. The first of these two items of appropriation is to cover the expense of continuing the conduit around this natural ravine or receiving reservoir and connecting it with the pipes below, so that the city may have what was originally designed, its fountain in the Potomac river. I had the honor to be delegated by the chairman of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia to make some examination, and I went upon the spot and found the facts; and I believe the committee on the part of the House of Representatives made a similar examination and came to a similar result. I am satisfied that the city will never have anything like what was contemplated, water from the Potomac river, in the condition in which it is received into the conduit, until there is some way provided of avoiding this natural ravine, which was the original purpose in the plan first submitted.

The next item is an appropriation of $50,000 for "completing the cut-stone dam across the Potomac river, and constructing a telegraph line from the fire department in the city of Washington to the said station-house below the receiving reservoir." Now, in dry time, when the river is low, no water runs into the conduit. You have now spent about three million dollars, and in the dry season, according to our examination, there is not over a foot and a half of water in that fountain, and it was not expected that there would be without a dam thrown across the river. The original plan contemplated a dam across the entire river, not a solid masonry dam like this, but an embankment of rubble stone, broken stone, which it was supposed would raise the water to a sufficient height to fill the conduit. I believe a subsequent examination has satisfied the engineers—at any rate they so report in a very elaborate document submitted at the commencement of the session and again later in the session—that a great saving may be made, instead of throwing an embankment across the whole river, by constructing a solid stone masonry dam to an island just about one third across the river; and they believe from surveys and measurement made that we shall get by that dam a sufficient supply of water; not enough to fill the whole conduit nine feet, but what will be for the present a sufficient supply. The estimate is that we shall get a depth of water equal to about seven feet in the conduit, and that is equal to the whole supply for the city of New York at the present time.

It strikes me that unless the Government have come to the conclusion that this work had better be abandoned, or had better be thrown upon the city, there is a necessity for our continuing it until it is completed.

Mr. GRIMES. Not exactly agreeing with my colleague upon the Committee on the District of Columbia so far as I have examined this subject, I want to say a single word. I think this proposition involves much more than is apparent on the face of it. Several years ago, as has been said by the Senator from Maine, Congress made provision for, and commenced the construction of water-works to bring into this city water from the Potomac river, seventeen miles above here. After the water was brought over Cabin John creek down to the receiving reservoir of which the Senator from Maine has spoken, which is a natural ravine, it was then contemplated to bring the water into a distributing reservoir which embraces a large number of acres and is nearly completed. The original design, and it was a pretty expensive design, was to have the banks of this distributing reservoir macadamized. Sometime after this Administration came into power, Mr. Silas Seymour, of New York, was appointed the engineer of the Potomac water-works, and he has proposed to build a conduit through this receiving reservoir, and bring it down past the distributing reservoir, so as to avoid the muddy condition of the water which is said to be caused by the rains and snows that flow into the receiving reservoir. I think that the policy of the Government was to have gone on and completed the distributing reservoir as originally designed; but instead of doing that, the engineer proposes a much more expensive method, by paving all the sides. The original design was to use macadamized stone on the sides. Instead of that they have gone to work now at great increase of expense—I am not prepared to say how much, but perhaps the Senator from Maine is informed as to the expense—to pave all these banks, and in order to wait for the completion of that work and to obviate the trouble arising from the muddy water in the receiving reservoir, it is proposed to build this conduit right through the receiving reservoir and make no use of that reservoir. Not exactly concurring in that view of the engineer, after the most patient investigation I could give it with him on the ground, I am not prepared to vote for the proposition as it is in the bill to make this new conduit and change the original plan of the work. If we are going to do anything, I think we had better go on and complete it as originally designed. This will add very materially to the expense of the work. I do not suppose that the $100,000 proposed to be appropriated here will complete the conduit. It will only partially complete it. I think we ought to go on and complete the work according to the original design. If that had been done, we should now have the benefit of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to Senators the reason why the committee proposed to strike out these items. There is no doubt that the appropriation as it now stands should be stricken out; it provides for a change of the work, and it does not seem to be recommended by any one. I hold in my hand a letter signed by S. Seymour, chief engineer of the Washington aqueduct, in which he informs the Committee of Ways and Means of the other House officially that the appropriation in the bill as it now stands will not answer the purpose. Perhaps I had better read it, as it is brief and shows the reasons why the appropriation as it stands certainly ought not to remain:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT,
WASHINGTON, D. C., May 24, 1884.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our conversation yesterday respecting the proposed appropriations for the Washington aqueduct, during which you informed me that the Committee of Ways and Means would include in the miscellaneous appropriation bill an item of $100,000 for the new conduit around the receiving reservoir and $50,000 for the Potomac dam, I will take the liberty of suggesting for your consideration that if the appropriation be made in the precise form above stated it will be impossible to use any portion of the amount for engineering, superintendence, repairs, or other miscellaneous expenses, except those directly chargeable to or connected with the above-named two items.

It has always been found necessary to keep a superintendent with eight or ten men employed upon the line between the distributing reservoir and Great Falls in cleaning out drains, repairing banks, &c., and also a force of four or five men between the navy-yard and the distributing reservoir for the purpose of supervising the pipe line and the distribution of water, repairing leaks or breaks, &c., &c., all which amounts with other miscellaneous expenses to ten or fifteen thousand dollars per year, and should be provided for in the appropriation. There are also several thousand dollars due for percentage on unsettled contracts and other accounts, which should be paid out of the next appropriation.

If the item in the bill should read, "for continuing the work upon the Washington aqueduct, $150,000," (or any other amount the committee might think proper,) the difficulty would be removed, and the money would be "expended under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior," as provided for in the joint resolution of Congress which transferred the work from the War to the Interior Department. (See page 3 supplemental report.)

I had hoped that Congress would feel justified in appropriating a sufficient amount, in addition to the items above named, to complete the upper section of the distributing reservoir to a depth of eleven feet. This will cost less than fifty thousand dollars, and would be of great service in purifying the water. A large amount of the materials are on hand, and the work can never be completed so economically as now.

With an appropriation of $233,000 for the whole work, I have no doubt that all the items mentioned on page 19 of the supplemental report may be completed within one year from the date of the appropriation.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
S. SEYMOUR,
Chief Engineer.

HON. THADDEUS STEVENS, Chairman Committee Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

This is the only official document we had before us in regard to the appropriation; and the engineer says distinctly that the appropriation as made in the bill will not answer the purpose; that it is not in the right language to cover the indispensable expenses of engineering, &c., nor is it of an amount sufficient, nor is it in the form desired. On reference to the general estimates, I find submitted to us in the annual estimates this item: "For completion of the Washington aqueduct, in accordance with the report and estimate of the engineer in charge, $401,383 62." The objection to the appropriation as it stands in the bill is that it proposes a radical change in the original plan, proposes the construction of a new conduit, and yet we have no designation of that change. The engineer evidently does not approve it. We have no information as to what the Committee of Ways and Means acted upon in putting in this appropriation. We have no plans or estimates. It proposes a radical change in the construction of the work without giving us any plans, estimates, or details. It seems not to have been contemplated either by the Department or by the chief engineer in charge. I have not the slightest doubt, therefore, that whatever the Senate may think about the matter, we should strike out the words which the committee propose to strike out, and then, if Senators desire to submit a well-considered amendment to continue the work on the Washington aqueduct, I shall have no objection if the work cannot very well be suspended, but my impression is that as Washington is now deriving the benefit of a large supply of water, although not in very good condition, we might suspend the work at present without any very great harm. But if it is necessary to continue the work it ought to be continued in the old manner, according to the old plan, or according to some fixed plan, and we ought to have information on the subject to enable us to vote definitely before changing the plan or character of the work.

Mr. MORRILL. If it is thought wise to stop this work here, and let it be suspended in its present incomplete condition, and the enterprise to which the Government has contributed $3,000,000 entirely fail, for I suppose nobody acquainted with the condition of the aqueduct will call it a success at the present moment, then we may afford to deny all appropriations and suspend the work. But the method pursued by my honorable friend from Ohio strikes me as a little remarkable. He assumes that the appropriation asked for is not the proper one for the reasons stated by him, and inasmuch as that is not proper no appropriation is proper.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will allow me to say that I do not, as an individual, object to an appropriation sufficient to preserve and carry this work forward if it is deemed necessary; but it is manifest that this appropriation is not in the proper form, and the Committee on Finance, not having clear information on it, as a matter of course proposed to strike it out. If the Committee on the District of Columbia have an amendment to propose, very well.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not think it is true, as the Senator supposes, that there is no information before the Senate of the United States in regard to it. That there was no evidence before the Committee on Finance was not the fault of the Committee on the District of Columbia to whom this matter perhaps more particularly belongs; but if my friend had looked to the report of the Secretary of the Interior he would have seen this work and these appropriations commended; and more than that, he would have found the report of the chief engineer who recommends this work in detail; and there, too, he would have found the plan of the work, the present and prospective demands upon it in the future, all set out in detail; and more than that, the subsequent report of the engineer within the last thirty days, made on the application of the Committee on the District of Columbia who have had this subject under consideration, repeats that and enforces it very elaborately, and that report was certainly accessible to the Committee on Finance.

With all these facts within reach of the Committee on Finance, it does not seem to me to be quite the thing that, because the whole matter is not specifically set out in this appropriation, the appropriation should be stricken out wholly, unless some one else to whom the subject was not referred should come forward with a specific plan. It will be found by reference to the report of the Secretary of the Interior and the chief engineer that the wants of this work were specifically set forth at the commencement of Congress and repeated in a report to the Senate within the last thirty days, in which not only these two items were stated as quite indispensable, but other items calculated to cover the incidental expenses referred to in the communication of the chief engineer which has been read and which was certainly before the committee, and from which it was very easy for the committee, rather than propose to strike out the appropriation, to add those miscellaneous items which the chief engineer thinks indispensable.

It is said that this contemplates an expenditure for a purpose not contemplated in the original plan. I do not so understand it. Whoever is familiar with the original plans knows that this reservoir of which I have spoken, denominated the receiving reservoir in the plans, was the first source or fountain for the supply of the city while the work was in progress beyond. The work having been completed up to that point, a dam across that ravine gave a supply of water until the river should be reached at the Great Falls some seven miles beyond. The distributing reservoir spoken of by the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Ohio was contemplated in the original plan.

Mr. GRIMES. But not this conduit between the receiving reservoir and the distributing reservoir, if I understand aright.

Mr. MORRILL. It will be found in the original plans that precisely the same plan for the preservation of the water and the distribution of the water from a point some five miles above was proposed as is proposed at the present time; but it is true, as stated by my friend from Iowa, that in regard to the construction of the distributing reservoir there has been a variation in the execution of that work.

Mr. GRIMES. That is in regard to the pavement; but then I want to know of the Senator from Maine if, in the original plan, it was contemplated that there should be any such conduit as that.

Mr. MORRILL. I will come to that in a moment. I want to say that in regard to the distributing reservoir there is no proposition before the Senate. None of the appropriations here asked for are for the completion of the distributing reservoir. It is true that the present chief engineer proposes to finish the distributing reservoir on a plan different from that originally proposed, and in this respect I should like to submit a word to the good sense of the Senate, whether the original or the present plan is the more feasible and the more rational. The distributing reservoir into which the water was to be poured, and the design of which was that the water should have a chance to rest and there be purified prior to its distribution to the city, was, according to the original plan, to be made of a high embankment, on high land, some four miles above us, one hundred and fifty or one hundred and sixty feet above high water in the Potomac at this place, by an excavation in that high land and an earth embankment. That was to constitute the distributing reservoir. It is true that the banks were to be partially protected by what is called rubble work, small stone broken and placed upon the exterior banks, which were to extend a third of the way down to the base of the reservoir; and that, it was supposed by the engineer, would be sufficient to protect the embankments, and also give the water that rest which would lead to its purification prior to distribution into the city. Upon an examination of all the reservoirs in the country it was found that not one was constructed in that way. I have seen the reports of them all. The reservoirs at Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, and Boston are all constructed in the manner proposed by the present engineer; and if you will consider that this reservoir covers a surface of some forty acres, into which the water is to be poured from the Potomac, coming in a current, the object being that it shall there remain in a state of rest for purification, that the water is poured into a reservoir the average depth of which is from six to eleven feet only, and then consider that that is on the high land, and that the waves would be disturbed and the water get motion by every breeze, I submit whether it is at all rational to suppose that water thus situated would be in a state of rest favorable to purification. The engineer has very properly, I think, on this part of the subject, reported that this distributing reservoir should be deeper, and that the embankment should be protected by stone work; but, as I said before, that is not the subject before the Senate. There are only two propositions before the Senate, the first of which is whether you will make an appropriation to build a conduit around the natural ravine, which is denominated in the plan the receiving reservoir; and it seems very singular that it should ever have entered into the head of anybody to suppose, that you could have anything like pure water by taking water from the Potomac and bringing it down and pouring it into a natural ravine, the shore line of which is over fifteen thousand feet, and is entirely unprotected, that ravine being the natural sewer of a country of some fifty thousand acres, into which, whenever there is a storm or shower, the whole wash of that country pours.

Mr. GRIMES. My friend will allow me to say that they never contemplated any such thing. They expected that the water would be brought into the distributing reservoir and there it would settle, and from there it would be distributed to the city. What I object to is that they do not go on and complete the distributing reservoir, instead of resorting to this temporary expedient of building this conduit.

Mr. MORRILL. I am sorry to say that the remark of my honorable friend shows that he has not the slightest comprehension of this work. It is only by reason of this conduit that it is possible to get the water into the distributing reservoir. What my honorable friend conceives to be proper is precisely the proposition of the engineer. It is found that by taking the water from the Great Falls and bringing it down seven miles and pouring it into this natural ravine, you make what I should call in common parlance, aside from all technical phrases of engineers, one mammoth mud-puddle. The object is to avoid that. The object is to avail yourselves of the first idea, water from the Potomac river, and not water from this natural ravine. In order to get that you must complete your reservoir, and in order to do that you must take this conduit from above the reservoir below it, and then take it from thence into the distributing reservoir, which is some four miles below, and then you avoid that ravine and get a supply of water directly from the Potomac at the head of Great Falls. That is the proposition.

Now, I do not wish to go into the question of the construction of that natural ravine as a reservoir, whether it was good sense or bad sense; I do not feel called upon to notice that; but unless the Senate of the United States have come to the conclusion that after the expenditure of three million of money to, in the language of the original bill, carry out this enterprise of supplying the cities of Washington and Georgetown with good, wholesome water, it seems to me you must make from time to time such reasonable appropriations as are necessary to complete the work, and that these two things are absolutely necessary to be done, and are not a departure from the original plan but are in harmony with it, and by subsequent development are shown to be absolutely necessary. I have not the slightest doubt of it from the best information I can get from the report of the Secretary of the Interior to which I refer the honorable Senator from Ohio, and also the report of the engineer accompanying it, and also a subsequent report made to the Senate within a very short time. In all these reports these appropriations are urged specifically and the necessity of them stated.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend still does not reach the point I desired to present to his mind. It is true the Secretary of the Interior has submitted his estimates, and I have read them; but they do not correspond with the appropriation made by the House bill. I have also read a letter from the engineer in charge of the work stating that the form in which the House of Representatives have put this appropriation is not the proper one, and suggesting that $150,000, or whatever sum may be deemed proper, should be appropriated merely for continuing the Washington aqueduct.

Mr. MORRILL. I will explain that. The engineer saw that here was an appropriation of $150,000 for two specific objects, as if there were no other objects but two, and he reminded the committee that while these things were indispensable, there were other things to be done; there were contingent expenses; there were some bills due for work from last year; and therefore he says, "If you appropriate $100,000 for the specific object of continuing the conduit, and $50,000 for the completion of the dam, you will leave me with no means whatever to meet those miscellaneous demands," and therefore he suggests an appropriation in addition.

Mr. SHERMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. He not only says that the money is not sufficient, but he objects to the two items, and he says:

"If the item in the bill should read 'for continuing the work upon the Washington aqueduct, $150,000,' (or any other amount the committee might think proper), the difficulty would be removed, and the money would be expended under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. MORRILL. He was for applying it just as is proposed here.

Mr. SHERMAN. There seemed to be no difference of opinion in the committee as to the necessity of striking out the appropriation in the House bill. Whether another appropriation should be inserted in the form this gentleman suggests is another question. The difficulty is, that as it stands in the bill it is limited to two items, and to those exclusively. That is evidently improper.

Mr. MORRILL. What should be done undoubtedly is that there should be an amendment adding, as the engineer suggests, $50,000 for other objects in addition to those named.

Mr. SHERMAN. But he recommends an appropriation in lieu of that in the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. Not in lieu of it, as I understand. The difficulty laboring in the mind of the engineer, and which he produces to the committee, is that he is confined to two objects, and he can make no expenditure except for those two objects as the bill stands. He says that the mistake which has been made is in saying that he may expend $100,000 on one particular object and $50,000 on another particular object; there are several other things to be provided for, and he tells you what they are. He says he is in arrears for work of last year, and he says there are contingent expenses. He suggests, therefore, that instead of being limited to an appropriation of $150,000 to these two objects, he ought to have at least $150,000 for the continuation of the work, and then he will be at liberty to apply it according to the necessities of the case; but if the Committee on Finance would adopt his other suggestion, let this appropriation stand for these two objects, and then give him an additional appropriation of $50,000 for the other objects he mentions, the whole difficulty would be relieved. I think that unless the Senate come to the conclusion that the whole work had better be abandoned, we cannot afford at this time to take off the force and give up this enterprise.

Mr. CLARK, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) I do not understand that the striking out of these two specific appropriations involves the abandonment of the work. The House of Representatives have made two appropriations here, one of $100,000 for building a certain conduit or pipe leading from the main reservoir to the distributing reservoir, and the other of $50,000 for building a stone dam across the Potomac. The Committee on Finance judged that neither of these two things was necessary, and they propose to strike them both out, and that is all that this amendment involves. It does not involve the question of appropriating a certain sum to the preservation or the continuance of the work; but it is saying on the part of the Committee on Finance that it is not well to make an appropriation of $100,000 for building this additional aqueduct and altering the plan, or $50,000 for a new stone dam. If it is necessary to make an appropriation of $50,000 to the general objects of the work, to continue it, we must make that appropriation; but if we let these two provisions stand here, I submit to the Senate that not one dollar of either of those sums so appropriated can be used for the general preservation of the work; so that this amendment does not involve the consideration suggested by the Senator from Maine.

But, Mr. President, I have had some acquaintance with this reservoir and with this aqueduct, and I want to state to the Senator from Maine what I know to be a fact. The city first took the water from this creek or receiving reservoir before the water was let into it from the Potomac river. They dammed up this hollow, ravine, or creek, or brook, whatever you call it, and took water from that in the first place for the city. They afterwards completed this aqueduct from the falls into that receiving reservoir, and took the water through in that way. Now, I want to say to the Senator that the water in that receiving reservoir was purer before they let the water into it from the river than it is now; and so far from the river water having been disturbed or made impure by water washed from the receiving reservoir, the latter is disturbed by its connection with the Potomac, and the water we get is muddier now than it was before they put the Potomac water into that reservoir. I know the fact, for I have used the water on both occasions. You are not going to remedy the turbidness of your water by changing the plan. The water in the Potomac is actually dirtier than that in the receiving reservoir before it was put into it.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator does not know how accurate he is on that subject. It is a subject that was investigated by the committee; we were on the spot; and I have got a couple of bottles of water which I brought down, one from the Potomac at the Great Falls and one out of this receiving reservoir. The one taken at the Great Falls is what would fairly be called pure water. The one taken at the receiving reservoir is puddle water. That is the difference upon actual observation.

Mr. CLARK. I have got a much better test than taking a little water from these two reservoirs at a time. That would be just as you happened to find the reservoir or happened to find the river at the given time. If the river was comparatively pure when you got the water from the river and the other was turbid, you would have exactly the difference. I can tell the Senator that I have a better test. I used the water from the receiving reservoir all winter.

Mr. MORRILL. This winter?

Mr. CLARK. No, winters ago; and I have used the water from the river this winter, and I say it was better before than it has been since you have put the water from the river into it.

Mr. MORRILL. I am told that is so, and I can readily give the explanation. If you compare the water in the receiving reservoir now with the water in the receiving reservoir two years ago, the water in the receiving reservoir to-day is not so good, is not so clear as it was two years ago. What does that prove? That it is better than the water in the Potomac? No. It proves that the water to-day in the receiving reservoir is not so pure as it was two years ago. The Senator assumes that it is by reason of having impure water from the Potomac let into it. The fact is, and such was the evidence before the committee, that since the water from the Potomac has been poured into the receiving reservoir, the water has not been so pure, and the reason is that a strong current is created by the water from the Potomac running into the water in the reservoir, and the current forces up the mud from the bottom. It creates a current against the exterior surface, which is an unprotected surface, a bank surface, clay bank principally, of about fifteen thousand feet. The effect of this strong current coming in from the Potomac undoubtedly is to stir it up, and that accounts for precisely the state of facts to which the Senator from New Hampshire bears testimony; but it does not account for the fact, which I found upon examination, that the water in the Potomac when there has been no recent storm is not turbid, it is clear water. The water in the receiving reservoir undoubtedly when it had time to rest would ordinarily be tolerably clear water; but I do not think it needs an argument to show that when a natural ravine is turned into a receiving reservoir into which you force two hundred thousand gallons of water a day, and subject that to the flow of the water which comes from the surface of the country, you cannot expect pure water from such a fountain as that. Now, the object of the engineer is, and it is exactly in harmony with the old plan, having reached the fountain, no longer to be compelled to rely on this ravine, but just to take your fountain around it, so that when the water in the Potomac is pure you take it directly from the Potomac and never pass it through this receiving reservoir. In that way you allow time to fill your distributing reservoir and allow time for the water to rest. I think the honorable Senator will find if he examines the matter as closely as I have done that these are the facts.

Mr. CLARK. I do not know but that I have examined it as closely as the Senator, though it is very true that I have not got the water in a bottle. But we have got one fact by the admission of the Senator from Maine, and that is that from some cause or other the water in the receiving reservoir was purer before the Potomac was let into it than it is now. He says that letting the water from the Potomac into the receiving reservoir has stirred the water up and made it turbid. Where does the Senator propose to have it come in by his new plan?

Mr. MORRILL. Not at all into the receiving reservoir.

Mr. CLARK. Into what reservoir?

Mr. MORRILL. The distributing.

Mr. CLARK. And what is that? Is not that all a ground bottom? Will it not stir that up just as much?

Mr. MORRILL. That is protected by the sides.

Mr. CLARK. Protected by what? Nothing but earth sides and earth bottom.

Mr. MORRILL. That shows how little comprehension the honorable Senator has of the work. That is all I can say.

Mr. CLARK. Will the Senator tell me?

Mr. MORRILL. I have stated twice particularly in reply to my honorable friend from Iowa how it stands. He complained that the distributing reservoir was designed to be walled in entirely, so that the wash of the water and the movement of the water are not to disturb the earth at all. The design is to make it a reservoir, to make it, in the common acceptance of the term, a place of rest for the water, and there is to be no current in it, no stream in it from the outside.

Mr. CLARK. I understand that. Is it walled in at the present time?

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir.

Mr. CLARK. Is it not earth unprotected now?

Mr. MORRILL. There is no water in it.

Mr. CLARK. It is merely a place dug out of the earth.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no water in it, and never has been.

Mr. CLARK. Now, suppose we pave the bottom of that, make it as the Senator designs—

Mr. MORRILL. Not pave the bottom of it.

Mr. CLARK. I understand it is to be walled in, and he proposes also to pave the bottom of it.

Mr. MORRILL. No.

Mr. CLARK. At any rate, he proposes to rubble the sides. Now, suppose you let the water come first into the receiving reservoir and stand there holden by the gates; it there settles somewhat, and then you let it out into the distributing reservoir; will it not settle there just as well as though you took it right from the Potomac if you adopt the plan they propose? Now, if the place where the water comes into the receiving reservoir is not properly protected, so that the water casts up the dirt, you can protect it so that it will not wash, you can bring it into your receiving reservoir where it comes now, according to the original plan, and then you can take it into the distributing reservoir. In my judgment this is nothing but a scheme of an engineer to expend $200,000, nearly a quarter of a million, on some new plan which will in the end bring the water into the same reservoir.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CLARK. Certainly.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Is it contemplated to abandon the Potomac as the source of supply?

Mr. CLARK. Not at all in any case.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I thought that was the argument of the Senator.

Mr. CLARK. Not at all. The water from the Potomac comes into what is called the receiving reservoir. It is to be taken from that, according to the original plan, into the distributing reservoir, and there settle. This proposition is to take it from the Potomac directly into the distributing reservoir without going into the receiving reservoir in the first place, as I understand it.

But the main point, Mr. President, without arguing as to the receiving reservoir one way or the other, is that we have expended $3,000,000 to supply water to this city, and we have got an abundant supply, such as it is, for the purpose of extinguishing fires, for the purpose of washing the streets, and for many other purposes; and that being the case I submit to the Senate—and that is the consideration which forced itself upon the Committee on Finance—whether it is wise now to expend $150,000 to change the plan at the present time. Have we not done enough already, and is it wise in the present condition of the country to expend $150,000 for what may be at least a doubtful experiment? That is the point. The committee thought it was not wise to do it. The committee do not design to throw any obstacle in the way of the final completion of the aqueduct or of any attempt that may be made to give us good water; but as we have expended $3,000,000 already the committee say that it is not wise at the present time to expend $150,000 this year for what may be at least problematical.

The Senator from Maine says the Potomac is low in the summer season. That may be very true; but had we any difficulty last summer? If these reservoirs are in proper situations will it not afford an abundant supply of water such as it is? and is there any necessity for building a stone dam for the purpose of getting water at this time? The question is upon these two items, whether we will appropriate $100,000 to make this alteration and $50,000 for this dam, or whether we will appropriate $50,000 or some other proper sum to continue the work. I hope the amendment of the committee will prevail.

Mr. JOHNSON. We have spent, I believe, $3,000,000 and we have a supply of water; but no one who has been here this year can fail to be satisfied that it is not such water as we expected to get, and all those who know anything about the Potomac river must also be satisfied that the Potomac river is capable of supplying us with very good water. Now, I do not understand that it is proposed to abandon the enterprise. The Senator from New Hampshire is satisfied with what we have and is not disposed to expend any more money in trying to improve what we have at this time.

Mr. CLARK. I have not said that I was satisfied with what we had. I think it is not wise to expend money to make this alteration at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON. I mean the Senator is satisfied under the circumstances; he will not try to make it better.

Mr. CLARK. Not by this expenditure.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understood the Senator from Ohio (and in that it seems to me he is perfectly correct) as objecting to the appropriation as it comes from the House of Representatives on the ground that it will not answer the purpose for which the appropriation is asked, and he founds that opinion upon a communication made from the engineers since the appropriation was made by the House of Representatives, dated May 24, 1864, in which the engineer says very correctly that as the appropriation made by the House is $100,000 for one specific purpose, and $50,000 for another specific purpose, it will not answer the needs of the work, because there are a good many other expenditures that are to be met in order to keep the work in a proper and useful condition; superintendents are to be provided for, watchmen are to be provided for, outstanding accounts unsettled are to be paid, none of which can be done under the appropriation in the form in which it is made by the House of Representatives. I give notice, therefore, to my friend from Ohio and to the Senate that if the Senate shall strike out the appropriation as made by the House of Representatives, as I think should be done, I shall then propose to insert as an amendment these words:

For continuing the work on the Washington aqueduct, $150,000.

Mr. CONNESS. I suggest to the honorable Senator that as I understand the rules his amendment will not be in order unless it be proposed by a committee, and therefore we had better adhere to the appropriation as it stands in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. The honorable member is mistaken. The amendment that I suggest will not increase the appropriation. It is to amend an appropriation, and therefore perfectly in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CONNESS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Collamer, Cowan, Fessenden, Foot, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Pomeroy, Powell, Richardson, Sherman, Sumner, Trumbull, and Wade—20.
NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Conness, Dixon, Foster, Harris, Hicks, Morgan, Morrill, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Ten Eyck, Van Winkle, and Willey—14.

 ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Cardile, Chandler, Davis, Doolittle, Harding, Henderson, Howard, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Nesmith, Sprague, Wilkinson, Wilson, and Wright—15.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wish now to move an amendment making an appropriation for continuing the work on the aqueduct.

Mr. SHERMAN. That will come in more regularly after the amendments of the Finance Committee shall have been acted on.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY.) The next amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance will be read.

The next amendment was read. It was to increase the appropriation for pay of superintendent of botanic garden and assistants in the botanic garden and green-houses from $5,945 80 to $6,145 80.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following items from the appropriations for the Columbian Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind:

For continuing the work for the accommodation of the students and inmates in said institution, in addition to the appropriations heretofore made; for the purchase of a tract of improved land, containing about thirteen acres, bordering on Boundary street of the city of Washington, and adjoining the lot now belonging to the institution, to enable it to instruct the male pupils in horticulture and agriculture, and to furnish sites for mechanic shops and other necessary buildings, $26,000.

For the erection of a building to be used as mechanic shops for the instruction of the pupils in useful labor, and to furnish more convenient and healthful apartments, as well for the instruction as for the sleeping rooms for the male pupils, $31,445 67.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For the purchase of a lot next westerly of said asylum, adjoining Boundary street, containing about eighty-two thousand five hundred feet, with the buildings thereon, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line one hundred and eighty-nine of section two the following item:

For the purpose of building a new custom-house at Portland, in Maine, on the site owned by the United States, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section four, line four, before the word "Congress" to insert "session of;" so as to make the clause read:

That the compensation of the clerk to the Committee of Ways and Means shall be $2,169 per annum, to commence with the present session of Congress; and such sum as may be found necessary to pay the same be, and is hereby, appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out from line seventeen to line twenty-two of section four, as follows:

For payment to Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. for three hundred and ninety-five volumes of the Statutes at Large, at $3 50 per volume, delivered by order of the Secretary of the Interior, dated February 21, 1833, $2,765.

Mr. SUMNER. I should like to know the ground for striking it out.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is sufficient to say that it is purely a private claim. The other House excluded from the bill every claim of that character except this one. We wish to preserve this bill, if we can, free from all private claims.

Mr. SUMNER. But is this a private claim?
 Mr. SHERMAN. It is simply money claimed to be due to a private firm, on very doubtful legal authority.

Mr. SUMNER. Is it not on account of an alleged order from the Department?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, on account of an alleged order, which creates a dispute as to the authority. We had it in one other appropriation bill, and both Houses struck it out. If these parties have a proper claim, let a bill be introduced to pay them and let it be referred to the Committee on Claims, where it can be investigated.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask the Senator if the course now taken does not make a distinction between this case and other cases? Is it not the habit to put on this bill or other appropriation bills or a deficiency bill, I will not call them claims, but accounts or bills like this?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; and if this be kept in the bill it will be the only private claim which has been put on it; all others have been excluded. If the Senate desire uniformity and justice they will exclude this, because if this is allowed to go on the bill there will be efforts to put on all kinds of claims.

Mr. GRIMES. Would not this be a legitimate and proper item if the name of the firm, Little, Brown & Co., was stricken out and the appropriation was to pay for certain books purchased by the Secretary of the Interior, in pursuance of a law of Congress?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the very question. It is disputed, in the first place, whether he had any authority, under the law, to buy the books.

Mr. GRIMES. This I understand to be the same case we had before the Senate on a previous occasion.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senate struck it out then.

Mr. GRIMES. From the facts developed at that time I have not any sort of question that the contract was a binding obligation on the part of the Government to pay for these books. There is not a firm in America of better reputation than Little, Brown & Co., with whom I have been acquainted by reputation for many years. When the issue was raised before, I had not any doubt as to the question between Little & Brown and the authorities here, and I had not any doubt then what the final result would be, and when the developments were made I was satisfied the claim was correct. It seems to me perfectly legitimate to put it on this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have looked into this matter somewhat more than I did at the time it was up before, and I think I can make the question (about which I propose to give no opinion) clear to the Senate, so that they can understand what they are voting upon. I do not regard this as a private claim, and I do not see that there is any legal claim existing. Whether it is advisable to purchase these books and make an appropriation for that purpose is a question for the Senate to decide. Originally the arrangement made was that Little & Brown should publish the laws and should furnish a certain number of copies, a thousand copies. Afterwards it was found that we wanted more, and, as I understand, another contract was made. At the time the original contract was made, the custom was and the law was to give each member of Congress a copy of the volume published. Some half dozen years ago we provided that that should no longer be done. Little & Brown, however, although they understood it was no part of the contract, supposed that that usage would be continued, that each member of Congress would be furnished with a copy of the laws. That custom was changed, and the result was a call for a less number of copies. We appropriated an amount sufficient to purchase two thousand copies of the laws. It was an appropriation; no contract was made, but we appropriated the amount necessary at the rate fixed to purchase two thousand copies. The Government wanted for the purpose of distribution under the law but one thousand six hundred and five copies of each of the last two volumes, and they took only one thousand six hundred and five. Little & Brown, however, published the whole two thousand copies, and they think that they have a fair claim upon Congress to take the two thousand copies of the tenth and eleventh volumes as the appropriation mentioned that amount, and they supposed that they would be taken.

What goes, perhaps, to add somewhat to their equity is the fact that with regard to the eleventh volume which has been published, they might, if they had seen fit, have divided it into two; and it has cost them a very much larger sum of money than they receive per volume in payment, as it is in the first place a very large volume, containing the proceedings of the two last Congresses, and in the next place the cost of paper and binding, &c., has been very much increased. They think that as they have published that volume, notwithstanding their loss on it, which undoubtedly is considerable, and have complied with their contract fully, the Government ought to take the two thousand copies which, under the appropriation made, was specified.

The objection to taking them is that at present a considerable number of them may not be wanted, and we should have the three hundred and ninety-five copies of each volume on hand, and they would remain on hand for a considerable time. They were sent on; but it having been found out that there was no authority to take them, the Secretary of the Interior not having paid for them did not take them, and notified Little & Brown to take them away; and the question now is whether the Government will take the full number of two thousand copies, according to what Little & Brown conceive to be, on certainly apparently plausible grounds, to say the least, the equity of the case between them and the Government.

It may be said that they are unquestionably highly honorable men, and at a loss have gone on to execute their contract faithfully and ably and admirably, I may say, in all particulars, and they think they ought not to suffer the loss of the three hundred and ninety-five volumes of each of the tenth and eleventh volumes, and the Government ought to take them on the implied obligation arising from the fact that we made an appropriation for two thousand copies, although there is no legal obligation whatever on the Government to take that number, in my judgment. That is the simple state of the case. I do not regard it as a private claim. It is simply a question whether Congress will take the volumes or not.

Mr. SUMNER. If it be not a private claim, then the question is open on its merits, and it seems to me that on its merits Congress ought to carry out what Little & Brown supposed was the original understanding. The Senator from Maine very properly pays a tribute to the character of this house. Perhaps there is no house in our country more truly honorable than that of Little & Brown, and in the publication of the Statutes at Large I believe they have done the country a good service with very little profit to themselves. If you go over the history of that publication from the beginning down to the present time I believe you will find it has been of much more advantage to the country than it has been to the booksellers. It has not been a profitable publication. It was very costly in the original outlay. Of course it is stereotyped. Plates cannot be made for nothing, and the editorial care and labor that have been bestowed upon it have required a very considerable additional outlay of money. For all that there has been thus far, as I understand, a very slender return, so that the publication has been in no respect advantageous to the booksellers.

Under these circumstances, considering the meritorious character of the publication and the excellent manner in which these booksellers have performed their part of the business, it seems to me rather hard that they should be called to endure this additional loss, for it is an additional loss. They have manufactured these books—I use the language of the trade—and actually sent them on to Washington, as they imagined, in the performance of a contract. When the books arrived here they were disappointed; the books were not received.

Mr. COLLAMER. There is somehow an impression that there was one other thing. They were not more books than we called for by the appropriation; but they got them here at a time when it was said the appropriation had lapsed after the two years had expired. So I am told.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator does not exactly understand it. The Government were in the habit of calling for books as they were wanted; they called for the number they wanted, and these additional copies were in the hands of Little & Brown, and remained so long without being called for that the time lapsed, so that although they had the books, they were not in the hands of the Government. The only question that occurs to me as raising any trouble about it was that one case was as long ago as 1855, I think, when the tenth volume was published. I asked Mr. Little why the matter was suffered to lie so long, why the volumes were not called for and delivered. He did not seem to give any definite explanation except simply that he thought the order would come in due time.

Mr. SUMNER. I believe, in regard to that, the firm had implicit confidence in the Government. They felt that their relations with the Government, which had been going on for some twenty years, were so thoroughly established that there could be no difficulty. They knew that they themselves were performing their part of the contract honorably and completely, and they did not suppose that on the part of the Government there would be anything which could be regarded as a favor. Now, sir, if this firm had been hard in their bargain, if they had failed in any respect on their part, if what they had done had not been advantageous to the Government, and I may also add advantageous to the profession, to ourselves, to all who have occasion to consult the Statutes at Large, then I should think they would not be in a condition to bring forward the present claim. But they are in every respect blameless. There are no persons who could come before us with a case, or with a claim, or whatever you may choose to call it, I submit, who could, so far as their own conduct is concerned, be more absolutely above criticism. I do not know that there is any suggestion of criticism, but I submit that that is an essential element in the case, for if we are dealing with meritorious persons, we certainly do not wish, of we ought not to wish, to have the hardness begin on our side. I think if we throw out this claim of theirs, our course will be what you may properly characterize as hard.

The Senator from Maine suggests that there is no occasion for the books now.

Mr. FESSENDEN. For all of them.

Mr. SUMNER. If there be no occasion for all of them now, yet if in any respect the Government may be considered to be bound to take them, if it be proper or honorable for the Government to take them, then I should hardly go into the consideration whether there will be occasion for all of these copies. But we all know that at this moment, with the large increase of our offices everywhere throughout the country, there must be an increased supply of these very volumes needed. I should say—I speak, of course, only according to general information—that there would be an immediate demand for all of these copies, and, indeed, for a great many more, by sending them, if you please, to the new Territories; there are our provost marshals, there are our collectors, there are a great many officials created recently by recent statutes that must be without these volumes, and if the Government should have them on hand it might undertake to supply them. I hope the clause will not be struck out.

Mr. COLLAMER. This item was inserted in the House bill, and the proposition now is to strike it out, not that there is any demerit in it, but that the form of it is not liked in this bill, because it is regarded as a private claim. When we come to examine it and the chairman of the committee explains it to us, it is no private claim, or is no claim to go before the Court of Claims or any committee, but it is a question whether we ought to buy the books. I do not see, therefore, any sufficient ground to strike that out which upon the merits the House put in.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think it is best to amend this clause before the vote is taken, and I move to insert after "three hundred and ninety-five" the words "copies of the tenth and eleventh."

Mr. SHERMAN. Why amend it at all? The date of the order is prescribed, and the amount of books, and number of books.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It says three hundred and ninety-five volumes. There are in fact three hundred and ninety-five copies of the tenth and eleventh volumes. It now reads "three hundred and ninety-five volumes of the Statutes at Large."

Mr. SHERMAN. Just strike out the numbers, and say, "for the Statutes at Large, at $3 50, delivered by order of the Secretary of the Interior." That will accomplish the Senator's object.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is better to say "three hundred and ninety-five copies of the tenth and eleventh volumes each."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Maine, being to perfect the clause, is first in order before the motion to strike out is put.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the motion of the committee to strike out the clause.

The motion was not agreed to.

The next amendment of the Finance Committee was at the end of section four to insert:

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for miscellaneous items for the Senate for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864, $12,730.

For deficiency for the Congressional Globe for the present session, $25,065 12.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to offer the following amendment, to come in after line two hundred and sixteen of section two:

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the cost, charges, and expenses properly incurred by the State of Minnesota in suppressing Indian hostilities in the year 1862, the sum of $117,000: Provided, That only so much of said sum shall be paid the State of Minnesota as is allowed by the proper accounting officers under the twenty-second section of the act approved March 3, 1863, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1864, and for the year ending the 30th of June, 1863, and for other purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. The Committee on Finance direct me to move to amend the bill by inserting after line one hundred and twenty-three of section one:

To change Tiber creek where it runs through the botanic garden into a sewer, $10,150, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Public Buildings.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to have some explanation of the amendment.

Mr. CLARK. This expenditure is made necessary for the purpose of covering that sewer on account of the offensive state in which it has become for two or three years past, especially in the spring and the dry season, and it is recommended by the person in charge of the grounds and also by the city surveyor. I will send to the Chair a letter from the person in charge of the grounds which I desire to have read.

The Secretary read the following letter:

BOTANIC GARDEN,
WASHINGTON, January 2, 1864.

DEAR SIR: I would most respectfully call your attention to the importance of asking Congress for an appropriation to cover up the open sewer that passes through the botanic garden, known as Tiber creek. Since the introduction of Potomac water this always filthy, sluggish stream performs the functions of the night-cart for about one-third the city. The sewerage of the Capitol deposited in the canal, and other filth, is regularly washed back by the tide and left for a time to pollute the atmosphere, generating disease and death, and rendering the grounds anything but agreeable, and only thoroughly cleansed by a freshet.

An arch of the same capacity as that on Pennsylvania avenue, with a wooden floor, stone abutments, and eighteen inches of brick in the arch, might be built from Pennsylvania avenue to the center line west of the Capitol for $10,000. This would cover the head of tide-water, and prevent to a great extent the generating by the solar rays of aerial poison and obnoxious effluvia immediately in front of the Capitol, and adjoining that great thoroughfare Pennsylvania avenue. The other portion could be done when something definite is arranged by the corporate authorities about their open sewer, the canal.

Most respectfully yours,

WILLIAM R. SMITH,
Superintendent of Botanic Garden.

Hon. B. B. FRENCH, Commissioner of Public Buildings.

Mr. CLARK. In addition to that, the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds recommends that this should be done. The committee are satisfied that in the offensive state in which that sewer is, it should be done.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I move a further amendment, to insert after line one hundred and seventy-one, on page 14, the following:

For carrying on the work of the commission appointed to act under the first article of the reciprocity treaty with Great Britain, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADE. I am directed by the Committee on Territories to move to amend the bill on page 14, line one hundred and sixty-two, by striking out "fifteen" and inserting "five;" so that the clause will read:

For surveying the public lands in the Territory of Dakota, $5,000.

And then to add at the end of the clause the following:

For the survey of a military road from Sioux City, Iowa, to Fort Randall, Dakota Territory, and from Niobrara, Nebraska Territory, to Fort Randall, and to bridge the Dakota and Vermilion rivers and other streams, $15,000.

This amendment will add $5,000 to the appropriations that the House of Representatives have made for the Territory of Dakota. It proposes to take $10,000 from the appropriation made by the House for surveying the public lands in Dakota and applying it to other purposes in the Territory. The Delegate thinks that $5,000 will answer that purpose. It is said to be exceedingly important that this appropriation of $10,000 should be made for the purpose of bridging their streams and making a military road. It will only add $5,000 to the amount appropriated by the House of Representatives. It is said that these streams in the spring of the year are almost impassable, and it is absolutely necessary for the convenience of travelers that this appropriation should be made. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I offer an amendment to insert on page 11, after line ninety-nine, the following:

For continuing the work upon the Washington aqueduct, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to move the following amendment, to come in on page 4, at the end of line sixty-eight:

For the erection of a light-house on Point Peninsula, between Big and Little Bay De Noquet, in the State of Michigan, $15,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senate that this bill, with a single exception, contains no appropriation for new works. There is another bill pending in the House of Representatives making various appropriations of this sort, to which this amendment might be attached; but if it is now adopted on this bill it will open the door to about fifty amendments providing for the construction of new works. We might as well have the question decided now on this amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I will withdraw the amendment if there is another bill coming to us to which it can be more properly attached. I have no choice about the bill upon which it shall be placed.

Mr. SHERMAN. The House of Representatives struck out of this bill some thirty or forty appropriations for new structures, with a view to leave it without any such appropriation. It is for the Senate to say whether or not they will embark upon this subject and load this bill down. If the amendment of the Senator from Maine prevails, as a matter of course it will be followed by many others for new structures. I hope, therefore, the Senate will exclude it. If they are to be attached to any bill let them be attached to a bill that is now pending in the House of Representatives, when it shall come to us, providing for new structures. I forget the title of the House bill, but there is a bill reported from the Committee of Ways and Means which contains very many items of this kind.

Mr. MORRILL. If this is the proper bill, I desire to urge these amendments; if it is not, of course I do not. I do not know how that matter is. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to move some three or four amendments of this description applicable to the western lakes. They are all recommended by the proper Departments, and were found to be proper by the committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not wish anybody to be misled about the condition of the bill to which the Senator from Ohio has referred. I will state to my colleague that the committee in the House of Representatives have reported another bill in which many of these things are put, but it is not probable that that bill will be acted upon. The chance of putting these amendments on that bill, therefore, will be very slight, as it is very doubtful whether it will be reached. We have already taken some things out of that bill and put them on this. I should like to hear the pending amendment read, as I did not hear it before.

The Secretary again read it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to hear the reasons for that amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I have the papers here from the Light-House Board, and also from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending it. We have no information beyond that that I know of. It is recommended both by the Light-House Board and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I deem it but fair to state to my colleague that the only chance for passing the amendment is to put it upon this bill. I do not believe there is any other bill coming from the House upon which it can be put; and therefore if it is a matter of necessity it ought to go on here.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senate put on this amendment we might as well put on thirty or forty more, and I shall call for the yeas and nays to test the sense of the Senate upon it. There are many cases of this kind for new works, and in my judgment no new work ought to be entered upon at the present time without at least having a full estimate of the cost and the specifications provided for by law.

Mr. MORRILL. I have them here.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator has told us that he has three more amendments of the same sort, and there are others I know.

Mr. HALE. I want the Senator from Ohio to tell us the difference between this proposition and the appropriation of $50,000 for the custom-house at Portland.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that was reported from the Committee on Finance. The reasons for it were not stated to the Senate, but I have no doubt if they had been stated they would have been entirely satisfactory to the Senator from New Hampshire and to the Senate. I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I shall vote against this appropriation upon the ground suggested by the Senator from Ohio. If we commence making appropriations for new works, unless it is some very special case, I know that a great many motions of this kind will be made. Several years ago an appropriation of $50,000 was made for a court-house and post office at Springfield in my State. That money has never been expended; the appropriation has been suffered to lapse; and there are parties who desire to have a movement in that behalf again. Similar appropriations were made for custom-houses at other places. I agree that this is not the time to make appropriations of this character. I recollect very well that at the time this appropriation was put on for Springfield in Illinois there were quite a number of places designated as proper points for the erection of court-houses, custom-houses, and post offices. I think there were a dozen put upon one appropriation bill at one time. We shall have the same thing over again now if we commence it; and as I know nothing peculiar about this case, I trust the Senator will not put any of these appropriations on this bill.

Mr. HOWE. I think if the Senator from Illinois understood the facts in reference to this proposition he would change his vote. There is something peculiar about it. Some seven years ago Congress appropriated a sum of money to build a light-house at this very point; but at that time the only business at that point was lumbering business. The Government thought that a light-house there would serve only a local and to some extent a private interest, and therefore they did not make the expenditure. At the present time, however, a railroad is nearly completed from this point, Point Peninsula, to Lake Superior; it will be completed during the next month, and then a line of boats will be put on to run nightly between the northern terminus of the Northwestern railroad and the southern terminus of the Peninsula road, and without the advantages of these lights that navigation will be very dangerous. In view of this new and absolute necessity, the Light-House Board have recommended the erection of this light and one or two others; one at the mouth of the Fox river, I understand, and one at a point close by this.

Mr. MORRILL. The whole expenditure for all the light-houses proposed by the Committee does not exceed $40,000 or $45,000.

Mr. HOWE. The moment the road to which I have alluded is opened, that is to be a thoroughfare for a large travel, and the whole of it must be attended with great risk unless there can be some lights erected there to guide the boats to the landings.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to know what the issue is in this case? I understand the proposition is to authorize the construction of three more light-houses at an aggregate expense of about forty-five thousand dollars. I think it is a vast deal more important that we should furnish facilities for commerce on the western lakes than it was for us to pass an appropriation a little while ago of $750,000 to build fortifications on the northern lakes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We have not done that.

Mr. GRIMES. I am happy to hear it. This is something that is necessary, I understand, from the authority of the Treasury Department, to promote the commerce of that region of country which is being more and more increased and developed every year. New harbors are being opened, and large amounts of agricultural products are being sent off from places that hitherto have furnished no commerce at all. I am prepared to vote for such a proposition, especially in view of the fact stated by the chairman of the Committee on Finance that this is the only bill upon which a proposition of this kind can be attached. I understand from the Senator from Maine who represents the Committee on Commerce that all the appropriations that he has for purposes of this kind, that is, peaceful and commercial purposes, amount to about forty-five thousand dollars. I think the Senate cannot do better than agree to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Committee on Commerce examined every application for a light-house very closely, and out of the very numerous applications they selected only those which were indispensable in the opinion of the Department. I think out of perhaps twenty or thirty applications they selected five. They examined very carefully every single one, and would not recommend a single one that could possibly be dispensed with for a single year. I trust there will be no votes cast against this amendment. I shall be very much surprised if there is a single one.

Mr. HOWE. I desire merely to say to the Senator from Ohio that he is advised now by the Committee on Commerce that they have only three or four or five, at the outside, propositions of this kind to submit, and these are recommended by the Light-House Board and indorsed by the Secretary of the Treasury; and because the Senate sees fit to adopt these amendments coming from the standing committee of the Senate and from a Department of the Government, it does not follow that the Senate will be obliged to accept every proposition that comes from individuals. The Government itself—that Department of the Government which has charge of these expenditures—asks for this appropriation; and there is no reason for refusing this appropriation that does not exist for refusing every single appropriation in the bill. The necessity for making this appropriation, and the two others that are to follow it, I personally know is as great as for making any appropriation in this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is very manifest that I shall be voted down on this proposition; and as I simply wish to make my caveat against the erection of new works being put upon this appropriation bill unless in special cases and for special cases, I will withdraw the call for the yeas and nays. I do not wish to consume the time of the Senate by making an issue upon which I am manifestly in the minority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The call for the yeas and nays can only be withdrawn by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the amendment moved by the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I propose the following amendment, to follow the amendment that has just been adopted:

For beacon light on Sand Point on the west side of Little Bay De Noquet, in the State of Michigan, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer another amendment, to come in at the same place:

For beacon light at the mouth of Fox river, in the State of Wisconsin, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer another amendment, to follow the others:

For removing and reconstructing beacon light on Cape Henlopen, $17,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I have another amendment to offer, to insert the following:

For erecting a light-house on Cape Arago, in the State of Oregon, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I am instructed by the same committee to offer the following amendment:

For additional aids to navigation to facilitate the entrance to Portland, Maine, by suitably marking Alden's rock and Bulwark shoals, or otherwise, as may be found necessary, $20,000, or so much thereof as may be found necessary.

I send to the Chair two communications on this subject, which I ask to have read:

The Secretary read them, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 16, 1864.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a report from the Light-House Board upon petitions referred to them for the improvement of the aids to navigation required to mark dangers in the approaches to Portland.

I fully concur in the views of the committee as to the necessity of a special examination by the board, and respectfully ask the attention of your committee to the matter, and also its favorable action in regard to the appropriation of $20,000 recommended by the board.

I am, very respectfully,

S. P. CHASE,

Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. W. P. FESSENDEN, Chairman Finance Committee, United States Senate.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD,
WASHINGTON CITY, June 15, 1864.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive the letter of Hon. W. P. FESSENDEN, of the 13th instant, with accompanying papers, in reference to additional aids to navigation required to mark dangers in the approaches to Portland.

In view of the direct testimony of shipmasters as to the necessity of marking Alden's rock and Bulwark shoal, this board is of opinion that the importance of the subject demands a careful personal investigation by one or more of its members, and it is proposed to enter at once, with the sanction of the Department, upon the examination.

In the mean time it is respectfully recommended that application be made to Congress for an appropriation of $20,000 for properly marking Alden's rock and Bulwark shoal, or such other measures for facilitating the entrance to Portland harbor as, after a close scrutiny, shall be found necessary.

Very respectfully,

W. B. SHURBRICK,
Chairman.

Hon. S. P. CHASE, Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say in a single word that the papers show that this was the point where the Bohemian was lost recently, and that fact I suppose contributed to the general examination and inquiry which led to this application.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This case simply amounts to this: the attention of the Light-House Board is called to the propriety of marking some obstruction or rock near Portland, and they answer that in view of the testimony of shipmasters they think a critical examination ought to be made. They do not say that it is necessary, but that a critical examination should be made; and in the mean time they recommend that $20,000 be appropriated, if it should be found necessary, to accomplish this object afterwards. It seems to me that is a very singular case to put on an appropriation bill at this time. The examination has not been made. It is asking it in advance. If you make the appropriation in advance, and send out the Light-House Board to see whether they can expend it, I have no doubt they will do it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I can explain this whole matter, I think, to the satisfaction of the Senator himself. These papers were sent to me a few days since. I sent them to the Secretary of the Treasury without any comments whatever, but merely wrote him a note calling his attention to them. He sent them back to me with the papers that have been read, calling the attention of the Committee on Finance to the subject. I did not consider that the Committee on Finance was the proper committee to investigate the subject, nor did I wish it to come before a committee of which I was a member for fear of the inferences that might be drawn with reference to my own action. I therefore sent them to the appropriate committee, the Committee on Commerce, and the Committee on Commerce have unanimously reported in favor of the appropriation. The reason why the Light-House Board say that an examination should be made is, not that they have any doubt that something should be done, but that until the examination is made they cannot tell precisely what should be done, whether Bulwark ledge and Alden's rock should be marked, or whether only one of them should be, or what kind of aid to navigation should be placed there.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Maine will allow me, I will submit the ordinary motion to take a recess at twenty minutes to five o'clock until seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us dispose of this first.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to dispose of this matter, and my motion gives ten minutes to do it in.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope the Senator will defer his motion until we get through with this particular item.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Alden's rock and Bulwark ledge are at the entrance of the harbor, about three or four miles out. The harbor, it is well known, is one of the finest harbors in the world; but the entrance to the harbor, at some seasons of the year, is dangerous, on account of these ledges and rocks, especially at those seasons when fogs prevail, and they have occasioned a good deal of difficulty. A few years ago we had a light-vessel stationed at Alden's rock; that is, a stationary vessel with a light. What kind of a vessel it is best to put there now they do not know. That was carried off and lost in a great storm, and it has not been replaced. Since that period the navigation of Portland harbor has become very much more important than it ever was before, on account of the fact that we have so many English steamers coming there. During the last season we had two lines of steamers there. There was a steamer every week, or two or three times a week; I do not know which. In a letter written to me by the agent of those steamers it was stated that they contemplated putting on two additional lines of steamers next season, one from London and the other from Liverpool. It is a fact that the English steamers coming into the harbor during fogs have repeatedly touched upon one or the other of these places and incurred danger; and during the last season, as we all know, the Bohemian was lost there with a cargo worth $1,500,000. She struck on one of these places and went to pieces.

It becomes absolutely necessary, therefore, with reference to navigation that something should be done before the next season commences. What exactly should be done cannot be ascertained until the Light-House Board visit it and decide. They are perfectly satisfied that something should be done with reference to it; what that shall be they will ascertain; and they recommend that this appropriation be placed to their account in order that it may be made when they have, as they propose to do at once, decided on the course of action. I have no doubt it recommends itself to every man who has looked at it as a matter exceedingly necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now submit a motion that the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock.

Mr. POMEROY. Before that motion is put, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill that it may be printed and referred to a committee.

Mr. DIXON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it cannot be received. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 15, noes 14; and the Senate accordingly took a recess until seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven o'clock p. m.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. DAVIS gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a joint resolution to establish peace among the people of the United States.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. POMEROY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 333) for a grant of lands in the Territories of Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona, to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph through said Territories; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RIDDLE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 73) to allow Senators and Representatives to visit forts, military prisons, and hospitals within their respective States.

Mr. RIDDLE. If any Senator desires it, I shall not object to the reference of this joint resolution, but I do not think there can be any possible objection to it.

Mr. WILSON. I move its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

The motion was agreed to.

TREATY WITH COLOMBIA.

Mr. SUMNER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be requested to consider if any legislation be needed in order to carry into execution any treaty with the United States of Colombia, with leave to report by bill or otherwise.

W. B. MATCHETT.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 110) to declare the construction of a "joint resolution for the relief of W. B. Matchett," approved June 20, 1864, was read twice by its title.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to put that resolution upon its passage at once. It will take but a moment. It is merely explanatory of a joint resolution which was passed a few days ago.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It directs that the joint resolution indicated in its title shall be construed to direct the Paymaster General of the United States to adjust the account of W. B. Matchett, chaplain of the tenth regiment New York volunteers, and pay him the amount of pay and allowances of a chaplain for and during the periods that regiment was in the service of the United States and up to the time it was mustered out of the service, deducting the amount heretofore paid him as such chaplain.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSION LAWS.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a bill reported from the Committee on Pensions on the Calendar—House bill No. 406—and a bill which I trust every Senator feels an interest in. The committee of this body has amended the House bill, somewhat diminishing the amount which the bill would call from the Treasury. I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration. It will take perhaps five or eight minutes to read the bill. I do not think it will provoke debate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think there are any more material amendments to the civil appropriation bill, and the Senator can call this bill up afterwards.

Several Senators. Let it be passed now.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 406) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to grant pensions," approved July 14, 1862, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on the amendments of the committee as the reading is proceeded with, if there be no objection.

The first amendment of the committee was to strike out the fourth section, as follows:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That section twelve of the act to grant pensions, approved July 14, 1862, is hereby repealed. And the Commissioner of Pensions is authorized and empowered to detail, from time to time, clerks in his office to investigate suspected attempts at fraud on the Government through the Pension Office, and to aid in prosecuting any persons so offending, with such additional compensation as is customary in cases of special service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out all of the fifth section after the seventh line, in the following words:

And in all other cases of total and absolute disability of any non-commissioned officer or private soldier, resulting from wounds received or disease contracted in the service in the line of his duty, the pension of such non-commissioned officer or private soldier shall be eleven dollars per month, to continue during such absolute and total disability.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the ninth section, as follows:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That those persons, not enlisted soldiers in the Army, who volunteered for the time being to serve with any regularly organized military or naval force of the United States, or where persons otherwise volunteered and rendered service in any engagement with rebels or Indians since the 4th day of March, 1861, shall, if they have been disabled in such temporary service, be entitled to the same benefits of the pension laws as those who have been regularly mustered into the United States service; and the widows or other dependents of any such persons as may have been killed in the temporary service aforsaid shall be entitled to pensions in the same manner as they would have been had such persons been regularly mustered: Provided, That no claim under this section shall be valid unless presented and prosecuted to a successful issue within three years from and after the passage of this act. All such claims shall be adjudicated under such special rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Pensions may prescribe most effectually to guard against fraud.

Mr. RAMSEY. I hope the Senate will not agree to this amendment of the committee. I think the provision as it came from the House of Representatives is eminently just and proper. There seems to be no reason why this discrimination should be made against those who are called into the service suddenly upon an emergency where there happens to be no United States mustering officer present to muster them into the service. I know that such was the case in the Indian war in western Minnesota, in 1862, when the militia were called out. I know, too, that several volunteer United States companies were there who had enlisted in the service, but there being no mustering officer there at that time they were not regularly mustered into the service. Many of those men were killed and many of them seriously wounded. I can see no reason why this discrimination should be made against those persons. I trust, therefore, the Senate will not consent to this amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. President, the amount of applications to the Pension Office under this ninth section, if it should be adopted, I apprehend no Senator can really imagine. It is true, there have been a great many cases of meritorious service which that section would relieve, and that Congress at a proper and fitting time will relieve; I have no doubt about that. But if we pass this section now it will place men who simply went out for a day, when the rebels or Indians were in their neighborhood, and were injured, upon precisely the same ground as the men who enlisted for three years and were near the close of their service when injured, if their applications are made at the same time. If a man who has enlisted for three years has been injured, it will be, according to the present condition of the office, something near a year before his case can be reached. I think his case should not be postponed longer than that in order to let in those who volunteer simply for the occasion and do not join any regularly organized force; for this section goes much further than the Senator perhaps on a first reading would imagine. It takes in a class of persons who may have "volunteered and rendered service in any engagement with rebels or Indians since the 4th day of March, 1861."

I do not think that a man who renders service in an engagement, for instance, helping to bring away a wounded man or rendering any other service on the field, and under those circumstances being injured, stands on the same ground with those who enlist, who are mustered into the service, and who serve year after year, and who meet with the same or a greater or less injury. I think there is a distinction between the cases so far forth as this, that those who come in casually ought not, by having their applications filed at the same time, to postpone action upon the cases of those who have borne the burden and heat of the day for two or three years, and thus postpone action in their cases until they may be dead or hope deferred so long that it is about as bad as death. I think the men who have enlisted and who have performed this long service ought to have their cases heard first, and I appeal to the Senator from Minnesota to consider that.

Mr. RAMSEY. I have no objection to their cases being heard first.

Mr. FOSTER. But there is no mode of deciding that question without examining the whole; and if we adopt this section, if these applications go in together, the Commissioner, after having examined the one case or the other, will of course and might as well of course pass on the one as on the other. There is an immense amount of business now in the Pension Office; all these cases are behind months and months, the amount of business to be performed being so great it accumulates daily in the office; and if we pass this section there will be such an accumulation of business that these persons who, I think, are the most meritorious, cannot have their cases heard perhaps for eighteen months. I think that is too hard. I think we ought first to dispose of those cases which were provided for by law; for these men of whom I speak went into the service under a law which gave them these pensions. I think the Government ought to keep good faith with them.

The Senator from Minnesota does not propose that we should violate our faith; but he proposes to let in on the same platform men who are meritorious I agree, but who did not come into the service under any law other than that of patriotism, which is, I agree, the higher law. Still, under these circumstances I do not think they should now be on a level so as to exclude and keep back those who are clearly entitled by law to a pension, and the widows of such as have died in the service. I think we ought to let the bill pass without this section; and then at another session, or within a short time, we may be able, and I trust shall be able, to do ample justice to these persons. Let us at least get through with the cases of those who went into the service under the law and relieve them before we so incur the office as that they cannot be relieved in any considerable time. I go with the Senator in my desire, sincere and strong, to aid these men, because I believe they have a just claim; but I do not think their cases should be interposed so as to prevent action on the cases provided for by law.

Mr. RAMSEY. I take it the honorable Senator from Connecticut imagines a difficulty that really does not exist. I take it that this section of the House bill would not probably admit more than one per cent. of the present number of persons who apply for pensions. Then again there is a class of men that we certainly should admit who are entitled to pensions equally with those who are already provided for by law. A large number of persons have been enlisted suddenly, in the exigencies of the service, and marched off to meet the enemy and brought into an engagement before they were regularly mustered into the service.

Mr. FOSTER. The bill provides for all such cases.

Mr. RAMSEY. This section which it is proposed to strike out certainly does.

Mr. FOSTER. There is another section that does.

Mr. RAMSEY. I propose then to amend this section which is proposed to be stricken out, by striking out the word "not" in the second line, and after the word "enlisted" adding the words "and not regularly mustered into the service."

Mr. FOSTER. If the Senator will allow me, the eleventh section of the bill provides for just that class of cases. It is in these words:

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That all enlisted soldiers in the Army who shall have become disabled in the service, whether they shall have been regularly mustered in or not, shall be entitled to the same benefits of the pension laws as those who have been regularly mustered into the United States service; and the widows or other dependents entitled to pensions by law, as prescribed by the act of July 14, 1862, of any such soldier who may have been killed, or shall have died, or shall hereafter die, by reason of any wound received or disease contracted while in said service and in the line of duty, shall be entitled to the same pension as though such soldier had been regularly mustered into the service.

Mr. RAMSEY. I will withdraw my amendment. I had not time to read the bill through to see whether it covered those cases.

Mr. FOSTER. It covers the whole class of cases alluded to by the Senator.

Mr. RAMSEY. I trust the Senate will refuse to strike out the ninth section.

Mr. GRIMES. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that there are two or three regiments in my State in exactly the same condition as those he speaks of in Minnesota, who were called off into Missouri, and some of them have been wounded and killed; yet I know that safety to the Treasury requires that we should adopt the suggestions of the Committee on Pensions, and let each one of these cases stand on its own merits. That is the only way.

Mr. RAMSEY. That is a poor argument to the soldier or his family.

Mr. GRIMES. It is the position they stand in now; it is the position they have been in for the last sixty years; and we might just as well abandon all control over our Treasury as to adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. RAMSEY. I admit that has been the law; but here is a proposition from the House of Representatives to amend the law so as to cover their cases, and it is now proposed to reject that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out the ninth section of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to add as an additional section the following:

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That the widows and children of colored soldiers who have been, or who may be hereafter, killed, or who have died, or may hereafter die of wounds received in battle, or who have died or may hereafter die of disease contracted in the military service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall be entitled to receive the pensions now provided by law, without other proof of marriage than that the parties had habitually recognized each other as man and wife, and lived together as such for a definite period, not less than two years, to be shown by the affidavits of credible witnesses: Provided, That if such parties resided in any State in which their marriage may have been legally solemnized, the usual evidence shall be required.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say a word in regard to this amendment.

The law now gives to black soldiers the same pensions that white soldiers are entitled to; there is no distinction now in our service as it respects the soldiers themselves; but there is this unfortunate distinction between the widows and children of white and black soldiers: the blacks who come from the slave States, and who probably were slaves before they entered the service, although they had wives and children, were not, according to the laws of the States within which they lived, legally married, and of course if they were killed in the service under circumstances which would entitle their wives and children to ever so much consideration from the Government, they could not by law be recognized as the wives or widows and children of the persons thus killed. We thought that this was unjust. We thought that the widows and children of the black men who were killed at Fort Pillow, and since that the men who have been killed at Petersburg and elsewhere, fighting as gallantly and as bravely as any men under the flag, be their complexion what it will, should be recognized by the Government and should have the little pension that the law provides.

We therefore, in this section, provide for that contingency, saying that the marriage shall be sufficiently proved if the parties are shown to have lived together for a definite period, recognizing each other as man and wife for a period not less than two years. That is to be esteemed as proof of marriage that shall entitle the widow to a widow's pension and the children born under those circumstances to such pension as is provided for the children of those who die in the service. There is a proviso to the section that where these persons come from States where their marriages could have been duly solemnized, the requisite proof of marriage shall be had. In cases, however, where by the laws of the State in which these parties lived they could not legally contract marriage there was a necessity of course to provide what should be evidence of marriage; and this the committee deemed to be sufficient evidence, for in almost all those cases it is all the evidence that can be furnished. I appeal to the Senate, therefore, to pass this section in order that this class of persons—and they are numerous—may be relieved.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust the Senator from Connecticut will allow this bill to be laid aside, as it evidently will lead to debate, and allow us to proceed with the appropriation bill.

Mr. FOSTER. If it is likely to be debated at any length, as the Senator yielded to me, I shall not press it; but I have been waiting for a long while to have it considered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know from the remarks by Senators about me that this will excite discussion, and I trust we shall go on with the bill which is the special order. This bill was allowed to come in rather informally. I move that it be postponed until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 527) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1865.

Mr. HALE. On the 11th page, after the eighty-sixth line, at the end of the appropriations for the "Government hospital for the insane," I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to move the following amendment as additional sections:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and required to set apart from the pay of any officer of the Navy or of the marine corps who may be under treatment by his order in the Government hospital for the insane, such portion of the monthly pay of said officer as may be needed for his personal use and comfort in addition to the ordinary resources of that establishment.

And be it further enacted, That the superintendent of the Government hospital for the insane shall recommend the portion of the pay of such officer of the Navy or of the marine corps that shall be set apart in the manner and for the purposes described in the preceding section, but the Secretary of the Navy may in his discretion increase or reduce the sum so recommended to be set apart.

And be it further enacted, That the said sum set apart for the personal benefit of any officer of the Navy or marine corps under treatment in the Government hospital for the insane by order of the Secretary of the Navy, shall be paid to the said superintendent of that institution by the paymaster having charge of the said officer's accounts, and the receipt of said superintendent for the sum which is authorized by the Secretary of the Navy to be drawn from said paymaster shall be equivalent to the receipt of the legal guardian of said officer, or to that of the officer himself. The said superintendent shall disburse the money thus set apart and drawn by him, and he shall account for it in the quarterly statements to the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury.

I suppose this amendment sufficiently explains itself. There are some officers in the hospital who require some luxuries or something of that sort that they have always been accustomed to, but there is no provision for it; their whole pay is paid to their guardians; and this amendment proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to set apart such sum as he shall think necessary to be paid to the superintendent for the comfort of those patients and taking care of them. That is the whole of it. It is recommended by the superintendent of the institution and by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I offer an amendment, to insert at the end of page 14, under the head of "Miscellaneous," the following:

For the construction of a bridge across the Republican river on the military road at Fort Riley, $10,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the Senator if he is authorized to offer that amendment from any committee.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I am authorized to offer it from the Committee on Territories. The road where it crosses the Republican fork is on the fort reserve, on the Government lands.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has there ever been a bridge there?

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I think there has been a bridge there until very recently. Fort Riley stands in the fork of the Kansas and Republican rivers. Trains going west are very frequently detained there for days by the want of this bridge.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not think there has ever been a bridge there.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I think there has been.

Mr. GRIMES. There has been a ferry there.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I think there has been a bridge. I have never seen the bridge, but I saw the remains of one. My colleague knows all about it.

Mr. POMEROY. The Government built a bridge there some years ago.

Mr. GRIMES. How long did it stand?

Mr. POMEROY. I think it stood about a year. During a freshet it was carried off; but it would not have been carried off if it had been built high enough. It was built from the bottom lands, and the bottoms overflow there at high water; and the Government built the bridge and made it so low that when the freshet came it lifted the bridge up and took it off. I crossed on it myself before the freshet, and crossed very well. I think the trains that go from Fort Riley to New Mexico, and all the long trains that go that way, have to cross this Government reserve. It will be a matter of great convenience to the Government to have a bridge there, and it will be particularly convenient to our people, while it would be at the same time convenient to the Government.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. My colleague is aware that this is on the Government reserve, on the fort reserve.

Mr. POMEROY. I have already stated that it is on the fort reserve, and that is the reason my State is not allowed to build the bridge, simply because it is on the Government land. We have to go that way; but we cannot build the bridge, as I have said.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt we can accommodate the Senators from Kansas entirely on this subject by authorizing the State of Kansas to build a bridge there on the Government land. I suppose that will be satisfactory. It is rather unusual for us to build bridges within the States. I have heard of building bridges in Territories where there were remote settlements with very little population, where the Government used the road; but to build a bridge within a State it strikes me is a novel proposition. I think it is in violation of the Democratic platform to make such improvements, at least within the States.

Mr. POMEROY. There have been a great many petitions on this subject sent to Congress, not only from the people of my State, but from the officers of the Government.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the Senators from Kansas had better accept the proposition of the Senator from Ohio, because if they wait he will be for taxing the bridge at least five per cent. [Laughter.]

Mr. POMEROY. The officers of the Government have reported in favor of building this bridge many times, and have signed petitions for it, and I think it is very desirable to have it. If the first bridge that the Government built had been built high enough, and as high as they might have built it, it would have remained to this day, but they built it so low that a freshet took it off.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I do not recollect now how far this river is from the fort, but it is very high.

Mr. POMEROY. Not a quarter of a mile.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. It is right at the fort. There is no way to get west from the fort without this bridge, and it is on Government land. It seems to me if the Senator from Ohio were successful in giving us the right to build the bridge, it would be unjust for us to make the improvement on the Government land in a Government reservation.

Mr. SHERMAN. If my friend will allow me, I have no doubt that in a year or two we shall either give the State of Kansas this fort reservation, or sell it at a very low price to somebody. That has always been the custom. There are no more Indians there, and we shall have no occasion for the fort shortly. The Missouri raiders do not get up so high as Fort Riley, and there are no Indians there to trouble the people; so that I have no doubt this reservation will be in a short time ceded to the State or sold; and there is no reason for the Government building a bridge at that point because the fort is there. The fort probably has performed its functions and will cease to exist in a very short time.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. The Senator from Ohio the other day in a discussion said that he thought the improvements on Fort Leavenworth cost the Government $30,000, whereas they have cost about thirty million dollars; and I suppose the Government has buildings and improvements at Fort Riley to-day that have cost five or ten million dollars. Now, to ask the State of Kansas to build a bridge on a Government reserve and within a quarter of a mile of a fort belonging to the Government seems to me to be discriminating against the State that my colleague and myself represent. I have voted here for improvements upon the lakes and improvements upon the Atlantic coast. When Senators say to me that an improvement is necessary for the Government I vote for it. I say here, and my colleague has said, that this improvement is necessary for the Government. To be sure it will be a convenience to our people; but here are vast trains passing westward and coming eastward that are detained at this river, and I venture to say that by building this bridge the Government would save more every year than the cost of building it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the Senator from Kansas if he has called the attention of the War Department to this matter, and if there is any recommendation from them about it. It is usual to base such appropriations on the recommendation of the proper executive officer.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. My colleague has stated that the attention of the Government has been called to this question. There are numerous petitions on the subject.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Do you mean from the Secretary of War?

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. No; I mean the officers of the fort and officers of the Government—quartermasters, &c.; but I do not know that there have been any this session. I crossed this river just before I came here, and saw the necessity of this bridge for the Government.

Mr. POMEROY. The probability that the Senator from Ohio speaks of, of Fort Riley being abandoned, does not strike those who are acquainted with the facts favorably. That the fort at Leavenworth may be abandoned and ultimately moved up to Fort Riley when the cars get running there is very probable; but that Fort Riley will be abandoned within any reasonable period no one believes. Fort Riley is a frontier post. Leavenworth is not a frontier post any more; and as soon as we build a road from Leavenworth to Fort Riley, I have no doubt the Government will move everything up there, and it will become the largest post in the West, because it is a frontier post and will be the great distributing point for New Mexico and all of the Southwest, and that will pass over this very branch of the Kansas river.

I notice that the Senator from Ohio moved that $150,000 be paid to the State of Minnesota for expenses that she had incurred in defending herself, and it passed readily. I was very glad to have it passed. Senators all voted for it on this very bill. We in Kansas have carried on a war for years against Indians, against border ruffians, and against rebels, and we have never yet been able to get one dollar of that whole account. Year by year our people have sent in their petitions and had them referred to the Committee on Finance or the Committee on Military Affairs, and every one of them has been reported adversely. We have carried on this war at the expense of the State, at the expense of individuals, sometimes at the expense of counties; we have sometimes issued county bonds, and we have sustained ourselves. Our people to-day are left destitute because sixteen full regiments from my State are taken out of the State. Most of them have gone under General Steele in Arkansas. We are left there defenseless; we are left almost destitute. Notwithstanding the advances we have made, we have never been able to get a dollar out of this Government. To be sure, a bill has come here from the House of Representatives to pay the accounts of some officers of our Indian regiments that have served a year or two and have not received a cent. The bill is now lying on the table. If that should be passed it will be the first of the series of bills that we have brought forward, every one of which has failed, and no committee has ever considered them.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to correct the misapprehension into which the Senate might fall in regard to this Minnesota matter to which the Senator from Kansas has alluded. Two years ago we passed a law directing the proper accounting officers to adjust the expenses of the State of Minnesota in suppressing Indian hostilities. That law was operative and imperative indeed upon the Committee on Finance, and all we had to do was to ascertain the amount allowed by the accounting officers and appropriate the money for it to carry into execution an existing law. That was provided for, and the money was appropriated for that purpose.

I need not be told that Kansas is a very good State, a very loyal State, a very patriotic State; but that does not prove that we must therefore build bridges across her streams.

Mr. POMEROY. We only ask for the Government to build a bridge where we are not allowed even to cut a stick of timber. We are not allowed on that Government reserve so much as to take a tree. We only ask the Government to build at a small expense a bridge on a Government reserve, within a stone's throw of a military post. And, by the way, when you passed the law last year for Minnesota, you appropriated $200,000, and the $150,000 that you appropriated this year is only the balance that they incurred over and above what you appropriated last year. That makes $350,000.

Mr. HARLAN. The Senator from Kansas is in error in saying that we appropriated $200,000. I think the language might lead the Senate astray. The Congress of the United States at the last session authorized the Department to take out of the Indian annuities $200,000 to pay for depredations committed by the Indians, whose annuities were thus used in the State of Minnesota. It was not money appropriated from the Treasury of the United States, but money taken from the Indian annuities and paid out for depredations which these same Indians had committed on the white people of Minnesota, in pursuance of a law and usage which have been followed for half a century. I felt it due to the Congress of the United States that this explanation should be made.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. The Senator from Iowa knows well that we had it in our power to confiscate those annuities and that it would have been but just to do so, and he knows further that the money was taken out of the Treasury of the United States when there was no binding contract to pay those Indians for many years to come.

I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio what is the difference between giving $15,000 on the motion of his colleague a few moments ago, for a military road in Dakota, and giving $10,000 for the construction of a bridge on a Government reserve in the State of Kansas that we say to you is not only necessary but indispensable?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will answer distinctly. In the Territories we have always built military roads. We built them in Kansas. We built this very road that he now speaks of. We built a bridge across the very stream that he now speaks of; but it appears that it has been swept away by a flood. Does it therefore follow that now, after the State has been settled, and they have a State organization formed and in operation, we must keep up that bridge merely because the Government has some property in a fort on a reservation near by? As a matter of course I do not care how much the Senator gets the Senate to allow him; but I think the principle is wrong. So far as I know we have never built bridges within a State unless the construction of a national road be considered an exception. If there has ever been any case in which the Government of the United States built a bridge across a small stream within a State I am not aware of it, unless it was in the construction of the national road, a work of great national importance.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That was sustained on the ground that it passed through a number of the States.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was sustained on the ground that it passed through several States. Bridges and military roads have been constructed in the Territories; and when my colleague submitted the usual motion that $15,000 be appropriated to build a military road in Dakota, it was nothing more than has been done with regard to every other Territory, and especially Kansas when it was a Territory.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I say to the Senator from Ohio there has never been a foot of military road built in the Territory or State of Kansas by the General Government—not one foot.

Mr. SHERMAN. Was not Lander's road built while it was a Territory?

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. No, sir; that road and every other road of the sort was built before the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was built while it was a Territory, but while it was called the Territory of Nebraska. That is the whole difference. The whole of that western country was once Nebraska, and Lander's road, as it was called, and several other military roads were built while it was in that condition. Kansas was the new name given to this portion of the Territory in the Kansas-Nebraska bill.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. There was no territorial government for the Territory now the State of Kansas until the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska bill. It was Indian country. There was no territorial government there. There were no white men there at that time to be benefited by the construction of that road. But here is a reserve belonging to the Government that we are prohibited from going upon, the value of which is to be increased by the erection of this bridge. The Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives two years ago reported that this Government owed Kansas $600,000, but, as my colleague has said, we have not received a dollar for the losses that we suffered during our territorial existence when we were contending against the Government of the United States. Sir, Kansas had hoped that when the Republican party came into power she would be treated as a kind mother treats her child. So far we have received land grants, railroad grants, but when we come here and say to you that this small appropriation is for the benefit of the Government, we think you should give it to us, especially when we are voting appropriations all around us.

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes eight, noes not counted.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer the following amendment to come in as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That sections eight and nine of the act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation of slaves into any port or place within the jurisdiction of the United States from and after the 1st day of January, in the year of our Lord 1808," which said sections undertake to regulate the coastwise slave trade, are hereby repealed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would not oppose the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts on an ordinary bill. I have read the two sections referred to in this amendment, and I feel disposed to repeal them; but I ask the Senate if it is proper to incumber this bill with a matter that is in no way connected with the appropriations in the bill, which is in no way connected with any item contained in the bill, which has no pertinence to any existing appropriation—a matter simply of commercial regulation, regulating the coastwise slave trade? Is it wise, I repeat, to incumber an appropriation bill at this stage of the session with a controverted point of this kind, which has no connection with the business before the Senate, no connection with any appropriation, which does not come from any committee? However, as it does not contain an appropriation it is not subject to the rule on that point, but it is subject to the discretion of the Senate. I trust, therefore, that the Senate will keep this bill free from these disputed, extraneous, political questions.

Mr. SUMNER. I am sorry that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] objects to this proposition on the present occasion. It is true, his objection is one of form; but no such objection should be made to such a proposition, especially at this stage of the session.

In moving it now on an appropriation bill, I follow approved precedents. There is no rule of order against it; nor is there any rule of usage. On the contrary, it is in conformity with order and with usage.

The Senator wishes to keep the appropriation bill free from extraneous matter. But this is not a sufficient reason for excluding my proposition, unless the Senator is ready, for the sake of form, to sacrifice the substance. If it be important that my proposition should prevail, and if at this late stage of the session it may be difficult to carry it otherwise, then am I clearly right in moving it as I now do, and the Senator is wrong in opposing it. An appropriation bill is like a "through train," and while its special office is to appropriate money, yet it may carry any proposition required by the public good.

Why, sir, there is hardly ever an appropriation bill that is not compelled to carry passengers in this way. It has been done during the present session repeatedly; and if the Senator will read our statutes-at-large he will find that the usage has prevailed for years. It is no new thing. I do not begin it now.

If it were necessary to furnish examples, I might point to my friend the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE,] who won one of his proudest triumphs in this Chamber, which secured to him the sympathy and gratitude especially of sailors, by moving on an appropriation bill the abolition of the lash in the naval and commercial marine of the United States. Had he been compelled to wait the passage of a special act for this purpose I fear that he would have been waiting to this day. And this example of the Senator has been followed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRIMES,] who, on an appropriation bill, moved and carried the abolition of grog in the Navy.

But I am not without personal experience under this head. I hope that I shall not take too great a liberty if I adduce it even in detail. I was chosen to the Senate for the first time immediately after the passage of the infamous fugitive slave act of 1850. If at that time I received from the people of Massachusetts any special charge, it was to use my best endeavors to secure the repeal of this act. I began the work in the first session that I was here. Disappointed in various efforts to bring the question directly before the Senate on a bill or resolution, I ventured at last—on the advice of eminent Senators who differed from me in sentiment, but who appreciated candidly the obligations of my position—to move the repeal on an appropriation bill. A debate ensued which lasted till late in the evening. It may not be uninteresting to know that on the ayes and noes there were but four votes in the affirmative, as follows: Mr. Chase, Mr. Hale, Mr. Sumner, and Mr. Wade. This was 26th August, 1852. Such was the weakness of our cause at that time.

But it must be remarked that throughout the protracted and sometimes acrimonious debate, it was not for a moment suggested that the proposition was not "germane to the bill," or that it was not completely in order. Had any such idea been tenable, had there been the least apology for it, had it not been utterly unreasonable, be assured, sir, it would have been made the excuse for stifling the discussion. The two political parties had just made their nomination for President. Franklin Pierce was the candidate of the Democrats, and Winfield Scott of the Whigs. Both parties had united substantially on platforms declaring the compromise measures, including the fugitive slave act, "a finality" not to be opened or discussed. But they were opened and discussed on that day.

Mr. Hunter, of Virginia, was at the time chairman of the Committee on Finance. He was in many respects a remarkable person, with a mind enlarged somewhat by study and long experience in public affairs, and with a temper not easily disturbed. Looking back upon his conduct of the business intrusted to him in this Chamber, there can be no question of his ability or fidelity. There was neither weakness or indifference in that mildness of sway. He understood completely the duties of his position, was a jealous guardian of the appropriation bills, and was, moreover, a most determined thick and thin partisan of slavery in all its pretensions. But I do not recollect that he interposed any objection to the time or place of my motion; and, though the fugitive slave bill was a part of his political and social creed, I am sure that he allowed the debate to close without any criticism upon my course, or a single impatient word. All this now belongs to history, and I mention it as a precedent for the present hour.

My motion on that day was discussed on its merits, and I trust my motion to-day will be discussed in the same way.

I propose to remove from the statute-book odious provisions in support of slavery. Whoever is in favor of those provisions, whoever is disposed to keep alive the coastwise slave trade, or whoever wishes to recognize it in our statutes, will naturally vote against my motion. And yet, let me say that I am at a loss to understand how at this moment, at this stage of our history, any Senator can hesitate to unite with me in this work of expurgation and purification. But at all events, I trust that the Senator from Ohio will not set up an objection of form to prevent the success of this good work. He must not be more severe against freedom now than was the representative of slavery who occupied his place when I moved the repeal of the fugitive slave bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know what the Senator from Massachusetts means by the remarks that he has just made. In presenting this bill, in reporting it from the Committee on Finance and managing it here, I am simply performing a duty assigned to me by the Senate. In my judgment, no legislative measure of this kind should ever be attached to an appropriation bill unless it bears a relation to or has a direct connection with an appropriation contained in the bill. That is a correct principle not to be departed from, and which was not departed from in the historical cases alluded to by the Senator from Massachusetts. In the case of the abolition of flogging in the Navy, where an appropriation is made for the pay of the officers and sailors and marines in the Navy, it is proper to connect with it a regulation as to the mode and manner of treatment of those sailors. So, in regard to the appropriations for the Navy and for the custody and care of the sailors, it is proper to stipulate that no grog shall be given to them. Both those propositions were pertinent and relevant to the bill to which they were proposed. In all the historical cases referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts the amendments were proper and connected with the subject-matter of the appropriation.

But here is a matter wholly extraneous, having no connection whatever with any single item contained in this bill, dragged and lugged in here without any pertinency whatever; an amendment which, if adopted, will tend to embarrass the passage of this bill, will create political controversies on a mere appropriation bill. It seems to me it ought not to be adopted by the Senate. In resisting it I simply resist what I consider to be a bad practice, and I hope the Senate will sustain me in this matter. Every member of the Senate is interested in confining the appropriation bills simply to what they declare themselves to be, appropriations to carry into effect existing laws. If the members of the Finance Committee were to pursue a different policy and allow these bills to be loaded down, they would assume the direction and control of the whole legislation of Congress. If the Senate allow this measure to be put on this bill, and the example of the Senator from Massachusetts is followed, every Senator interested in some particular proposition will seek to have it fastened upon an appropriation bill, being certain that the weight of that appropriation bill will carry it through. Thus these bills, which were intended simply to furnish means to carry on the ordinary operations of the Government, will be made political bills containing disputed items, controverted items. Instead of being what they are, or what they ought to be, they will be made to carry political loads. I trust, therefore, that the Senate will not vote this proposition upon this appropriation bill and thus create embarrassment and delay in its passage and a long discussion about it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suppose the law, two sections of which the Senator from Massachusetts proposes to repeal, is the act of March, 1807. That is it, is it not?

Mr. SUMNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. He proposes to repeal the eighth and ninth sections of that act. Now, independent of the objection taken by the honorable member from Ohio, which, in my judgment, should be conclusive with the Senate, that such a measure, although it may be a proper one in itself, is not one proper to be inserted upon a bill of this description, I submit to the honorable member that perhaps he will overshoot his own mark if he succeeds in having his amendment adopted. I take it for granted everybody will admit that however the opinions of individual Senators may be upon the subject, there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States which prohibits slaves from being transported in vessels from one port of the United States to another port.

Mr. SUMNER. If the Senator will allow me, I think it is utterly unconstitutional myself. I have no doubt about it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I excluded you in what I said.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon. Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly I excluded you. If I am right, that is to say, that the courts hold that that act is not unconstitutional, the honorable member proposes to repeal the eighth and ninth sections of that act, and I inquire of him whether he has looked, with the acuteness which he always brings to the consideration of questions of that character, to the effect of his amendment. If the Constitution of the United States of itself would authorize a slave to be carried from one port of the United States to another port of the United States, then they may be carried, except so far as Congress under the commercial power may think proper to restrain it, and the object of the two sections he proposes to repeal is to restrain it. The eighth section prohibits their being carried in vessels of a less tonnage than forty tons. That he proposes to repeal. Then if I am right—and I am sure I am right—in the judgment of the courts they may be carried in vessels of a less amount of tonnage than that. The ninth section, the other one which he proposes to repeal, provides for the manner in which they may be carried in vessels of forty tons or more than forty tons; and for the purpose of protecting one who is claimed to be a slave but who may be free against being sold into captivity in a State where he may not be able to establish his freedom by evidence, certain regulations are prescribed by Congress for the protection of the freeman, who, because he is black, when he gets into a State where slavery exists, may be sold and may be held in slavery forever thereafter.

If the honorable member repeals that section, what is the result? The result is, that in all vessels of any amount of tonnage slaves may be carried, no matter at what hazard to the slave, no matter at what hazard of life or liberty, provided I am right, and I repeat I know that I am, and the courts will hold, that under the Constitution of the United States there is nothing to prohibit it except in the power which it confers upon Congress to regulate commerce between the States and foreign nations, and consequently, in the absence of such regulation, these people may be carried. If I wanted to accomplish the object which the honorable member supposes southern men in the past, at any rate, were anxious to accomplish, to open this trade entirely, to permit the slaves to be carried from one port to another without restraint, I would join hands with him and repeal these two sections of the act of March, 1807. Nothing is clearer in my judgment than that they may be carried in a vessel of any amount of tonnage, and they may be carried in any manner in which the master of that vessel and the master of the slave think proper to have them carried, if those two sections are repealed. Instead, therefore, by this particular measure, of accomplishing the purpose which the honorable member says he always has in his mind's eye, of striking at the institution of slavery wherever it exists, he will grant a larger license to the institution than our ancestors granted, and a license which they intended to restrain by the very sections which the honorable member proposes to repeal.

Mr. SUMNER. Of course I differ radically from the Senator from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] on the merits of this proposition. He is always willing to interpret the Constitution for slavery. I interpret it for freedom. And yet he is anxious lest the repeal of the two obnoxious sections regulating the coastwise slave trade should leave it open to unrestrained practice. I do not share his anxiety.

Where will the slaves come from? Not from the rebel States, for emancipation is the destined law there. Not from his own State, for emancipation will soon be the law there. But even should slaves be found for this traffic (which, thank God, cannot be the case) I am unwilling that Congress should continue to regulate the ignoble business. Our statute-book should not be defiled by any such license. Remove this license and the Constitution, rightly interpreted, will do the rest.

It is here that the difference arises between the Senator and myself. He proceeds as if those old days still continued when slavery was installed supreme over the Supreme Court, giving immunity to slavery everywhere. The times have changed, and the Supreme Court will yet testify to the change. To me it seems clear that, under the Constitution of the United States, no person can be held as a slave on shipboard within the national jurisdiction, and that the national flag cannot cover a slave. The Senator thinks differ-ently, and relies upon the Supreme Court; but I cannot doubt that this regenerated tribunal will yet speak for freedom as in times past it has spoken for slavery. And I trust, should my life be spared, to see the Senator from Maryland, who bows always to the decisions of that tribunal, recognize gladly the law of freedom thus authoritatively pronounced. Perhaps he will be astonished that he was ever able to interpret the Constitution for slavery. If he is not, others will be.

But my special purpose now has been to remove odious provisions, and I have contented myself with words of repeal, in the hope of presenting the proposition in such a form as to unite the largest number of votes. My own disposition has been to go further, and to add words of positive prohibition. But, at the present moment, I am willing to waive this addition, and content myself with the simple repeal, that our statute-book may no longer be degraded, trusting that the Constitution rightly interpreted will do the rest. And yet the positive prohibition, which the Senator seems to invite or to challenge, would not only purify the statute-book, but effectually guard against the future, so that both Constitution and law would be arrayed against an infamous traffic. Clearly this ought to be done; and if I have not moved it, do not set it down to indifference or inattention, but simply to my desire that the proposition, moved as it is on an appropriation bill, should be limited to the necessity of the occasion. To do less than I propose would be wrong. I should be glad to do more.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am surprised that any Senator should oppose the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts, for we all know that eventually it will be adopted. The objection as to its materiality or proper connection with this measure is but an objection of time. No gentleman can question that the Senator from Massachusetts will eventually carry his proposition. Why, sir, about two weeks ago this body after full discussion deliberately voted that the Constitution imposed a duty upon Congress and the President of the United States; the present incumbent of the presidential chair in his inaugural address said that that duty rested as an oath upon the conscience of every Senator to see that there was an efficient and adequate law for the return of fugitive slaves; and yet under some process, not the force of argument, but through some influence that the uninitiated cannot understand, after the Senate had rejected the proposition in its original form, it was carried through yesterday by a large vote.

Why then contest the matter longer? Let the Senator bring in his propositions. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] made an effort to stay the progress at one point upon the Constitution, and did for a while save the act of 1793 and the signature of George Washington; but the Senator from Ohio finally failed yesterday and it all went by the board. He may for this hour and in this debate, upon a technical point, prevent the adoption of the measure of the Senator from Massachusetts upon this bill; but that it will come in this body I have no doubt. It may as well come now as at any time. Let it be understood that all the positions assumed by our fathers touching the relations of these States are to be wiped out at once, and then I suppose the Senators that accomplish so much will undertake the work of reconstruction or the formation of a new Union!

Sir, I regret to see this. Every law put upon the statute-book by our fathers with a view of carrying out the provisions of the Constitution, or in pursuance of the spirit of the union between the States, I regret to see wiped out; but we have witnessed it, and I think the effort to delay is useless. We may just as well let it come now as at any time. If misfortune comes of it I am not responsible, and there are other Senators who are not responsible. I believe this Union is to be restored upon the Constitution, if it is ever restored, and I do not believe there is wisdom or patriotism or virtue enough now to make a new Union, and if we do not come back again upon the old Union substantially and upon the basis of the Constitution I do not hope for a new Union.

Mr. President, I am not satisfied that the true friends of the Union are the men who are breaking all the bonds that our fathers made to hold the States together. One ligament after another gives way in the presence of the sentiment of the hour; and yet Senators who will adopt these measures call themselves specially Union men, and upon some occasions doubt the fidelity to the Union of Senators who oppose this policy. I claim to be a Union man, because I stand upon the bond of the Union, the covenant that brought these States together; and if I go outside of that covenant I cannot well claim to be a Union man.

I do not suppose this law that the Senator proposes to repeal is important in any respect, but it simply shows the purpose that is to be successful in this body—whether in the House of Representatives or no I cannot say—of breaking down all the institutions that our fathers established based upon the relations that exist between the States and within the States. If in the end, some years from this time, we find a broken Union, some States gone South, some States gone off by the Pacific, some States gone to the West, some perhaps in the East, it will not be charged upon the men who stood day after day and year after year upon the Constitution; but true history will write it down that the responsibility is with that class of politicians who from day to day weaken the bonds that hold these States together.

Sir, at the commencement of this war the North was a unit and the South was divided. Now the North is divided and the South is a unit. Why? Let Senators that ask for success in the war answer the question, why? Because here in this Senate you said to the honest people of the country that this war should be to preserve the Union and the Constitution and not to break down the institutions of any of the States, and the people believed you, and they rallied from the wheat-fields and the corn-fields and shops everywhere to make a glorious army. You did not have to send provost marshals after the young men then, for they rushed forward themselves, and the question was who should get into the first regiment. Now the bloodhounds of war have to be sent upon the track of the young men of the country to bring them into the Army; and why? Because faith has been broken with the people, not by the statesmen with whom it is my pride and pleasure to think and to act, but by Senators and Representatives who have attempted to take advantage of this convulsion in our country to break down the institutions of the States. The country had a right to demand of the Senate, the country had a right to demand of Congress and of the President faith to the Crittenden resolution, the highest faith, because you asked the people for their money, you asked them for their blood, and you said it should be upon that proposition. I put it to the honor of any Senator, has it been upon that proposition? Has not every possible opportunity been taken advantage of to strike at the peculiar institution of one section of the country? I have never considered, as a public man, the question of slavery in a moral aspect. Our fathers have agreed to it; they wrote it down in the Constitution that it should be respected and protected in certain regards; and as they have covenanted in respect to it, so I have looked to it. To stand upon that covenant and agreement I felt to be my highest duty as a citizen, and especially when I took an oath to respect the Constitution that they made.

Sir, I did not intend to discuss this question, but rose merely to make these suggestions. I hope to see this Union restored; I hope to see it restored with the Constitution preserved; but I say to Senators that I have no hope of the Union that will bring us greatness or prosperity outside of the compact that our fathers made. Is there any Senator here willing to say in his place that the virtue and intelligence of this day are superior to the virtue and intelligence of the revolutionary day? I presume not. Is the public mind now in the proper condition to make a new Government, to bring these States together again? Sir, our only hope is to go back again upon the old Constitution—the Union as it was, the Constitution as it is. Because I believe that is the only hope of our country, I oppose all propositions like that presented by the Senator from Massachusetts. They do no practical good, but every such measure as that says to the Union men of the South, "You cannot rely upon the North."

The southern men were encouraged to secede upon the argument presented by southern demagogues or statesmen, whichever you choose to call them, that the North could not be trusted, that a sectional party controlled the North, and that if they remained with the North in the Government their rights would be trampled under foot. Has any occasion been let slip in the Congress of the United States to make good that assurance of the southern statesman and demagogue? Has not every prediction that they made to the people to fire their minds against the Government been made good by the action of Congress?

Will any man be good enough to state how it is that the cause of the North is strengthened and that of the South weakened by dividing the North and uniting the South? It was a hard thing to conquer this rebellion when it was true, as Mr. Lincoln said in his message of July, 1861, that in all the States of the South, except perhaps in South Carolina, there was a Union majority. We had enough work to do then. Congress even then, with that assurance given it in the President's message, thought fit to call out half a million men and to appropriate $500,000,000 to carry on the war—to carry on the war against a rebellion that did not contain within it one-half of the people of the South—to carry on the war against a divided South, the majority of the South being against the rebel cause. But after that, when you have united the South, what force does it require? The contest of this year shows us. As was suggested so well by the honorable Senator from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] you have so united the people of the South as to bring the women into the field. This is the change that has been brought about within a short three years. I submit to you, sir, was that change brought about by any sentiment of the Democrats of the North when they asked that the Constitution and the Union should stand as our fathers made them with every compact remaining inviolate? You know, every Senator knows, that if we had stood by that assurance the Union party of the South would have been strengthened instead of weakened; the South would have been still further divided instead of being united, and the North would have continued as a solid wall in this war.

But if Senators think they promote the good of the country, if they think they strengthen the arm of the Government by voting down the laws which our fathers established, which our fathers thought but reflected the true relation between the States; if Senators think that this is for the good of the country, of course they will vote for these propositions. I shall do my duty by voting against all such schemes, and hope some time to see the day when there will be a sentiment in this country that will bring us back again to the sentiments of the fathers and the times that we have turned our backs upon.

Mr. SUMNER. I propose to add a few words to the section, so that there shall be even nothing of seeming force in the argument of the Senator from Maryland. I propose to add at the end, "and the coastwise slave trade is prohibited forever;" so that the effect of the amendment will be to repeal the two sections of the statute of 1807 that undertake to regulate the coastwise slave trade, and then there is the general provision that the trade shall be prohibited forever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. COLLAMER. I always regret that I should feel it my personal duty to detain the Senate by any remarks of mine; but occasionally such a point and crisis arises. I desire to make a few remarks about the amendment that is now proposed.

I have nothing to say about the propriety of proposing it at this time. I do not think it calls for any. It is here; the amendment is offered; we must vote for it or vote against it; and inasmuch as I always vote on questions of this kind on their merits, and expect to vote for this on the same ground, I desire briefly to state the reason why I shall so vote.

Mr. President, the clause of the Constitution in relation to the power of Congress to regulate commerce is, I believe, in these words:

"The Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes."

Some have thought that inasmuch as it was couched in the same phraseology the measure of this power was the same in relation to each of these subjects. I think otherwise. I do not believe that Congress has the same power without limitation in relation to regulating commerce between the States that it has in relation to commerce with foreign countries. I do not believe that Congress has power to lay an embargo upon any State. I think Congress has power to lay an embargo upon the whole country as to foreign nations, regulating foreign trade, but I deny that Congress has any power to prohibit by way of embargo, if you please, the trade of any State. I merely mention that as an illustration, a distinct one, I think, showing that there is not the same measure of power existing in the two cases.

In the next place I would observe that this statute which is now proposed to be repealed is an attempt to regulate the slave trade. I forget precisely the term of expression used, but it is called the internal slave trade commercially regulated. It regulates how they may be carried in ships, how they shall make duplicate manifests, &c.; in short, both those sections are an attempt to regulate the commerce and trade in slaves by water. My impression is that Congress has no such power. If Congress can regulate it they can prohibit it. That the Supreme Court very fully decided in the case of the Embargo. If they can prohibit it, they can allow it, license it anywhere and everywhere. I believe it was very fully decided in the Merriman case that when goods were imported under an act of Congress the man importing the goods and paying the duties had the right to sell and dispose of those goods in spite of any law the State could make.

Mr. JOHNSON. In the original package.

Mr. COLLAMER. Well, I take it that is the way negroes are generally sold. [Laughter.] I think they are sold in the original package, if at all.

If it be true that Congress can prohibit the carrying of slaves as articles of commerce from one State to another they can allow it from one State to another, and the State cannot prevent it. I say if they can prohibit or regulate it they can allow it and license it, and no State can prevent it. If they can prohibit the carrying of slaves, if you please, black persons, as articles of commerce in regulating commerce, as these sections of the law of 1807 do, by water to Maryland, they can prohibit the carrying of wheat from Illinois; they can prohibit the carrying of wool from my State, Vermont, down into Massachusetts to be manufactured. I do not grant the existence of any such power.

Again, if they can prohibit it, as I before said, they can license and allow it, and no State can prevent it. Is it true, then, that you can take slaves, if Congress had a mind to allow it, and carry them from Virginia and Massachusetts and sell them in the original package, to be used there and held there, and Massachusetts cannot help it nor prevent it? I deny it utterly. I therefore deny that they can authorize, I deny that they can prohibit it, I deny that they can regulate it; for regulating it, as the Supreme Court says, includes the power to prohibit it altogether or to license it altogether.

What is the great difficulty in regard to it? It is this: they are not articles of commerce; they are not articles of trade and merchandise; they do not go into the category of articles which Congress can legislate about in that way, and in the exercise of that power given in the Constitution to regulate commerce. That is the difficulty that lies at the foot of it all. The moment you grant that Congress may make regulations of commerce which shall cover this subject-matter, that is, blacks, negroes, you grant that they are articles of commerce, which is a position that has been utterly denied from the beginning to the end; it has always been held that they were persons and not things.

But you say to me, inasmuch as the power given in the Constitution to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the States, and with the Indian tribes, is all in the same words, where did Congress get the power to prohibit the foreign slave trade? I think it is perfectly easy to answer that question. The power to regulate commerce, &c., relates to subject-matters of commerce, articles of trade, and merchandise, goods and chattels, but the jurisdiction which the Congress of the United States has over the foreign slave trade, if you please, over persons, comes from entirely a distinct part of the Constitution. The Constitution provides that "the migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the year 1808." I take it, the plain English of that clause is that after 1808 they shall have power to prohibit it. It does directly grant the power. There is, as every lawyer knows, what is called a negative pregnant, than which nothing can be more sure; that to say you shall not do such a thing in such a time is to say you may do it after that time. Every court has decided that over and over again, not about these particular words that I have mentioned, but in relation to every such provision. Congress did exercise the power immediately in 1808; and if that was not a grant of power how came they then to have any right to do that at all? Certainly they were not articles of commerce. They did not come within that clause. Congress did it within that grant of power in relation to the importation of certain persons: "the migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit shall not be prohibited," &c., meaning slaves. There is no doubt of that in any candid mind. There can be no doubt that that meant and intended to mean slaves, and all the legislation subsequently shows it conclusively, and it is an equivocation to try to get rid of it in any other way. These attempts to make it out that in these three or four clauses the Constitution did not use the word "slave," and therefore did not mean slave, is all a quibble, an equivocation, pettifoggery. It is unworthy of any man standing up here seriously. They evidently meant slaves.

But some persons say, "I know they meant slaves, but they did not get it in there." If that man is a lawyer he ought to know enough to know that what was intended to be in a contract and agreed to be in a contract, in law and chancery is in the contract; and further, if it is not there already the chancellor will order it to be put there by reforming the contract, and will enjoin persons from setting up anything to the contrary. Every court of chancery does it. Therefore, as the thing was intended to be in and the persons who framed it thought it was in, it is totally immaterial whether it is in or not; that puts it in, and it is in.

Now, Mr. President, in my judgment, all laws, I do not care when they are attempted to be made, nor when they were made, that undertake to deal with slaves, who are persons under the Constitution and our laws, as articles of merchandise in any form under any regulations of trade whatever, are unconstitutional; and I believe to make a law now to prohibit the carrying of slaves from one State to another for sale is totally unauthorized. You might as well undertake to prohibit the carrying of any kind of property from one State to another; but more particularly is it bad because it undertakes, under the power to regulate commerce, to deal with slaves as articles of commerce, trade, merchandise, chattels, which they are not. Therefore, inasmuch as the sections of the law to which our attention is now called and which it is proposed to repeal are of that character and attempt to deal with the subject as of that character, I say repeal them.

Mr. JOHNSON. Perhaps there is no statesman or jurist in the country to whose remarks I listen with more confidence of being instructed than the honorable member from Vermont, and I have not in this instance failed to listen, but without being instructed for once.

Before I proceed very briefly to state the reasons why I differ from the honorable member, one thing is certain, that if he is right he cannot vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts as it now stands. The honorable member evidently seems to suppose that the amendment as it now is before the Senate is to repeal merely the eighth and the ninth sections of the act of March, 1807; but it is not in that situation now. The Senator from Massachusetts has annexed to that amendment a provision forbidding what is called the coastwise slave trade; and if my friend from Vermont is right in supposing that the subject of the carrying of slaves coastwise from State to State is a matter with which Congress has nothing to do, then Congress has no authority to prohibit it. His argument is, that an authority to regulate, if it involves an authority to prohibit, involves the authority to allow; and as he has come to the conclusion that there is no authority in this instance to allow, he must admit, to be consistent with himself, that there is in this case no authority to prohibit; and coming to that conclusion, instead of voting for the amendment proposed by the member from Massachusetts as it is now upon your table, he must vote against it.

Mr. President, it is not the first time I have heard my friend announce the opinion—it is the first time I have heard him attempt to support it by anything like a detailed argument—that under the commercial power Congress had no authority to regulate or to prohibit the foreign slave trade, and the ground upon which he has stated it in conversation with me and has now stated it to the Senate is, that the power over the foreign slave trade which Congress has is a power derived from that clause in the Constitution which takes from Congress the power to prohibit the foreign slave trade at any time prior to 1808. The honorable member has stated as a rule of interpretation with which every lawyer is familiar that a prohibition of that description contains what is called a negative pregnant, and that it carries with it therefore the authority, after the time limited, to do what is prohibited until the time limited shall have elapsed. That I admit; but he insists that because the Constitution says the migration or importation of certain persons, which he concedes very fairly and very candidly, and every lawyer concedes, to mean slaves—I say every lawyer that I have heard speak upon the subject, unless my friend from Massachusetts claims to be a lawyer after having been out of practice, I believe, more years than I should care to mention.

Mr. SUMNER. I make no claim of the kind.

Mr. JOHNSON. No.

Mr. SUMNER. I yield everything of that sort to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is nothing in that which the honorable Senator would like to have, because there is everything in it inconsistent with the principles which he avows. But if my friend from Vermont is right that Congress has no authority at all over the subject of what has been termed the foreign slave trade except what is to be implied in the denial to Congress of a power to interfere with it before 1808, then it would follow, as I think, and I submit it to my friend from Vermont, that when 1808 arrived Congress had no authority to do anything else but prohibit it. That is true; but then it would follow—a consequence which I think the honorable member from Vermont has not clearly seen—that if Congress after 1808 had not prohibited the slave trade it might have been carried on. I suppose nobody will doubt that. If carried on what would it have been? Commerce between foreign nations and the United States.

The honorable member supposes—there is nothing in the Constitution which shows it—that slaves are not articles of commerce at all. If he be correct in that statement, then if Congress had passed no act after 1808 they could not have been imported; but I do not think he will come to that conclusion.

Mr. COLLAMER. Not under the word "migration."

Mr. JOHNSON. But under the power, whatever it is. He would not have come to that conclusion, and if not, why not? Only because in the view of the Constitution in relation to this particular trade slaves are subjects of trade over which Congress has control, either because of the authority with which they are vested by the clause to which the honorable member has referred, or by the other clause which gives to them the power of regulating commerce as between foreign States and the United States.

If I am right, therefore, (and with all the respect that I entertain for the better judgment in almost everything, and the better judgment which I recognize as existing in almost everything relating to legal questions of the honorable member from Vermont,) it was because of the legislation of Congress after 1808 that the importation of slaves into this country was prohibited, and if you repeal that statute to-day they may be imported again as merchandise, as subjects of trade. I submit further to my friend from Vermont that the very clause upon which he relies as showing that Congress has no such power as has been claimed for it was inserted evidently because the Convention believed that in the absence of such a clause they would have had the power. Why insert it? What was the state of things at the time the clause was inserted and adopted? Slaves were being imported into every State in the Union where slavery existed; the vessels from almost every port in what are called the free States and what were the free States, were engaged in that trade; and the clause was inserted at the instance of southern men, and especially the representatives in the Convention from Georgia, to deny to Congress the right to regulate the trade or to prohibit it from the adoption of the Constitution to the expiration of the period limited, 1808. But why put it in, I repeat? Only because—and if my friend will consult the debates of the Convention he will find that I am right in my recollection—only because it was the opinion of the Convention, of every member of the body, that Congress would have had the authority to prohibit it before 1808, by virtue of the power conferred upon them to regulate commerce with foreign nations.

But I am not to rest alone upon my own view of the Constitution of the United States in this particular. The Supreme Court of the United States, in every instance in which the question has been presented, and the commentators upon the Constitution, and particularly that commentator, himself, for so many years, to the honor of the country and to his own honor, a member of that bench, maintained the existence of the power under the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations. There is a view, however, of the power, supposed to be identical, conferred upon Congress to regulate commerce as between the States, taken by the Supreme Court, to which I was never able to give my assent, although bowing to it as the decision of the ultimate tribunal upon all such questions. I have always thought that as the powers to regulate commerce between foreign nations and between the several States were conferred upon Congress in precisely the same words, Congress could do in relation to the slave trade what Congress by the court was decided to be competent to do in relation to the foreign slave trade; but the court have taken a different view.

My friend says that slaves, persons, are not the subjects of trade, and besides that it never was intended by the clause to which I am now referring to put it in the power of Congress to regulate the trade between the States so far as relates to the articles which may be the subject of the trade. He says that Congress has no authority to prohibit the citizens of Illinois or the citizens of any other State from bringing from the State of Illinois into any of the other States of the Union the cereals which that State may grow; in other words, that the power to regulate commerce conferred upon Congress in relation to the several States of the Union is not the same power with that conferred upon Congress in relation to foreign States, because under the latter it has been held that Congress may prohibit altogether.

The honorable member I think is mistaken in coming to that conclusion. That view was taken by nearly all the men of legal reputation at the North, among whom towered high Webster. The existence of the embargo in Mr. Jefferson's time excited the northern mind almost into a condition of political frenzy. They assailed the constitutionality of that legislation on the very ground that instead of being a regulation of commerce it was a prohibition, and that it was an absurdity in terms to say that a power which was evidently given in order to encourage by regulating foreign commerce, carried with it a power to prohibit foreign commerce. But my friend will find if he looks to the decisions of the Supreme Court in which that question was presented and where the power was held to exist, that the Supreme Court put it mainly upon the ground of the war power; that if not a regulation of commerce, as it was not because it was to say that commerce should not be carried on, it was what Congress had the authority to do, they being the exclusive judges at the time in which it was done, when we were upon the eve apparently of a war with England, and as a measure to avoid the last resort of hostilities, and Congress with a view to bring these anticipated belligerents to their senses had a right to say that all commercial intercourse between themselves and us should be put an end to.

But that is not the question here. Slaves are recognized as property in the slave States. Everybody will admit that; and until lately it never has been questioned that it was a property with which Congress could not interfere. Then, being recognized as property, it constituted, so far as the business of the particular State was concerned, a subject of trade, and being a subject of trade it was a matter according to my view, as I stated just now, with which Congress could interfere by regulating, and Congress have regulated. Before 1808, when the power was constitutionally vested in Congress for the first time, by legislation, to prohibit the foreign slave trade, Congress passed laws regulating and prohibiting the introduction of slaves into the Territories. How did they do it? Under what authority? They prohibited domestic slaves being carried into the Territories. How was it done? Not done under the clause to which my friend adverts, which takes from Congress the authority to interfere until 1808, but done under the power to regulate commerce between the States and foreign nations and the Territories of the United States. For the soul of me, if the authority in Congress to interfere at all is to be found in the clause referred to by my friend from Vermont, as that clause has no reference to the domestic slave trade, to any trade in slaves carried on within the territorial limits of the United States. I cannot see how Congress had the authority to prohibit slaves being carried into the Territories, or to regulate the trade if they permitted them to be so carried.

I have felt it due, Mr. President, to the opinions which I entertain, with the great respect in which I ever hold the opinions of the honorable member from Vermont, to state thus briefly the reasons on which I am compelled to differ from him. But, sir, at last we are brought back to the question, why should this measure be put upon this bill? We have seen the effect already. The bill would have passed an hour ago in this body but for it. How long will it be before we pass it if this amendment is to be persevered in? And after we have passed it, if we shall, and it goes back to the House of Representatives, how long do you suppose it will be there before it is finally disposed of? Suppose they dispose of it differently from us by rejecting the amendment, then the bill comes back here and the honorable member from Massachusetts will at once be found upon his feet again trying once more to strike that last blow at slavery—which I thought by the by, he said the other night he had done when he got the fugitive slave law repealed—which he is so very anxious to strike that he may stand in that respect as he is entitled to stand, not only fair in the opinion of his particular constituents, but fair in the estimation of the world where slavery is held in so much detestation.

Mr. COLLAMER. Mr. President—

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator to give way to a motion to adjourn. I remained here until past twelve o'clock last night and do not feel able to stay here any longer to-night, and as it is evident that we are to have a long discussion, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. GRIMES. Let me first take up the resolution to meet at eleven o'clock.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope not. There are committee meetings to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY.) Is the motion to adjourn withdrawn?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; and with the consent of the Senate—I wish to consult their wishes—I move that on and after Monday next the daily hour of meeting shall be eleven o'clock, a. m.

Mr. SUMNER. I think we had better determine that matter to-morrow, not to-night. A committee of which I am a member meets on Monday.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let that committee do as the Committee on Finance have done for months, meet at half past nine o'clock, and that will give them an hour and a half before eleven o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WADE. I move to take up the resolution I offered a few days ago limiting debate.

Mr. COLLAMER. I gave way to a motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. WADE] is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. WADE. I cannot yield. I want that resolution taken up.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I understand that the Senator from Vermont was on the floor about to speak, and gave way for a motion to adjourn. The Senator from Ohio was not in his place then, and did not see what occurred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Ohio can be entertained only by unanimous consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON and Mr. HENDRICKS objected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I renew the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 24, 1864.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. Mr. FERRIS.

On motion of Mr. FENTON the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the question of privilege pending when the House adjourned yesterday, being the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON,] that the House insist upon its amendments to the bill of the Senate (No. 138) in relation to landlords and tenants in the District of Columbia, disagreed to by the Senate, and agree to the committee of conference asked for by the Senate on said disagreeing vote.

Mr. WILSON. Upon that motion I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote last taken; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER subsequently appointed Mr. WILSON, Mr. DAVIS of New York, and Mr. WHEELER, as such committee on the part of the House.

SUPREME COURT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, by unanimous consent, reported back with amendments an act (S. No. 296) in relation to the fees and emoluments of the marshal, attorney, and clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The first amendment reported by the committee was to insert in line seventeen of section one the words "more than" after the word "Interior;" so that the clause will read, "subject to appeal to the Secretary of the Interior, more than six thousand dollars per annum."

The amendment was agreed to.

The second amendment reported by the committee was to strike out "six," in the seventeenth line, and insert "four;" so that the clause will read, "the sum of $4,000 per annum."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FENTON moved to amend by adding to section two the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall apply to the provisions of sections eleven and twelve of the act to prevent and punish frauds upon the revenue, approved March 3, 1863.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM B. MATCHETT.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the regular order of business?

The SPEAKER. It is the consideration of private bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. Under that order I suppose the Committee of Claims will be called?

The SPEAKER. On the last call of committees for private bills the Committee of Claims had the floor for two days, and their right to report under the call was thereby exhausted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask permission to make a brief statement. On the 20th of this month the House passed a joint resolution furnishing relief to the chaplain of a New York regiment. Since its passage, however, it has been found that it does not accomplish the purpose for which it was passed. I now hold in my hand a joint resolution declaratory of the construction of that legislation. It is a very meritorious claim, and I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. ORTH. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a mere explanatory resolution. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. ORTH. I object.

WISCONSIN FIVE PER CENT. FUND.

Mr. HALE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report back from the Committee of Claims Senate joint resolution No. 8, for the relief of the State of Wisconsin.

The joint resolution was read at length.

Mr. WILSON. I object to that bill.

HUDSON BAY CLAIMS.

Mr. ORTH, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, by unanimous consent, reported back Senate bill No. 187, to carry into effect the treaty between the United States and her Britannic Majesty for the final settlement of the claims of the Hudson's Bay and Puget Sound Agricultural Companies.

The bill was read at length. It confers upon the President of the United States the power, by and with the consent of the Senate, to appoint a commissioner to act conjointly with the commissioner appointed by her Britannic Majesty's Government in determining the claims of the Hudson's Bay Company and of the Puget Sound Agricultural Company against the Government of the United States under the treaty of July, 1863, with authority on the part of the commissioner to appoint a clerk at a compensation of eight dollars a day. It fixes the compensation of the commissioner at $5,000 in full for his services and personal expenses, and appropriates the sums necessary to pay such compensation, the share of the contingent expenses of the commission on the part of the United States, and of the compensation of the umpire chosen under the convention. It further authorizes the commissioner on the part of the United States, in conjunction with the commissioner on the part of Great Britain, to make all needful rules and regulations for conducting the business of the commission; such rules and regulations not contravening the Constitution of the United States, the provisions of this act, or the stipulations of the treaty. It also authorizes the Secretary of State to transmit to the said commission such papers or records relating to the business of the commission as he may deem proper or as may be called for by the commissioner; and requires at the close of the commission, and of the duties of the umpire, that all the records, documents, and all other papers which may have been presented on behalf of the United States shall be returned to the Department of State.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

W. B. MATCHETT.

Mr. HOLMAN. I again ask the consent of the House to report a joint resolution declaratory of the construction of the joint resolution passed by this Congress for the relief of W. B. Matchett.

There was no objection, and the joint resolution was reported and read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read in full. It construes the joint resolution on the same subject heretofore passed to require the Paymaster General of the United States Army to adjust the accounts of W. B. Matchett for the time the regiment to which he was attached was in service.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TRANSFERS IN NEW YORK ASSAY OFFICE.

Mr. KASSON, by unanimous consent, reported from the committee on a uniform system of coinage, weights, and measures a bill to facilitate the repayment of depositors at the assay office in New York; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length. It provides, for the purpose of speedy payment to depositors, that the provisions of the act of May 23, 1850, allowing a bullion fund to be retained at the Mint and branch mints of the United States, be extended to the United States assay office in the city of New York.

Mr. KASSON. I desire that a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury on this subject may be read.

The letter was read, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 18, 1864.

SIR: Much complaint exists on the part of depositors of bullion at the New York assay office at the delay to which they are subjected before receiving returns for their deposits in coin. Under the existing laws this delay appears to be unavoidable, inasmuch as depositors are obliged to wait for their bullion to be refined at the assay office for its transmission to the Mint at Philadelphia, its coinage there, and its return to the assay office, before the certificates issued to them upon its receipt are redeemable in coin; whereas, at the Mint and branch mints, which are allowed a "bullion fund," under the act of May 23, 1850, depositors may receive the value of their bullion in coin as soon as ascertained.

With a view to remedy the existing difficulty and thereby afford the same facilities to depositors at the assay office as are enjoyed by those who deposit at the Mint and branch mints, I transmit herewith the draft of a bill providing that the act of May 23, 1850, shall apply to the assay office in question as well as to the Mint and its branches.

The allowance of such a fund as is proposed to the assay office will not at any time incommode the Treasury, inasmuch as the existing law permits the Secretary of the Treasury to withdraw such fund from the Mint and branches whenever occasion may require. I trust the matter may be presented for the early attention of Congress.

I am, very respectfully, S. P. CHASE,

Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. JOHN A. KASSON, Chairman Committee on Coinage, House of Representatives.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate was received, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate have passed without amendment House bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

An act (No. 519) repealing certain provisions of law concerning seamen on board public and private vessels of the United States;

An act (No. 539) to incorporate the Young Men's Christian Association of the city of Washington;

An act (No. 512) to repeal the fugitive slave act of 1850, and all acts and parts of acts for the rendition of fugitive slaves;

An act (No. 551) to incorporate the Colored Catholic Benevolent Society; and Joint resolution (No. 109) correcting a clerical error in the award of the emancipation commissioners.

Also, that the Senate have passed a bill (No. 286) to prohibit the discharge of persons from liability to military duty by reason of the payment of money, and for other purposes; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

WISCONSIN DISTRICT COURT.

Mr. WILSON, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate bill No. 55, in reference to the circuit court in and for the district of Wisconsin, and for other purposes, reported that the committee had met and had agreed to recommend to their respective Houses that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Provided, That all executions, processes, or orders issued from the district court of any district in this act mentioned, in cases transferred to the circuit court and in part executed, shall be regarded as having been issued from the circuit court to which each particular case is transferred, and shall be returned thereto; and no writ of execution or other final process or power exercised or proceeding had in accordance with law to enforce any judgment or decree shall be affected by reason of the transfer directed by the act.

The report was adopted.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. NOBLE. I move that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 203.

Mr. SPALDING. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the call of committees for reports of a private character, beginning with the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

INSANE ASYLUM GROUNDS.

Mr. PATTERSON, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, introduced a joint resolution to improve the grounds of the United States insane asylum; which received its several readings, and was passed.

Mr. PATTERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAND LOCATIONS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. THAYER, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, House bill No. 435, concerning certain locations of lands in the State of Missouri.

The bill was read. It relinquishes all of the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all of the lands within the respective boundaries of certain described locations in township forty-five north, of the base line, in range seven east, of the fifth principal meridian line, in the State of Missouri, made by virtue of certificates issued under the act for the relief of the inhabitants of the late county of New Madrid, in the Missouri Territory, who suffered by earthquakes, approved February 17, 1815; provided, nothing contained in the act shall, directly or indirectly, comprehend, include, extend to, grant, relinquish, or convey, the whole or any part of any lot, tract, piece or parcel of land in said township which has heretofore been confirmed and surveyed by the United States to any person or persons, or to the legal representatives of any person or persons; and provided, that nothing in the act shall in any manner abridge, divest, impair, injure, or prejudice, any adverse right, title, or interest of any person or persons in or to any portion or part of the lots, tracts, pieces or parcels of land which are granted, relinquished, or conveyed by the act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THAYER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM SAWYER AND OTHERS.

Mr. THAYER, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, House bill No. 133, for the relief of William Sawyer and others, of the State of Ohio.

The bill recites that, by the treaty of St. Mary's with the Miami Indians of October 6, 1818, the west half of section No. 26, the east half of section No. 28, and section No. 27, in the county of Anglaize, and State of Ohio, were reserved and granted to Joseph Richardville and Joseph Richardville, jr.; that all of the lands have since been sold in several parcels to divers persons by the United States and by the State of Ohio, under and by virtue of a grant from the United States; and that, by virtue of a judicial sale upon a judgment rendered against Joseph Richardville, jr., survivor and sole heir-at-law of Joseph Richardville, sr., the title granted to Joseph Richardville, sr., and Joseph Richardville, jr., by the treaty, in all of said lands, has become vested in Madison Sweetzer, the purchaser at the sale; and that Madison Sweetzer has established his title to the lands by sundry judgments in ejectment, recovered in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Ohio, against the tenants in possession, holding under titles derived, directly or indirectly, from the United States. It therefore authorizes and requires the Secretary of the Interior to cause the unimproved value of the tracts of land to be ascertained, by the valuation and assessment of a commissioner to be appointed by him for that purpose, and which commissioner shall, before he proceeds to the assessment and valuation of the same, take an oath faithfully and impartially to perform his duties as such commissioner; and that when the Secretary of the Interior shall thus ascertain the unimproved value of the lands he shall report the same to the House of Representatives at the earliest practicable moment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, called for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

"By the treaty of St. Mary's with the Miami Indians, of October 6, 1818, the west half of section twenty-six, the east half of section twenty-eight, and the whole of section twenty-seven, all in township five south, in range four east, of first meridian, in Ohio, and situated in Anglaize county, in that State, were granted by the United States to Joseph Richardville and Joseph Richardville, jr.

"By a paper executed by Joseph Richardville, who was a half-blood Miami Indian, dated August 28, 1827, the said Joseph Richardville undertook, in consideration of the sum of $3,000 and in pursuance of another treaty made October 23, 1826, to recover these lands to the United States. Subsequently the United States and the State of Ohio, under a grant from the United States, at various times sold these lands. A portion of them is still held by the original purchasers, and other portions by persons claiming under the original purchases from the United States. One Madison Sweetzer, of Fort Wayne, Indiana, who was a creditor of Joseph Richardville, jr., having obtained a judgment against him, levied upon a portion of these lands, sold them by due process of law, and bought in his title at that judicial sale. Joseph Richardville, sr., in the mean time had died, and whatever title he had, and which did not pass to the United States by the paper of August 28, 1827, had vested in his son and heir-at-law, the said Joseph Richardville, jr. In the year 1855 said Sweetzer brought actions of ejectment in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Ohio against several of the parties in possession under the title derived from the United States. The said actions were regularly tried and defended, and resulted in verdicts and judgments in favor of the said Madison Sweetzer, the court holding that the papers seized by Joseph Richardville, sr., and purporting to be dated August 28, 1827, passed no title to the United States. Thus his interest had, consequently, upon his decease, passed to his son, the said Joseph Richardville, jr., who thus became the holder of the entire title, and thus the judgment and judicial sale therein made by Sweetzer had vested the whole title in him. By this means honest purchasers from the United States, who paid for their lands, are deprived of them, and are liable to be turned out of their homes, unless some satisfactory arrangement is made with Sweetzer by the Government of the United States. The bill proposes to remedy this injustice by authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to cause the unimproved value of the said tract of land to be ascertained by the valuation and assessment of the commissioner to be appointed by him for that purpose, which commissioner shall be duly sworn faithfully and impartially to perform his duties. When the value of the lands is thus ascertained, the Secretary of the Interior is to report the same to the House of Representatives. When his report shall be made, it is of course contemplated that Congress shall by some future action indemnify Sweetzer in some suitable manner for his relinquishment of his title, and thus relieve the bona fide purchasers from the United States from the injustice which they would otherwise suffer by the failure of the title which they have acquired from the United States. The committee recommend the passage of the bill."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I suggest an amendment by inserting a provision that the amount shall not exceed the minimum price of the public lands.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for that purpose?

Mr. THAYER. I cannot.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he knows the precise amount paid to the Government for those lands.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The phraseology of the bill is peculiar.

Mr. THAYER. The Legislature of the State of Ohio has passed a joint resolution requiring Congress to take this action. The Committee on Private Land Claims has given the matter a full investigation, and is convinced that the passage of the bill is a matter of simple justice, and at all events can do no possible harm. It simply authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain what was the unimproved value of these lands, leaving the whole subject open for the future action of Congress.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It seems to me that the object which the gentleman seeks to attain is not accomplished by the bill. He says that all they desire or expect is a repayment of the amount originally paid, but the bill does not fix it in that way. If the gentleman will look at it carefully he will see that the bill does not carry out his idea. I suggest that he add this proviso:

Provided, That a greater amount shall not be allowed than what the Government received.

Mr. THAYER. The bill only proposes that the unimproved value of this tract of land shall be ascertained by the assessment and valuation of a commission, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior. I submit to the gentleman from Illinois that it will be time enough to restrain any improper action when a bill is reported for the compensation of the parties.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman will not object to this proviso:

Provided, That in no event shall the Government be liable to pay a greater amount than they received for said lands.

Mr. THAYER. I am afraid my bill will not be of much use if that amendment is incorporated in it. At any rate, I have no right to accept it. I hope the bill will be allowed to pass in its present shape, because no possible injury can accrue to the Government. I must therefore decline to yield to the gentleman to offer the amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman need not accept the amendment, but he can allow me to offer it, and the House to take a vote upon it.

Mr. THAYER. I do not think I should be justified in doing so.
